Creating Young Customers

IN a section devoted to the "Junior Shows," meaning special programs and presentations for children, Rita C. McGoldrick in this issue of MOTION PICTURE HERALD presents an assembly of material of unusual value to showmen in particular and in general to the whole industry. In something akin to a national survey she discovers a wide realization among aggressive exhibitors of the importance of serving this special audience, and an eagerness for service and information of value.

"Junior Shows," properly conducted, have several values considerably beyond the important one of direct revenue. Service of the younger audience helps the theatre and the industry by the creation and education of customers for the motion picture. It brings the adults of the family to the theatre for other shows. And, most significantly, the special attention to the junior audience and careful selection of material presented tends to reduce and eliminate censorship agitations. When the youngsters get picture fare which meets the approval of fathers and mothers, the militant clubs and reform organizations have fewer complaints and pass fewer resolutions.

A considerable proportion of censorship agitation has in the past come as an indirect expression of an unsatisfied demand.

When White is a Color

SOME of these days as likely as not the masters of fashion will discover for the public a new color, "Pickford Grey," which now promises to be a rule-enforced standard for Hollywood studios. As many laymen now know, the white of linens, of women's dresses and the broad bosoms of men's dress wear, because of halation creates glare on the screen. The studios have tried everything from pink to coffee stain to eliminate halation. Now the photographic department of Paramount's West Coast studio has completed a series of researches, reported by Mr. Virgil Miller in the American Cinematographer, which reveals a pearly tint called "Pickford Grey" as the most acceptable workable standard. An endeavor to make it the standard for the industry is under way among cameramen.

"The Guardsman" on Main Street

ON a snappy and otherwise cheerful September morning, we pause to get annoyed at certain observations by the volatile Mr. Maurice Kann in MOTION PICTURE DAILY anent M-G-M's "The Guardsman" as observed at its recent New York opening. He seems to feel that the picture is too good to be of any use outside the range of the Theatre Guild's areas of influence and those regions where the fame of Alfred Lunt and Lynne Fontanne is established. ". . . along the Main Streets," he observes, "we have very serious doubts." He mentions, with all the ardor of a film salesman looking for a handy selling handle, the value of "a definitely established draw like Norma Shearer," etc.

Now if the art of the motion picture is not to be encouraged in such able products as "The Guardsman" with such able players as Lunt and Fontanne, one may wonder from where progress is to come. If Main Street does not care for "The Guardsman" it will be because some very inadequate selling is done.

The unhappy motion picture will be thrice accursed if it is to be limited to the provincial personnel of the artistically incestuous cliques of Movieland. Mr. Kann's point of view as a critic and a box office seer is in this instance obviously fenced about by the all too common sense of limitation which assumes that the motion picture is an independent art and industry ordained to exist in a self-complacent goldfish bowl. There was a time, as we recall it, that Main Street did not know about John Barrymore, a time when "Trader Horn" was just a book enjoyed by highbrow persons who read books, a time when the Garbo was an unknown alien. If Lunt and Fontanne in a consummate performance are not sold to the motion picture public of these United States at the box office, then the box office ought to be indicted.

The Irishman's Blanket

SOME of our big eleemosynary movements suggested for relief of unemployment would be deliciously funny if they were not concerned with so grave a matter. There is, for instance, that delightful notion advanced by Mr. Herbert J. Yates of Consolidated and other enterprises, who would have the industry cut salaries and wages 10 per cent and then apply that to the payment of additional employees. In other words, more jobs and more work at no payroll increase. Once upon a time, so folktale goes, there was an Irishman who had trouble keeping his feet warm at night, so he cut a foot off the top of his blanket and sewed it on at the bottom.

The Trade Press and Failure

AN investigation of failures, mergers and discontinuances of businesses, for the eighteen months ending July 1, just made public by the American Trade Council, shows that in the 12,003 cases examined 11,297 were concerns which did not promote and advertise their activities in their special trade publications or directories. That was probably not all that was wrong with this 93.968 per cent of the failures, but it clearly was an indicative part of it. Anemia begins at home.

WHAT THE PRESS SAYS

The MICHIGAN CATHOLIC, the official organ of the diocese of DETROIT, edited by Anthony J. Beck, M.A., which is at pains to keep informed about motion pictures, editorially remarks, under a headline: "Will Censorship Come," thus:

Our generous friend, The Baltimore Catholic Review, invites us to join it in a fight against indecent motion pictures. We have been in this battle from the beginning and have frequently denounced vicious movies. Besides this negative action, we have worked positively by urging movie fans to patronize the better pictures and to demand enforcement of the code which was announced more than a year ago by film magnates and which had the approval of ecclesiastical authorities.

Our Baltimore friend says we are doomed to disappointment in our dwindling hope that the code will be applied. Even if this prediction becomes true, we have helped to eliminate some filthy photoplays at their source as well as considerable salacious advertising. We have advocated a constructive policy which, we feel, is more practical than mere condemnation.

The Review reminds us that several national Catholic organizations have made "known their stand against motion pictures that are destructive to the morals of the people." Has this had any appreciable effect on the producers, the exhibitors and the public? If these organizations will induce all their members to avoid objectionable movies and get others to do likewise, their protest may be effective. For years Catholics and Protestants have denounced vicious movies. But our Baltimore contemporary stated a few months ago that conditions were growtive way to curb vicious films.

The one thing left seems to be government censorship, which is fraught with dangers of graft, paternalism, etc. Voluntary censorship, applied to new movies and enforced by public opinion, would be the simplest and most effective way to curb vicious films. We have never had any illusions as to difficulties on that score.

The NEWS-HERALD of BOULDER in Colorado writes in editorial recognition of the fact that the only real obligation of the theatrical motion picture is to be entertainment. This is obvious enough, but has been insufficiently recognized by the press and various professional vociferators. The editorial remarks:

. . . The movies are performing an educative service through their newsreels that are filmed wherever there are important happenings in the world. There are films which inspire one with the desire to read more history and more literature. There are films which combine both clean entertainment and the teaching of a sound moral. And there are also films which have no true entertaining value.

. . . Fundamentally, so we agree that movies at the theatres are for entertainment instead of educative purposes. Just as motion picture producers should have clean and attractive entertainment as their everlasting ideal, so should others realize that a theatre is not a school or a church.

THE ATLANTA CONSTITUTION editorially tends to the opinion that Hollywood is not quite in step with the United States and its people. It also touches on certain aspects of European influence, worth a thought, thus:

There are abundant signs that what will be gobbled with salacious greed on Broadway is much below the mental taste and moral psychology of the millions of less cosmopolitan and less sex-obsessed Americans who live outside the atmosphere of the great white way in Manhattan.

Much of the depraved character recently given to the films projected upon the public is due without doubt to the employment in Hollywood studios of directors imported from European countries where criminal and sexual exploits have always been more tolerated.

The JOURNAL-POST of KANSAS CITY, with an urbane neutrality, admits there are some aspects of the motion picture industry which are not exactly the public's business, among them the salary of Constance Bennett:

Charges that the movie industry is run on an extravagant basis have long been made. Bankers protested at the beginning of the depression and forced retrenchment. Now the independent distributors are taking a hand as a result of the 10 per cent raise in the price of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer films. They are demanding that the producers lower costs instead of boosting prices.

The controversy centers around Constance Bennett, a star reputedly paid $30,000 a week. The independent theatre owners say that such a salary is outrageous. Declaring that the industry is facing a crisis, they have adopted the slogan, "Deflate Hollywood."

It is a dispute in which the public is interested, but not vitally so. After all, the movies are not a necessity. Retribution for too-high prices will be sure and swift, because attendance will fall off in direct proportion to excessive charges, especially in times such as these.

As for Miss Bennett's salary, the only basis upon which to determine what it should be is the amounts she earns for her employers. If she brings money into the box office in such quantities that the producer can make a good profit over and above her salary, then she is worth $30,000 a week.

The REPUBLICAN of SPRINGFIELD, Massachusetts, is interested in the decentralized development of circuit theatre administration and sees in it prospect that entertainment will thereby be better attuned to its public:

. . . patrons of the pictures may have reason to hope that the more flexible system now to be put into practice by one of the largest producing and exhibiting concerns may result in pictures better suiting public taste in a particular region. It has been one of the weaknesses of the chain system that theatre managers have been compelled to use whatever pictures were made by the controlling producer. This restriction will be removed, and public taste will be paramount in the selection of pictures. . . . The producers have sometimes spent more energy in trying to unload their failures on the local theatres than in trying to discover what patrons prefer when they have a free choice. . . . The industry has had its delusions of grandeur, and its adviser, Mr. Hays, has often been called a "czar," but the field of popular entertainment is in reality highly democratic, and the public for some time has shown that it wants better fare than it has been getting.

EXHIBITORS GAINING GROUND OVER UNIONS IN BATTLE ON CONTRACTS

The Right to Dream

THE art of the motion picture stands somewhat in the place of a pretty young girl enslaved in the kitchen down on the farm, driven by a bitter father with the stains of sin and tobacco in his whiskers and a grimy brow furrowed with worry about the mortgage.

The lovely young art of the motion picture is hard ridden by financial responsibilities and the prejudices of her masters.

Someway it has come about that the motion picture has lost utterly that essence of the heritage of all the arts, the right to dream, the right to do things because they have promise, because they have beauty, because they express a faith, a hope or a love of humanity.

The hard bitten, world worn, tired men who are found to be the masters of the art in today's state of screen evolution have their job to do as they see it, but that job has made a drudge and a slave of that art to which a fair destiny might have promised glamour. One may fear that striving so to get the money all the glamour is squeezed out, and it may be that, yielding in youth, weakness and weariness, the art may, like human sisters, sometimes go wrong. All too easily, of course, she is forgiven for that, if only she comes home with the money to raise the mortgage. However, too often in song and story and fact, if she who goes wrong does come home, it is in sack cloth and ashes.

TERRY RAMSAYE.

Electric Shifts Sales Department

The industrial sales department of the Westinghouse Electric and Manufacturing Company has been reorganized under the direction of O. F. Stroman, industrial sales manager, to more effectively serve the electrical requirements of all industries.

The reorganized department is composed of units grouped according to main classifications of industry. Two assistant sales managers and 14 divisional managers have been appointed; the new arrangement also providing for the grouping of specialized engineers with every sales division. Bernard Lester and C. B. Stainback have been appointed assistant sales managers.

Friday Adopted as Opening Day in Numerous Key Spots

Friday opening date, beginning with the new Fall show season, has been widely adopted by theatres in situations which heretofore started their show week on Saturday or Monday.

Majority of de luxe downtown runs in key centers have been using Friday opening over a lengthy period. Second-runs and neighborhoods are now finding advisable the switch to a day earlier.

Two MPTO Meetings Scheduled

The MPTO of Nebraska and the Allied Theatre Owners of Wisconsin will hold their annual conventions on October 13, 14. The first will be in Omaha and the Allied meeting in Milwaukee. Al Steffes and Abram F. Myers are expected to attend the Milwaukee session.

Urges Writers Be Subsidized

Frank Gilmore, president of the Actors' Equity Association, will shortly present to the League of New York Theatres a plan for subsidizing promising new playwrights to free them from financial worry for a period of one to three years while at work.

The plan, which is understood to have been presented unsuccessfully several times before by Gilmore, provides for a fund contributed by the producers and allotted according to the needs of the writers.

Eight Offers Are Made For British Broadhead Circuit

Eight offers have been made in London for the Broadhead circuit of British theatres, from London, the North of England and the United States. Harry Buxton is known to be one of the bidders.

Percy Broadhead has said the offers are in the hands of the trustees of the will of his late father and that nothing can be done until probate is granted.

South Africa Adds Amusement Tax to Heavy Import Duties

The South African government has introduced a heavy amusement tax in addition to the recently increased duty of 3 pence per foot on imported sound films.

The added burden is seen as dealing a heavy blow to the industry there, and will react severely against British films, since the tax gives them no preference.

14 Towns Go "One Man" as 11 Others Fight For It

Theatres in 40 Towns Seek Lower Wage Scale, M. P. HERALD Investigation Shows

Theatre owners in 28 important towns, widely scattered throughout the country, still are having difficulty in adjusting new contractual agreements with union projectionists, stage hands or musicians.

One month following the Labor Day climax of one of the most far-reaching and sensational battles ever staged between theatre and union labor finds the situation clarified in 42 other important towns, to the point of uninterrupted theatre operation, although in numerous towns where new agreements now exist, union help can not be said to be in complete harmony with the contracts just signed. And this because of lower wage scales and reduced staffs in booth, orchestrapit and backstage.

Generally, the exhibitor has been victorious in his fight with labor to hold down mounting theatre costs. The country's economic condition has, for the first time on record, stemmed the tide of salary advances, a yearly occurance with union help, particularly with projectionists. Increases were not asked for as in other years, and operators obtained them at only four towns, in two of which previous agreements stipulated slight increases.

In investigating the labor situation throughout the country, MOTION PICTURE HERALD checked conditions at numerous locations, where, it was revealed, the one-man to a booth movement had gained widespread attention and is the cause of much concern in union ranks, local and national. The bitter battle for its adoption continues, with exhibitors having already entered into union agreement for its usage at 14 towns.

In many spots, the one man problem was fought heatedly and still remains in unsettled condition at 11 cities.

In 18 cities, projectionists were completely victorious in routing the one-man booth, although musicians lost much ground in reduced staffs and loss of overtime payments and extras which were made when musicians played pit and stage shows.

Fights were waged in 40 towns over lowered wage scales, which were finally adopted at 13 spots and continue unsettled at 11.

Salaries remain as of the old basis in only 14 towns; that is, excluding possible victories for union help in the remaining 11 spots which still are to be adjusted.

New independent "unions," with local charters, including Movie Projectionists of Amer. and Sound Projectionists sprang up in at least three territories as regular I. A. T. S. E. affiliations were locked out of theatres upon failure to accede to exhibitors' demands, which this year were

Nationwide 16 mm. Exchange Planned

Plans for the establishment of 150 exchanges in principal cities throughout the country for the distribution of 16 mm. film are now under way, according to Rudolf Mayer, president of International 16 MM. Pictures, Inc., who announced that the first 10 exchanges would be in operation by October 25. The first three exchanges will be established in Boston, New York and Philadelphia, it was said.

Financing of the exchanges will be done by prominent equipment manufacturers. The initial distribution centers, according to report, will be sponsored by Peko, Inc., Chicago; Sprague Electrical Specialties Corp., North Adams, Mass.; Sparks-Withington, Jackson, Michigan; Pacent Electric Co., and International Projector Corporation. Numerous other equipment manufacturers have also signified their willingness to participate in the financing of the 16 mm. film exchanges.

The distribution centers will be film exchanges exclusively, manned by experienced film men, according to Mayer.

Florabel Muir and Husband Denny Morrison in New York

Mr. and Mrs. Dennis Morrison, which is to say Florabel Muir and Denny Morrison, are spending the week in New York and mostly on Broadway.

Miss Muir is of course known widely to the readers of Motion Picture Herald as an occasional contributor, and as a columnist of The Hollywood Herald, the West Coast daily journal of Quigley Publications. Incidentally she is the editorial representative and correspondent in Los Angeles territory for the Daily News of New York, with a million and odd readers of her daily contributions to that great newspaper.

Mr. Morrison, formerly with various metropolitan newspapers, and for some years non-fiction editor of Liberty magazine, is now engaged in special writing for various magazines on subjects pertaining to the motion picture and the activities of Hollywood.

The Morrisons have a happy home amid some acres in the San Fernando valley, at the other end of the long-distance telephone line to New York.

Represents Move to End Mess of Litigation

Affects Manufacturing Field To Which Film Industry Contributes Market of Two Millions a Year

Settlement of the RCA-Independent tube fight, ending a three-year battle that has become one major phase of the whole radio-sound patent war, is long-awaited oil for the production machinery in a manufacturing field to which the motion picture industry contributes a yearly market valued at between two and three million dollars.

The settlement, indeed, follows the recent vigorous efforts on the part of the makers of tubes and other radio mechanisms used in sound recording and reproduction, to find a place in the talking picture "sun"—to share in the enormous market for their products that Western Electric and RCA Photophone cut out for themselves in the early days of sound. With these two companies manufacturing the bulk of the equipment and therefore in a position to specify, by basic design or otherwise, the use of their tubes and parts, the independent has begun adapting his product even to Western Electric and Photophone equipment, with such recommendation as lower prices may have to the exhibitor. No one, however, could be found to predict, at this time, what immediate effect the tube settlement of two weeks ago might have on further reduction of tube prices in the open market.

The DeForest tube interests, instigators by their original suit in 1928 of the entire tube controversy, stand out as a principal beneficiary of the settlement, which is the culmination of a long series of court actions against RCA that reached its climax in the refusal last spring of the U. S. Supreme Court to review the decision of the lower court in favor of the independent manufacturers. Of the several millions understood to have been paid by RCA in settlement of the damages claimed under the Clayton antitrust law, DeForest received approximately one million.

An additional arrangement between DeForest and RCA has special interest in the light of the current trend of thought toward the creation of a general radio-sound patent pool, such as the motion picture industry itself contrived in 1907, and like that of the automotive industry. RCA and counsel for the independent tube manufacturers balk at calling the RCA-DeForest arrangement a "pool." It is admitted, however, that the infringement proceedings against each other have been quashed, and that the one has been given rights in the tube patents of the other. Thus a score of principles in the radio-sound tube are claimed by these pioneer interests, have been taken out of litigation and placed at the disposal of each.

The settlement, as a whole, in fact, represents an effort to get rid of the entire

Fox Tabloid Has Unique Success

Fox theatres in the Metropolitan district have used for the last six months a rather unique and apparently highly effective method of general circulation in the individual communities of the weekly programs at the houses. Called the Fox Amusement News, the paper is put out in tabloid form, as a newspaper, being 12 by 17 inches in size.

It is either mailed or delivered weekly, whichever is found more convenient from the distribution standpoint. The idea was that of Harry W. Woodin and was developed by him shortly after he was named general manager of the Fox theatres in Manhattan and the Bronx. The paper covers every neighborhood in Manhattan, Bronx and Long Island which has a Fox theatre. The success of the idea is attested by the fact that the total circulation in the three sections has reached a figure to date of 230,000 copies weekly.

Bell & Howell Offers Free Survey of Medical Pictures

A survey, prepared by William F. Kruse of the educational department of Bell & Howell Company, Chicago, and which will be distributed free, covers "Medical Films and their Sources," with 450 titles listed.

In this total is contained 538 reels of 16mm. safety film. The survey points out the increasing interest of medical bodies as well as lay organizations in medical films, and gives complete information, as to source, availability point, rental or purchase price and the like.

General Theatres Arranges a Renewal Of $10,000,000 Loan

General Theatres Equipment has arranged for a renewal of the $10,000,000 bank loan made to finance purchase of Class A shares of Fox Film in its deal with William Fox. Last renewal was in April.

The company is reported ready to pay interest of more than $9,000,000 due this week on its six per cent convertible debentures and to meet sinking fund requirements of $222,720 in cash or par value of debentures.

Publix and RKO Split Warner Product in Minneapolis Deal

Warner-First National product will be equally split between Publix and RKO first-runs in the twin cities, Minneapolis and St. Paul, during the coming season by a deal just completed.

The negotiations were carried through by Nicky Goldhammer for Warners and Eddie Ruben and Emil Franke for Publix and RKO, respectively. Each circuit will have available 35 pictures of the two companies.

BOX OFFICE CHAMPIONS OF YEAR WILL BE ANNOUNCED BY HERALD

SMPE Fall Meet Opening Monday With Election

The annual fall convention of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers is scheduled to get under way next Monday, October 5, at New Ocean House, Swampscott, Mass. The convention, which will continue through Thursday, October 8, will be called to order at 9:30 A.M., Monday morning, with the address of welcome to be delivered by President K. T. Compton of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology.

The election of officers will also be held at the opening day session, which will be featured by the reading of various papers pertaining to different phases of 16mm. photography and projection and a continuation of the discussion of the inclination of theatre floors, which was introduced at the spring meeting in Hollywood by Ben Schlanger of New York. He will read a paper, "Utilization of Desirable Seating Areas in Relation to Screen Shapes and Sizes and Theatre Floor Inclination."

See End NextWeek In W. B.-Erpi Tilt

Hearings before a board of arbitrators this week were expected to continue into next week in the Warner-Erpi dispute over the former's claim of royalties due under its 1927 working agreement with the Western Electric interests. No definite day would be cited as to when taking of testimony would be completed, but it is expected that the proceedings will keep close to the original schedule of about two weeks.

What progress the hearing is making toward ironing out the four-year squabble could not be learned because of the secrecy pact entered into by the two companies. It was stated that the arbitrators would probably issue the joint statement to be given out, but it is not now known whether this will come when the hearings end, or when the arbitrators' decision is reached.

United Artists Will Close Studios for Three Months

United Artists will shut down its studios at Hollywood for at least three months, starting November 1. Samuel Goldwyn has completed "Arrowsmith" and Gloria Swanson will finish the picture "Tonight or Never" by October 15. Howard Hughes is cutting "Scarface" and is completing an air picture.

Executives and cutters will remain at the studios during the shutdown.

Data Now Being Compiled From Actual Receipts

Best Films of 1930-31 Are Being Determined from Statistics of Theatres in 29 Key Cities

Statisticians of MOTION PICTURE HERALD's staff are now engaged in research and the compilation of data on the fifteen best box office pictures of the year. Their findings, the first report of its kind in the industry, will be presented in an early issue.

This list of the best pictures of the year, and its accompanying analysis, will be entirely from the point of view and interest of the exhibitor, whose business is selling entertainment.

The pictures elected in this presentation will be known as "The Box Office Champions of 1930-31."

Covers Receipts in 29 Cities

This listing, which will cover the period from September 1, 1930, to September 1, 1931, will be derived from the HERALD'S weekly statistical reports of box office receipts from theatres in 29 key cities of the country.

For the first time in the annals of trade journalism in the motion picture industry, a listing of this kind will be based on actual figures, gathered from a comprehensive and detailed week-by-week survey of the nation's representative theatres. It will indicate to exhibitors and producers alike the titles of the pictures, the types of features, with regard to theme, plot structure and the like, and names of players, which have proved their worth from the exhibition standpoint at the nation's box offices in diversified communities, in the terms which are most expressive of the value of a merchandised product, the public's dollar.

Based on Box Office

The compilation will not be based, as have others in the past, upon exhibitor opinions, with relation, necessarily, to their own theatres and communities, or on the votes of various directors, producers or previewers who cannot base their judgments upon anything but personal opinion, however tempered by past experience with previous successful film efforts. Instead the HERALD'S compilation will reflect financial success of those films as attested by the picture-goers of the country.

MOTION PICTURE HERALD, the dominant business publication of the motion picture industry, will present a purely business analysis of the most successful pictures of the past season, only from the standpoint of artistic merit and dramatic beauty as those qualities are reflected in the monetary returns derived from these pictures at the country's theatres.

Native Casts for Universal Foreign Product: Laemmle

Universal's French, German and English pictures will be made with casts chosen in the countries where they are to be produced, Carl Laemmle told THE HOLLYWOOD HERALD on his return to the Coast from a seven weeks visit in Europe.

"We are starting the production of pictures in Germany, France and England to meet the demand of foreign exhibitors who are desirous of getting product made in their own countries," he said. "In Germany we will make ten pictures. Six of them will be in conjunction with the Tobis-Klangfilm company and three with another production company. One picture, 'The Stork Strikes,' a comedy, is already completed and ready for release. At present the studios in Berlin are dubbing the German version of 'Seed'. Incidentally, all dubbing of German and French pictures will be done abroad and not in this country."

As to the pictures to be made in France, the president of Universal said:

"At the Consortium studios we will produce from four to six pictures this season. The first of these will be based upon the story, 'Little Accident,' which was one of our last year's product in this country. The French pictures, as the German, will be made solely by German casts and technicians."

In England, Universal will make a serial, "Heroes of the Law," with six five-reel episodes. This will be released in America as well as in the British Empire. It will be under the supervision of Henry MacRae.

Laemmle said that, with pictures in German, French, Spanish and English, the product could be used universally.

All of Universal's Spanish talkers will be made in Hollywood. "East of Borneo" has been given a dubbing in Spanish and will soon be ready for release. Approximately twelve pictures will be made for the Spanish-speaking market.

"'All Quiet on the Western Front' will be released for public showings in Germany next month," said Laemmle. "At the private showings the picture was well received and we expect it to go over well in that country. In France it was a sensation and the same is true in England. Another picture made by Universal to do big business in England was 'Dracula'."

Business conditions abroad are similar to those in America—no better, no worse, he said. While abroad the film chief spent three weeks in Carlsbad, taking the baths and getting a rest. The other four weeks were spent in England, France and Czech-Slovakia.

Laemmle leaves the Coast for New York in about two weeks for a month's visit.

ALLIED WON'T "TOLERATE" CONTRACT PROSECUTION UNDER COPYRIGHT LAW

Gross of U. S. Firms in Britain Is Cut Down 10 to 14 Per Cent

Effect of Gold Holiday in Canada Negligible, But Australia's Condition Is Held Critical

American motion picture distributors now are operating in England, principal foreign market for our talkers, at a gross loss of from 10 to 14 per cent as a result of the lower money rate which followed abandonment of the gold standard last week.

Although foreign department executives at New York home offices, from which source the percentage estimate emanated, refuse to divulge the actual monetary loss, it is understood that cheaper British money will lower gross rental receipts thousands of dollars weekly.

Motion picture financial experts, immediately after Britain ordered the gold holiday, predicted that total net income of American companies would show a loss of 1¼ per cent, but foreign chiefs discount this, contending that the higher commodity prices which usually follow such a crisis in from six to eight weeks will automatically make up whatever decrease is suffered in the interim. The loss, therefore, is of a temporary nature only, they say.

American companies faced a similar situation in both France and Germany when those countries experienced a severe money crisis.

Not until England stabilizes the pound sterling, which is expected momentarily, will the definite and direct loss and result be accurately gauged. British earnings of American film companies are paid in sterling and are then exchanged into U. S. dollars.

Branding as "false" current reports in the English trade press which state that "latest estimates show that Hollywood's big problem is shrinking foreign markets," executives at several foreign departments in New York entirely discounted the story which estimated that foreign business of American distributors now is less than 20 per cent as compared with between 35 and 45 per cent as of pre-sound days.

The British situation has not keenly affected Canada, but the motion picture business in Australia is generally conceded to be passing through its most critical period. Burdened by terrific overhead, occasioned mainly by sound commitments and high cost of film, independent exhibitors, in nine cases out of ten, are scarcely finding it possible to operate without loss; leading circuits, looked upon two years ago as investments as safe as any offering on Australia's "Wall Street," have now forgotten all about dividends, and having brought operating costs down to the irreducible minimum, are more than satisfied to break even, glad to escape the crushing burden of continued deficits, and hoping, from week to week, that conditions will show a sudden upward trend.

Among the independents, the New South Wales section has been the most active in its efforts to stem the downward slide. Having reduced costs to a point where no further economies could be made, independents in that group considered a suggestion to declare a general closure of all suburban theatres for three nights a week, leaving a maximum running time of three evening performances and one matinee. The idea was to avoid unnecessary opposition, and to endeavor to attract the same amount of patronage in a limited period of time as over a full week. Through lack of accordance among all interested parties, the scheme was negatived.

A deputation was then appointed to approach the N.S.W. Government to ask for legislation giving effect to a moratorium covering rental agreements, under the terms of which exhibitors would not be required to liquidate rentals for film until a term of several months had elapsed. That request is still before the government awaiting decision. If put into practice, its outcome would be distinctly favorable to theatre-owners of N.S.W. although as far as distributors are concerned, it would be distinctly unsatisfactory. They would have to wait for their money, and in turn, the American parent companies would also be kept waiting.

Conspiracy Charge By Momand Upheld In Oklahoma Court

A charge of conspiracy to violate the anti-trust laws of Oklahoma was upheld against several distributors, theatre circuits and individuals in a ruling handed down Thursday by District Judge Hal Johnson. A. B. Momand, president of Momand Theatres, was one of the complainant witnesses. Defendants were Griffith Amusement Company, Paramount Publix, Fox, M-G-M, Columbia, Universal, RKO-Radio, and Roy Heffner, Paramount branch manager at Oklahoma City, and John Terry. The judge held that due to conspiracy and monopoly Momand and other independent exhibitors were unable to obtain sufficient product to operate their theatres. Demurrer to the evidence was overruled and hearing on application for an injunction was set for October 12.

A separate suit by Momand for damages will be heard in federal court in December.

Directorate to Meet Monday at Michigan to Outline Campaign For Copyright Amendment

A definite campaign seeking amendment of the Copyright statutes which will distinguish between violation of contract and violation of Copyright law will be sought at a meeting of the board of directors of Allied States Association to be held in conjunction with the annual three-day meeting of Allied Theatre Owners of Michigan, at Mt. Clemens, starting Monday.

Amendments to the Copyright statutes which will be sought by Allied, in particular, will seek to make further prosecution of exhibitors for holdovers and falsification of returns impossible under the Copyright statutes.

"Allied does not condone such dishonest practices," said Abram F. Myers, president. "However, to equalize conditions as between licensor and licensee, both or neither should be subjected to arbitrary penalties having no relation to actual damages in case of mere breach of contract as, in our opinion, is the case in the matter of holdovers.

"Allied also contends," Myers said, "that the general law affords a sufficient remedy in cases of alleged false returns by theatres playing on percentage, and that to invoke the Copyright law in such cases is a clear abuse which will not be tolerated. The association is pledged to secure an amendment of the Copyright law to this end."

Allied board of directors will also formulate and adopt a program "for meeting the announced determination of the producers to extend the zoning and protection system to Allied territory," Allied headquarters announce. This plan refers to the resumption of efforts to install uniform zoning and protection systems throughout the country which will be undertaken in the very near future, as revealed exclusively by Motion Picture Herald two weeks ago.

Allied directors will also give further consideration to percentage contracts and checking and will map out a campaign for legislation against the music tax to be undertaken, along with that seeking the amendment of the Copyright statutes, during the coming session of Congress, according to an official Allied announcement.

Allied directors who will be in attendance at the meeting are, in addition to Myers, H. M. Richey, general manager of the Michigan unit; Aaron Saperstein, president of Allied Theatre Owners of Illinois; Al Steffes, former head of the Northwest Allied unit; Nathan Yamins of Fall River, Massachusetts; Fred Harrington, Pittsburgh, and Charles Metzger of Indianapolis.

Myers will report to the board on the association's participation in the industry's plan for unemployment relief, and on other issues which have arisen since the last meeting of the board.

In this industry there is one dominant business publication, with 12,842 paid up exhibitor subscribers and a coverage in the whole field of 17,627

MAKE YOUR OWN DEDUCTIONS

In a recent survey published by the American Trade Council as to the number of failures, mergers or discontinuances of businesses among advertisers, interesting information is disclosed, tending to show that 93.968% of these passé activities did not attempt to promote or stimulate their business through their particular trade's publication or directories.

The story is fully but briefly told in the following table:

	number of reports	non-advertisers	advertisers
Automobile Supplies	1,113	1,037	76
Banks and Bankers	437	419	18
Beverage Producers	169	158	11
Construction and Material	713	667	46
Cosmetics	395	381	14
Drugs and Pharmaceuticals	737	711	26
Farm Implements	714	612	102
Food Products	947	928	19
Hardware	832	789	43
Hotels	1,497	1,456	41
House Furnishings	921	813	108
Machinery	597	584	13
Office Equipment	613	586	27
Radios and Supplies	914	883	31
Textiles	651	598	53
Wearing Apparel	753	657	96
Totals	12,003	11,279	724

This survey, just compiled by Otto Baedeker & Associates, covers a range of eighteen months, ending July 1st, 1931, and is based on a careful check of all trade papers and directories published in the United States during that period, compared with the "failures", "consolidations", or "discontinuances" of activities which function along lines that would have been justified or expected to advertise in trade publications within their field; many of which did advertise in other mediums such as local newspapers, outdoor signs, radio, catalogues and circular letters.

KENTUCKY SHOWMAN LEADS FIGHT FOR CENSORS AFTER BOOKING TILT

Dow-Jones Sees Paramount 'Black'

Paramount-Publix is "substantially in the black," according to the Dow-Jones ticker service, with expenses in theatres "greatly reduced" on present grosses. The service states that receipts over the last week-end in Publix houses were greater than any week-end since last March.

Receipts have been down more than seasonably since June due to excessive heat in July and August, the report declares.

"Paramount has obligations to purchase between September 1, 1931, and April 1, 1932, common stock of the company which will necessitate payment of approximately $11,000,000," says the report. Paramount will have a balance of $6,000,000 at the end of the year, according to Dow-Jones, with the usual cash balance of about $6,000,000 or more on hand at the time.

NBC to Bolster Day Programs On WEAF With Strong Talent

National Broadcasting Company is planning for WEAF a revision of daylight radio programs, to make them equal in quality to those rendered on Sundays and at night. It is said the change is the result of demand for such action.

It is understood the move is an effort to bolster up the daylight programs, which have always been weak in comparison to the night broadcasts. WJZ is not affected by the change, having made a similar shift a few months ago.

MPTO of St. Louis Will Meet Oct. 6; To Discuss Percentage

The tenth annual meeting of the MPTO of St. Louis, Eastern Missouri and Southern Illinois is scheduled for Tuesday, October 6 at the Coronado Hotel, St. Louis.

Among the questions set for discussion will be percentage playing and possible zoning. The legislation committee will also report on enactments in Missouri and Illinois during the recent sessions.

The Cleveland MGM exchange has put into operation a new booking plan, under the direction of Louis Freiberg. Each booker will have definite districts and will handle both features and shorts.

To Consider Sunday Bill

Members of the Standing Committee "B" of the House of Commons, which has been considering the Sunday Performances Bill, will meet on October 22, until which time no further action on the measure will be taken.

Moffitt Urges Owensboro To Adopt Local Law

Condemns 'American Tragedy' and Urges Church and Civic Units To Aid Him in His Battle

One of those extremely rare situations which finds an exhibitor repudiating the cause of the theatre owner and turning on his fellow showmen by leading a fight for the creation of a board of censors in his town has developed at Owensboro, Kentucky, where Lee W. Moffitt, of the Seville Amusement Company has aroused the countryside in a call to arms to adopt drastic censorship measures.

Moffitt, evidently, is disgruntled because of his inability to strike a new booking and protection deal with Warner Brothers and Paramount exchanges at Louisville, and, as a result, has launched a bitter tirade in public against these companies, the product which they distribute, the industry in general and its alleged "pandering to the grosser passions!"

Moffitt has "about decided" that censorship for Owensboro "would be a good thing." At present, he is using "An American Tragedy" as one reason for a board's creation, having planted in "The Shopping News," an Owensboro gossip sheet in which he is said to have controlling interest, the following editorial, which currently blazons forth in heavy display:

"OWENSBORO NEEDS A BOARD "OF CENSORS FOR THEATRES

"Not a Question of What the Public Will "Stand for, But Where Can They Get "The Most Indecent Pictures "To Show Patrons"

"The showing of such pictures as 'American Tragedy' at one of the Frederica street theatres should be condemned by the lovers of good pictures and the various civic organizations of our city. Pandering to the grosser passions in their desire for good grosses, they have lost sight of the fact that there is a limit beyond which they must not go.

"As an entertainment the picture is a failure. It is immoral and will leave many a parent in a nightmare. Far better to pay for the picture and not run it.

"We ask the cooperation of the Parent-Teachers' Association, Women's Clubs and any other organization interested in the welfare of our young people. Parents should advise the management of their disapproval of such pictures.

"We have the assurance of the management of the Seville that 'The American Tragedy' will not be shown at his theatre."

Moffitt has charged Warners Kentucky theatres with demanding excessive protection over his house, and with seeking to induce others to make rentals prohibitive.

Records Gone; Exchanges Halt

Film exchanges in Toronto have been greatly inconvenienced recently through the action of the police authorities in moving tons of records, books and correspondence from the offices under the direction of the Ontario provincial government in preparation for the prosecution of distributors under the Combines Act.

Police are reported in some cases to have taken almost everything in sight, leaving the office bereft of materials for the carrying on of ordinary routine business. Even personal files were confiscated in the wholesale exodus of records.

The preliminary hearing is set for October 5, and men are working to sort out the material against that date. Considerable confusion has prevailed. Ontario started prosecution in behalf of Ontario, Saskatchewan and Alberta following the Peter White report.

Jewish Charities Give Quota Of $150,000 to Theatre Group

The theatrical and motion picture division of the Federation for the Support of Jewish Philanthropic Societies in New York, has been allotted a quota of $150,000 in the 1931 campaign.

Eugene Zukor is acting chairman of the division for the business men's council of the Federation, the money raising unit. The $5,230,000 budget which must be raised supports 91 charities. Annual pledges have brought in $3,000,000 leaving a deficit of $2,230,000 to be gathered.

RKO Gets Break on Broadway

New York Roxy has booked RKO's "Smart Women," week commencing October 9. The deal is the first at this Fox de luxe stand in many months and will be followed by a week for the same opus at the Fox key house at Brooklyn. Warners has signed for the showing of Radio's "The Gay Diplomat" at the Warner on Broadway beginning October 9.

New Publix House In Detroit

Publix has opened its seventeenth house in the Detroit metropolitan area. Seating 3,000, the house is known as the Eastown. Admission will be 10 cents for children, all times, and adults, 15 cents and 25 cents, matinees and evenings, respectively.

New Jersey Warner House

Work has begun on a new Warner house in Ridgewood, N. J., to be part of the New Jersey group. Seating 1,700, the house was designed by Thomas Lamb, architect. Opening will be next spring.

CONTRACT PLAYER. Gene Raymond, who has joined Paramount's player staff for regular assignments. He has appeared on the stage as Raymond Guion. His first screen role will be with Sylvia Sidney in "Ladies of the Big House."

CONTRACT IN SOUND

The first contract to be made on film was produced on the next to the last day of the Radio World Fair at Madison Square Garden, New York, by Samuel Goldwyn and Eddie Cantor. Cantor was in New York for the opening of his new Goldwyn vehicle, "Palmy Days," at the Rialto theatre.

Regular telephonic connection was made between the RCA booth and Goldwyn's Hollywood office, with arrangements for recording the sound of the telephoned voices on film. At the same time, a camera was set to photograph Cantor.

The affair had the earmarks of a stunt, but it was serious enough. It actutally did affect new contractual relations between the comedian and the producer, in a very unique way, with even the signatures to the "contract" being merely the variations in the frequency wave of the sound track. RCA Photophone was used.

Serious the purpose of the thing really was. Nevertheless, Cantor was Cantor. He got the Goldwyn office. "Hello, hello! This is Cantor speaking." . . . "Cantor, Cantor!" . . . "Cantor, I said—the fellow who made Sam Goldwyn!"

SAYS CANTOR TO GOLDWYN. Eddie Cantor, musical comedy and screen star, as he was recorded both visually and vocally in his long-distance contract negotiations with Samuel Goldwyn. The conversation at both ends of the wire were thus inscribed on film, the recorded frequencies serving as signatures. (Story below)

RESPONSE. Don't know who or even what it was up there between the camera and the subject, but here is the effect it had on Genevieve Tobin, another well-known stage star who has "gone in for pictures." She has been assigned the principal role in Universal's forthcoming production of "Oh, Promise Me."

MODERN. In background, foreground, on any grounds—those in question happening to be the RKO-Radio studio. The gown is of satin with the skirt intricately gored for fullness—as though such things matter when Lita Chevret is inside!

EVENTIDE. A sailor lad poised on the gunwail as the sun ascends to its highest point in the sky. Sunset pictures are common—this one was taken at mid-day while the United Artists-Roland West company were on location for "Corsair." The star, Chester Morris, is here blackened against the waters.

SEE 25 CENT EXEMPTION IF SEAT TAX IS VOTED

Would Raise 50 Millions Without Materially Affecting Theatre Business, View at Capital

BY FRANCIS L. BURT

Determination of the financial policy to be followed by the Government throughout the remainder of the depression period is now under consideration by Administration leaders, with treasury experts attempting to estimate the possible revenues for the remainder of the present year and throughout the fiscal year, 1933.

Any taxation which may be deemed advisable by the Administration must be determined upon within the next few weeks, in order that it may receive full consideration and approval of the President, the treasury department and the bureau of the budget before Congress convenes in December.

Admission Tax Called Probable

Present indications are that any program of taxation which may be drafted will have as its main feature a partial sales tax, including, in all probability, reimposition of admission taxes on tickets costing less than $3, the present minimum. Any revision of income tax which may be sought is expected to be confined to the higher brackets, probably applying to income of $100,000 or more a year. A gift tax, supplementing the present estate taxes, also is expected to be featured.

Imposition of a sales tax is sponsored by a number of members of Congress, who believe it to be the most equitable way of raising revenue. Some suggestion has been heard that the tax apply to everything, to be at the rate of one-half of 1 per cent, but this meets with the objection that it would apply to necessities of life during a period of widespread unemployment when the greatest importance should be laid upon the ability of those out of work to continue to support themselves.

The partial sales tax, therefore, appears to be most favored. This would apply to such commodities as automobiles, jewelry, furs and possibly expensive clothing, sporting goods and other products which do not come within the class of necessities. If adopted, undoubtedly one of its important features would be a tax upon admissions.

The wartime admissions tax raised as much as $80,000,000 in the year when the exemption was only 10 cents. It is possible that the exemption now would be made 25 cents, but even so, it is contended, possibly as much as $50,000,000 or more might be raised; at the same time it is claimed that an exemption of 10 cents, as during the war, would be all right, based on a supposition that anyone who can afford to go to the theatre can afford to spend an additional few cents.

A deficit possibly approaching $1,500,000 by the end of next June now confronts the treasury department. A revenue of $50,000,000 to $75,000,000 or more from admissions would go a considerable distance in meeting that deficit. The burden of the tax would be spread out over many millions of people and it would not materially affect the theatre business as it did not during the life of the war taxes, it is held there. Also the present situation is declared by the White House to be an emergency second only to war in its magnitude.

Kaplan Is Under Fire As Alleged Union Racketeer

The Court of Appeals of New York state at Albany has handed down a decision in favor of Arthur Polin and Charles Schneider, Brooklyn projectionists, against Sam Kaplan, president of the Motion Picture Machine Operators' Union of Greater New York. At the same time, Governor Roosevelt, to whom charges against District Attorney Thomas C. T. Crain of New York for disposal of cases against the local 306, had been made, has forwarded the charges to Crain for answer.

The projectionists were said to have been evicted from the union for alleged criticism of a gift of $20,000 made to Kaplan by the local. The projectionists, by the court decision, which set aside a lower court verdict, were reinstated to membership, and Polin received $1,955 and Schneider recovered $1,622.40, both with interest.

Charges against Crain are based on his alleged failure to investigate alleged racketeering of officials in conducting the union. Charges were instituted by Samuel B. Birnbaum, attorney for the union members.

Big Four Pushing Production Of Three Pictures On Coast

Three units are working on Big 4 production on the Coast. "Cyclone Kid" Barton western, is nearing completion; a second Custer western is in preliminary production and "Dance Hall Kisses," designed for Class "A" houses, is being cast.

R. O. Jaynes, formerly with Warners, has been named contact man for Big 4, and leaves shortly on a trip to various distributors of the company product. B. N. Judell, Inc., has been named distributor for Milwaukee, Indianapolis, St. Louis and Chicago.

Radio Plans Big Campaign On Seth Parker's Picture Debut

Radio's advertising and exploitation staffs are getting behind Phillips Lord as the Seth Parker of the air and of Radio's feature, titled "Other People's Business," which stars Lord and his "neighbors."

A nation-wide campaign of newspaper, fan and trade paper advertising will be undertaken in connection with the tour of 70 cities which Lord will engage upon and various tie-ups with stores and papers throughout the country.

Movietone News In Deal With Mussolini

President, Fox Film

PREMIER MUSSOLINI

TRUMAN TALLEY
Chief, Fox Newsreel

Truman Talley, Movietone general manager, Thursday announced exclusively to MOTION PICTURE HERALD the consummation of a deal with Italy and the immediate inauguration of an Italian Movietone news. Rome becomes the fifth Movietone production center.

In establishing the reel, Movietone enters into partnership with the Italian government. The reel, known as Luce-Movietone-News, becomes the official screen mouthpiece of Mussolini and will be released in all Italian sound houses.

Negotiations were started by Talley in Europe early this year and were then carried on by Benjamin Miggins, European director. Baron Sardi, President Instituto Nationale Luce, Italian bureau in charge of public relations, press and motion pictures, represented Mussolini. On signing, Baron Sardi cabled Harley L. Clarke, Fox president, that he believed the deal opened doors between the two countries for a wider field of cooperation.

The contract, running for a number of years, while it does not give Movietone exclusive rights to make pictures in Italy, does put the reel in a privileged position for news gathering.

Miggins will direct establishment of an Italian editorial force, while Fred Leslie, European technical director, will supervise education of other workers. Ettore Villani, former New York newspaper man, who has been in charge of the camera work for Movietone in Italy, will continue, and his sound technician, Louis Girolami, will break in new field soundmen.

Thursday, two weeks after the contract was signed, Miggins had the initial reels ready for review. Premier Mussolini was the guest at the first show and Baron Sardi cabled Talley that Il Duce was satisfied.

Industry In Germany Showing Decided Decline For 1931

German trade reports from Berlin indicate that the number of German motion picture concerns which went out of business during the first half of 1931 exceeded by 48 the number newly organized.

Newly invested capital, however, is in excess of that liquidated by 158,000 marks. The depression in Germany's film industry is further attested by the decline of 14 per cent in receipts from the entertainments tax. Theatre attendance for 1930 in Berlin dropped 2,000,000 from 1929.

Hays Bars Three Gang Films As Glorifying Racketeering

Will H. Hays has ordered three features returned to the studios for revision or shelving because they glorified gangsters and beer-runners. The productions' producing cost is estimated at a total of more than a million dollars.

Glorification of the gangster is a violation of the promise of the industry last spring and it is understood that the leaders of the industry on both Coasts have concurred in the Hays action.

Attack Licensing Law

A test case in the municipal court of Hamilton, Ohio, is attacking the constitutionality of a city ordinance providing for the licensing of projectionists.

KATZ URGES RETURN TO COSTLESS SELLING PLAN

Publix Chief Sees Conditions Ripe For Definite Upswing In Grosses At Circuit's Box Office

Sam Katz, president of Publix Theatres, has called specifically on every manager in the national circuit to concentrate on the "costless" selling activity which he inaugurated some months ago, now that weather conditions, product and theatre conditions are more favorable than they have been for some months past for a definite upswing in box office grosses.

Calling on the managers to put all possible energy, showmanship and ingenuity behind their efforts to merchandise intensively every attraction without an increase in cost, Katz adds: "If we cannot, within the next few weeks, boost our circuit gross to new highs for the year, we never can. I say this because it is obvious that theatre conditions are better now than they have been this year and the time to capitalize on this situation is now."

The Publix executive points out that all companies have scheduled for release within the next few months "some of the finest pictures that have ever been produced." He then indicates the obstacles in the way of easily capitalizing on the approaching theatre season, among them the re-opening of schools, the football season and the like.

Katz mentions the value of cashing in on such events as fall fashion shows, fall trade jubilees, harvests and the like, and suggests that managers co-operate in every way, but he warns: "I must caution managers, however, against dissipating their selling strength by supporting the general movement only, rather than making a diligent effort to sell the particular attractions they will feature during this period. We are in the business of selling specific pictures just as merchants are in the business of selling specific articles of food or clothing and in any community drive for fall business, we must push our wares to the front."

Katz then goes on to say that the foregoing is not to be construed as "an admonition to lay down on the job of fall selling."

THE JUNIOR SHOW

by RITA C. McGOLDRICK

THE intelligently handled Junior Show is a gold mine! This is the consensus of theatre men from all sections of the country who have experimented with special juvenile performances and found them very much worth their while. MOTION PICTURE HERALD is directly interested in those agencies that will bring about box office results to the theatre man. It is particularly interested that these results are won through the exploitation of better pictures, for in this lies the larger vision for the future of the motion picture industry. A theatre serving its community with high-grade entertainment, taking care of its children with a view to their growing needs, considering the forceful influence that a motion picture theatre may be in any community—that theatre is filling a civic need and, in pleasing the citizens who are its customers, is pushing farther into the background the crippling bugaboo of censorship.

The department YOUR PUBLIC has, for several months, been making a careful survey of the theatre field in an effort to summarize the results that have been achieved by those theatres fostering Junior Matinees, Motion Picture Clubs for Children and Family Night performances. Letters were sent to every theatre that we knew of where juvenile performances have been experimented with. Letters were also sent to the women's clubs of the country whose committees have been carrying on a Better Films Movement. We expected some polite answers. We knew that some theatre managers would give us encouraging reports. But we were not prepared for the avalanche of magnificent material that has poured in upon us. Evidently every theatre man in the country, and every woman's club, is interested in sponsoring a Junior Matinee, if they have not already successfully done so. Out of the mass of material which the MOTION PICTURE HERALD has received two facts stand out predominantly:

2. Leadership in the community is the important element, well organized local women's clubs being the basic factor for Junior Matinee success.

THE NEIGHBORHOOD THEATRE

The most interesting results noted in the letters that have come in to us have been accomplished by neighborhood theatres. There are logical reasons for this. The downtown first-run houses are not always accessible to groups of children; their admission prices are necessarily high. The parents of children prefer they attend the motion picture house of the neighborhood which is within easy reach of the home. There is something of advantage in this situation to both the downtown theatre and the neighborhood theatre. If the larger house wishes to present a children's performance it may do so more expensively on a citywide scale. In most cities, the downtown theatres make an effort to do this at Christmas time or on some special holiday. The smaller houses have the advantage of an all-year-round season; for this reason the Saturday morning or the Saturday afternoon Junior Matinee offers shining possibilities to them.

METHODS OF PROCEDURE

In various communities many methods for the development of Junior Clubs or Junior Matinees have been tried more or less successfully, the results depending largely upon the energy and viewpoint of the theatre man and the degree of his cooperation with the citizens in his community interested in his project.

The Fox West Coast Theatres, cooperating in a fine meshing of gears with the Washington State Better Films Association and the Washington Congress of Parents and Teachers, have established successful Mickey Mouse Clubs which have spread over the length and breadth of the State of Washington, all agreeing to sponsor the same selected program. This is usually made up of a Mickey Mouse playlet, a serial or comedy, and a feature chosen with care and consideration for children from 6 to 16 years of age. Children are admitted for 10 cents, and mothers accompanying them for 15 cents. These children elect officers; they open their program with community singing and a Salute to the Flag, then in concert they recite a Mickey Mouse creed which has more of underlying seriousness than its name would imply.

The creed is: "I will be a square shooter in my home, in school on the playgrounds, or wherever I may be. I will be truthful and honorable and strive always to make myself a better and a more useful little citizen. I will respect my elders, help the aged, the helpless and children smaller than myself. In short, I will be a good American!"

This movement has won the interest of prominent citizens, important newspaper comment, and packed theatres on Saturday mornings or Saturday afternoons.

A number of other theatres have adopted Krazy Kat Klubs with small buttons as badges of membership. Wilmington, Del., has an exceptionally well organized children's group called The Young Timers.

SCHOOL AND SCREEN CLUBS

A number of letters from theatre men have asked us: "Why not School and Screen Clubs?" This, of course, seems to us a most happy suggestion. Why not School and Screen Clubs? MOTION PICTURE HERALD offers a School and Screen service without cost to theatre men, educators and women's clubs. School and Screen is an intelligent excuse for approaching your schools and inviting the children into your theatres.

It offers the theatre manager an opportunity to invite school teachers and club women as his guests of honor. It furnishes him with pre-release data and carefully prepared information on those pictures of the month having educational value as well as entertainment appeal with which to build up a high-grade children's program. But perhaps more than all of this it presents to the thousands of theatre men, interested in an increased juvenile patronage, a plan that has uniformity and background. The questionnaires printed by the SCHOOL AND SCREEN service become a definite link between the theatre and the schools in the locality which it serves.

The SCHOOL AND SCREEN pamphlet used in connection with the monthly list of selected pictures printed by this department obviated the troublesome necessity of previewing pictures which so many of the clubs now request before they will sponsor any film for a juvenile program. This free service of the MOTION PICTURE HERALD is available, and at your disposal.

LETTERS TELL THE STORY

The letters that have poured in tell a thrilling story. More than that, they demonstrate the fact that among theatre managers there is a fine spirit of cooperation, an alertness to opportunity. Out of the mass of material returned to us with surprising promptness and a wealth of detail we have selected the following letters for reprint because of the practical plans they outline, which have brought greatly increased business and envied new patronage to these theatres that have pioneered in selected juvenile programs.

GOLDEN STATE and RUBIDOUX THEATRES

Riverside, California

Roy C. Hunt, Manager

We are glad to give you the following information concerning our Junior Matinee.

The Saturday matinee at the Golden State theatre has been developed through our "Krazy Kat Klub," named so by popular vote of the children themselves. Each member is registered by name, address, and birthday, and is issued a pin bearing the Krazy Kat emblem and a number. During the summer months, interest in the Klub has been stimulated by means of the following stunts:

On a certain date, those holding pins ending in an odd number were admitted free. At another date the even numbers admitted the owner free of charge.

Birthday cards were sent to the members who had birthdays during the week, inviting them to be guests of the Klub at the Saturday matinee. These cards were written, rather than printed, to give a more personal touch.

Klub members were admitted to Nite-Ball games during the summer by presentation of their membership pins.

Members who maintained a certain attendance average were guests of the Klub at an afternoon performance of the Circus.

A picnic for the entire Klub was held at a local park. Competitive games were played, with theatre passes, stamped with the Krazy Kat emblem, given as awards.

Another successful stunt was a pet parade. This was worked out with the cooperation of one of the newspapers, and with the local merchants. Prizes were furnished by the merchants and the theatre. All children who entered pets in the parade were guests of the Klub at a special children's matinee.

For a period of 10 weeks, a toy monoplane was given away each Saturday. The local merchants distributed coupons, which the children deposited in a box at the theatre. Each Saturday a drawing was held, and the child holding the lucky number received a monoplane.

If the picture scheduled for Saturday is not of a type suitable for children, we endeavor to arrange a special for them. Sometimes we book a program entirely of short subjects, but usually a special feature picture is secured.

In order to make the children feel that their Klub is established for a definite purpose, a milk fund is maintained by the Klub. Through the cooperation of the Woman's Club, milk bottles bearing the Krazy Kat emblem are located in various stores for the purpose of collecting pennies. The money collected in this manner, with one-fourth of the receipts from each Krazy Kat matinee, is placed in a fund. This fund is used to provide for two tubercular children from this county, who are in a sanitarium near here. During the winter, the Klub furnishes milk for the undernourished children in various schools.

PARK THEATRE
Sioux City, Iowa
J. C. Duncan, Manager

This theatre is located in a suburb of Sioux City, and the possibilities in the way of Junior matinees are limited, particularly in the school season, which really covers about nine months of the year. School closes as late as 4:15 in the afternoon and to put on a matinee after that hour would run into the night performance.

We do, however, put on a Saturday matinee starting at 2:30. This is largely a juvenile affair and so far we have found it very successful. For our Saturday program we endeavor to arrange a program which will interest children—and, at the same time, prove acceptable entertainment for our evening shows. We have found that our business has increased very materially by running a serial or chapter picture, together with a good Western subject or action picture and shorts in the way of cartoons or single reel comedies. While personally we think very little of serial entertainment, it seems to be necessary as it appears to have a great deal more drawing power than an average two-reel comedy.

In our experience, we believe that every spot requires different treatment and our plan might not work out satisfactorily for the average how, especially in small towns. However, we are glad to give you the details. We look forward with interest to the series of articles on this subject which you intend to publish in the near future.

PUBLIX THEATRES CORPORATION
RIALTO THEATRE
Brockton, Massachusetts
M. F. Morrison, Manager

Concerning the Junior Matinee idea, here is our setup.

1. We have in the year a series of 12 kiddies' Saturday morning shows with pictures suited for children.

2. Tickets are printed with copy on the front side pertaining to the special shows and 12 blocks set off to be punched weekly. A local merchant contributes the tickets for the privilege of his ad on the back of the card.

3. The price of admission is 10 cents for each of the first 11 weeks, and on the twelfth week, providing for first 11 blocks have been punched, the child receives a free admission.

4. We offer a series of prizes which we award on the twelfth, and a special show. In order to win one of the prizes the child has to be present in the theatre.

5. Our last set of prizes were awarded by the Mayor, who is very pleased to help out in any way for the advancement of special children's shows. Each week we have favors for the children which are donated by local merchants. These we mention in typed trailers as well as in our daily ad.

FLORIDA THEATRE
Jacksonville, Florida
Guy A. Kenimer, Manager

Our Saturday Morning Children's Matinees have been in effect in this theatre since its opening. These matinees are sponsored and chaperoned by members of the local Better Films Committee. Our price is 10 cents for all seats, except when we show a first-run feature; then it is necessary to charge the regular adult price of 50 cents for those persons over 15 years.

We try to book for our matinees pictures of both educational and entertainment value, with stars that appeal to the youngsters. We run a serial, feature, news and cartoon on each Saturday morning.

Local dancing schools, kid orchestras, and child performers give their services on these matinees to enhance the attraction for the juvenile audience. Practically every Saturday morning we have some kind of prologue. Community singing, with popular song slides projected on the screen, is another medium which we use to advantage. Local merchants furnish us with occasional souvenirs.

Our matinees have been very successful, and now since school has started again, the crowds have become larger. On pictures which lend themselves to contests, such as "City Lights," we gave prizes for those kids most arrayed like Charlie Chaplin.

CAPITOL THEATRE
Auburn, New York
Seymour L. Morris, Manager

We have organized a Kiddie Club around the cartoons which are shown at this theatre every Saturday. We call a regular meeting of the children at stated times at which matters of interest to them are discussed. To each child a cartoon book is given at the time he joins the Club. This book contains drawings of the Dinky Cartoons. After seeing the cartoon the child is supposed to color the corresponding picture in his little book. Prizes are awarded to them for outstanding work on the art books. In this plan we have the cooperation of local stores. The cards are furnished by one store which has its advertisement on the back, the buttons are sent from another merchant. The members receive postal cards informing them whenever we have a picture suitable for children.

FOX WEST COAST
ALEXANDER THEATRE
Glendale, California
Cliff C. Cheleew, Manager

Note: At a meeting of the Associated Women's Clubs and Parent-Teacher Association groups of California this theatre was characterized as "the most successful in exploitation of children's shows."

This theatre has organized a Brownie Club with a membership of more than two thousand children. Every Saturday afternoon 1,300 to 1,500 youngsters, under the age of 14, storm through the doors of the theatre. Many of them bring their parents. The gross income of the theatre for Saturday afternoon has been increased on an average of more than 100 per cent.

Brownie Club members in good standing are admitted for seven cents each if their credentials are in order. To obtain this special club price they must bring a letter from their parents stating that they have been good Brownies during the week, have helped with housework in a willing manner, studied hard, bathed and washed regularly and in general conformed with the Brownie rules.

Any perfect grade in school is also a credential for the cut-rate ticket. The paper must be shown at the box office. A card showing Sunday school attendance likewise admits to the special rate.

For 26 consecutive Sunday school attendances a free admission is given. Members are also admitted free on their birthdays. The entire proposition is a game. Every member of the club has a membership card and a membership button.

The manager is called The Great White Brownie, the orchestra leader is The Great Musical Brownie, the organist is The Great Organ Brownie. These thousands of children go out talking and cheering for the Alexander Theatre. Every week brings in hundreds of letters from parents regarding the children—the letters being statements of how good the Brownies have been during the week. This gives me direct personal contact with these parents. That means goodwill for us.

Any rough actions, refusal to be quiet when told to be, or other violation of club rules meets with a suspension from the club for a three weeks period of time or more.

The Junior Matinees are the best all-round advertising this theatre gets.

FOX WEST COAST
FOX THEATRE
Boise, Idaho
F. P. Larson, Manager

I am outlining below our methods in handling our children's matinee:

Our children's show was organized under the name of Fox-Falk Mickey Mouse Club. Our club has been handled in conjunction with one of the local department stores which carries practically all our advertising for us on these shows; also furnishes the prizes for different occasions, and also souvenirs for children about once a month. The only benefit the department store gets from our children's club is that we have used their name in connection with ours in the naming of the club.

We have a special stage program each Saturday morning. The children have their own officers and conduct their own programs from the stage. We have a total membership of 1,200 and we keep a record of this membership, sending each child a birthday card on his or her birthday which admits the recipient and one companion.

I shall be most happy to look forward to the series of articles forthcoming on this interesting phase of theatre work. I have little to tell you as yet in the way of actual achievements in this department.

We are in the midst of plans for beginning this work, however, and I shall outline our present program in the hope that it may suggest posssibilities to others similarly situated.

We have just arranged for a tieup with Spaulding's Baking Company, located in our city, whereby this concern will put coupons in all their products to be redeemed in tickets to a special Spaulding's Junior Capitol Club Matinee to be held every Saturday. Under this plan, fifteen coupons will entitle the holder to a free ticket, and the baking company pay for all tickets so distributed at the regular junior admission price. Some idea of what we expect may be gained from the fact that the company will distribute approximately 30,000 coupons per day, or in the neighborhood of 200,000 per week.

SAENGER THEATRE
New Orleans, Louisiana

Fifteen thousand youngsters are registered members of the Saenger Theatre Booster Club, which has been in operation 18 months. Branch clubs throughout the city meet in halls, barns, spare rooms and vacant lots. The largest convenes in the backyard of Ted Liuzza, radio editor of the Item-Tribune. There is a stage and curtain. Uncle Joe, the club's sponsor, is Joe M. Estes, publicity director, and his assistant is Herbie Koch, theatre organist. Members pay dues of 5 cents a year.

Members of the club in good standing are admitted for 10 cents to the Saturday morning shows. The regular price for non-members is 15 cents.

WOMEN'S CLUBS' COOPERATION

There are thousands of organized groups, better films councils, Parent-Teacher Associations, federated clubs, Daughters of the American Revolution, International Federation of Catholic Alumnae and smaller units scattered over the entire country cooperating with theatre men to build up child patronage for better pictures. The reports from many of these are astonishing. The material would make a sturdy book rather than a magazine article. In the state of Ohio alone, for instance, there are 550 women's clubs interested in motion pictures as they concern their community. The influence of this whole movement has made itself felt with growing emphasis during the past year. The letters from these groups, as well as from the theatre men in answer to MOTION PICTURE HERALD'S inquiry, are a revelation in results.

DEI AWARE STATE FEDERATION OF WOMEN'S CLUBS
Mrs. Edmund Barsham,
Chairman, Motion Pictures

The Delaware plan for special program for children is now six years old. Its work is divided into two classifications, one for the neighborhood theatre in small cities and towns, and the other the central city plan for the chain theatre sections. The fundamental methods of procedure are the same for each. Our organized children's programs are not called Children's Matinees, but are titled Matinees for Young People, and the film programs are selected by committees of women working in cooperation with the exhibitor.

The program of the day is as follows: The music supervisor of the public schools leads the singing. The program opens with an organ processional and the march of the Boy Scouts to the stage. One Scout recites the Pledge to the Flag in which the children join. Following this the entire audience sings a national anthem, followed by "My Delaware," the state song. Usually a soloist among the children will sing or play some instrument. Small orchestras or glee clubs from public schools are often invited to take part. In the central city theatre matinees plan it is difficult to form club organization of the children, hence no badges and seldom prizes. In the smaller theatres, however, regular club organization has worked out and small prizes occasionally awarded for contests, but generally speaking prizes are avoided.

BETTER FILMS COMMITTEE
Birmingham, Alabama
Mrs. Myrtelle W. Snell

The Better Films Council of Birmingham, originally called the Better Films Organization, will be ten years old October 13. It has grown till it now represents over five thousand persons.

The original object of the organization was to put on pictures for children and these presentations were called Children's Matinees; later the name was changed to Junior Matinees. They have been held off and on for the past ten years.

The plan here is to obtain the cooperation of the theatre manager or managers where the matinees are to be presented, to have all possible publicity through the Parent-Teachers Association, Federated Clubs, the daily newspapers and a school bulletin issued by the superintendent of schools and mailed to the principals of the schools, to put on a series of matinees on Saturday mornings at a straight ten cent single admission and also sell season books at $1.00 for 14 matinees for children of 12 and under, $1.75 for those over 12. We always book the pictures for the matinees, sending one of our members to Atlanta for that purpose. We usually open the series with a free matinee, securing a fine picture free, the union men giving their time (operators, stagehands and an organist), the use of the theatre being donated. This free matinee starts the series off with a big crowd. Sometimes we have had to turn away some young people but we gave them tickets for the next matinee.

Prologues are furnished by schools and also by the leading dancing instructors and the playgrounds when we have had matinees after schools have closed. We open with community singing with a competent leader, then Boy Scouts march in with a large flag, go on the stage and give their salute to the flag, all children in the theatre standing and saluting.

The prologue comes next, then appropriate short subjects, sometimes a serial, then the feature picture.

BETTER FILMS COMMITTEE
Rutherford, N. J.
Mrs. H. G. Grover, President

Rutherford New Jersey Study Club blossomed from a handful of members in the first year into a Better Films Committee, sponsoring special programs for children and Family Week-end Programs resulting in crowded houses for the cooperating theatre man and a Friday after Thanksgiving matinee for children drawing eighteen hundred youngsters to the show. In a small city like Rutherford, where the head of the family belongs to that distinct social class called "commuters," the theatre goers become the motion picture theatre man's family audience. Now the Committee, having won the interest of thousands of members from the town, has established the Weekly Photoplay Guide in Rutherford's weekly paper which is a signpost to the intelligent public for the selected pictures shown in our theatre. We have diligently canvassed Parent-Teacher groups and women's clubs for support.

Reports of excellent results with morning matinees in many parts of the country have reached us but our women thought Saturday morning not a good time for children to go to the movies. Saturday morning was the time for music lessons, dancing lessons, the practice of the fine art of housekeeping, but not for movies. Saturday afternoon children could go to the movies. Would the Better Films Committee please arrange it and see that all the programs were perfect for all ages, from the wee toddler up to the discriminating high school miss—and would we please see to it that all the awful stuff was kept out. And so we have hit upon the Family Week-end Program with features that all the family could see to advantage. We found our manager willing to listen to the proposal, revolutionary as it sounded,—provided we could prove that it would pay. He was willing to give our suggestion a trial because we had enlisted the interest of the Board of Education and had been granted permission to advertise fine pictures through the schools, a favor he had often asked and been refused. He found that everything we did helped him; he knew we had never tried to run his theatre or reform it. It has all been a grand success. Now we have a Junior Matinee Committee which our young people manage and they sponsor a surprise kiddie frolic of fine short features, all of which have been a tremendous success at the box office.

OTHER GROUPS

The reports from other club groups that have come in answer to our question are too long and detailed to be printed at this time. Then there are other Better Films Committees whose work is so outstanding that we have already carried their plan in detail in these columns in the past year. Notable among these is the Macon Better Films Committee of Georgia, whose chairman, Mrs. Piercy Chestney, has built up consistently over a period of more than ten years an increasing juvenile patronage for endorsed pictures in her city. Her results are so surprising that they are frequently listed as the Exhibit A of all club groups' work in the juvenile matinee field. Further details of her plan, or any other plan mentioned in these columns, will be forwarded upon request.

An Average Print

An investigation has shown that an ordinary film print runs through a projection machine between 260 and 300 times in the course of its physical life. An exact figure of 280 runs is reached by figuring the average number of bookings of a print as 35; the average number of exhibition days for each booking as two and the average number of times a print passes through the machine each day of the booking as four. These figures, multiplied, equal 280, giving the total average machine runs of a single print.

SITUATION CLEARED IN 42 BIG CITIES

more insistent and firm than ever before in exhibition history.

Operators, particularly, found themselves faced with a tough battle when they met at round table confabs with theatre owners. Heretofore, after slight hesitation, theatres agreed to union demands, partially, at least. But with existing economic conditions forcing reduction in theatre overhead, owners stood ready to battle.

Dynamite bomb outrages were only reported at Chicago, Akron, Birmingham and Springfield, Ill., although stench bombings were more frequent. Police failed to apprehend culprits in practically all instances.

The battle in Chicago continues, having this week reached the point of nation-wide interest in union circles of all crafts. Nine bombings were reported up to yesterday and police are unable to successfully cope with the racketeering forces which have undermined the morale of theatre personnel and audiences in neighborhood sections which have suffered these outrages.

Total membership of the I. A. T. S. E. & M. P. Operators, national association, exceeds 24,000 projectionists and stage hands and estimates place at 6,000 the number of those involved in the nationwide fray which is rapidly nearing an end.

Generally, circuit operators—national and local—confined their demands to lower wages with continuance of present booth staffs. There are exceptions, of course, as in the case of Kansas City, where Fox Midwest theatres and Hughes-Franklin both darkened 22 houses rather than continue with a full complement of operators. On the other hand, independents operating suburban and subsequent runs concentrated on reduction of booth employees, with several instances of subsequent demanding both one-man and a salary cut.

Circuits benefited by lower wage scales in innumerable spots, with stage hands and musicians agreeing to give concessions in the form of eliminating overtime, less men and discontinuance of extras. New contracts signed are not, generally, of the two, three and four-year period as had been their nature previously. More one-year contracts were agreed to than ever before.

Independents had little to do with musicians, practically all contractual relations of the latter existing with circuits. The outlying houses and subsequent runs discontinued orchestras during the summer and previously and refuse to re-employ.

The two-man problem was the season's big fight. Agitation of national proportions developed tremendously early in August, one month before the deadline. By Labor Day, it had involved 2,500 projectionists in 1,100 theatres and initial attempts to enforce it caused closing of 500 theatres in the first September week. Three hundred reopened in a fey days, majority with non-union and "imported" help on a one-man basis. There were few strikes, but many lockouts.

Exhibitor demands for wage scale reductions are based on decreased revenues or the expectancy of lower grosses. Operators' concessions of this summer, involving a voluntary reduction of 7½ per cent for 10 weeks, amounting to a saving to exhibitors of $800,000, were made in recognition of existence of a depression and sufficiently demonstrated, it was said, labor's willingness to co-operate with exhibitors in periods of emergency.

The union situation in various key cities widely scattered throughout the country, presented in city-by-city form, is as follows:

Akron Bombings Arouse Police

AKRON, Ohio—Unsettled conditions prevail here. Police are guarding, day and night, RKO's Palace, Strand and Colonial, since those houses were made targets for stench bombs. No clue to the identity of the perpetrators has been established. Several others have been bombed with stench and dynamite bombs in the past several months. Wage scale reduction and the one man in a booth fight started the trouble.

Old Deal Gives Albany Raise

ALBANY, N. Y.—Projectionists received an increase of $2 per week in salary, as a result of a 1930 agreement, which still has two years to run. There is no change in the situation. The contract calls for two men in a booth. There has been no labor trouble of any sort. In view of the fact that practically all no longer employ musicians, they do not enter into the situation.

Operators at Ann Arbor Back

ANN ARBOR, Mich.—Butterfield Circuit and operators adjusted differences, signing a new contract with minor changes, following a lockout by the chain.

Dismissal for Atchison Men

ATCHISON, Kan.—Non-union projectionists are expected to take places vacated by union operators who were ordered dismissed by Fox West Coast after failure to agree on cuts and one man in a booth.

Legislation Feared at Atlanta

ATLANTA—Labor leaders are believed backing legislation prohibiting one man in a booth. Exhibitors will fight it. Downtown runs demand cuts, suburbans want second operator eliminated. Situation deadlocked, both firm.

All Serene in Baltimore

BALTIMORE—Quietest town in the country insofar as theatres-unions are concerned. Operators, stage hands, musicians working under agreement which has until 1934 to run. Few signed agreements on August 31. No trouble, everything status quo.

Plenty of Heat in Birmingham Battle

BIRMINGHAM, Ala.—Projectionists-musicians situation chaotic. In nine weeks preceding Labor Day, 12 theatres closed because of wage disagreement and the one man to the booth fight. Eleven reopened (all circuit) with new independent projectionists union. Only one man in a booth is used, on old scale of wages.

One Man Fight on at Boise

BOISE, Ida.—Bitter battle waxes hot over exhibitors' demands of one-man to each booth.

Musicians at Boston Take Cut

BOSTON—Overtime reduction and slight wage decrease paved the way for clarification of disagreement between theatres and musicians. No trouble.

Wage Cut Continues at Buffalo

BUFFALO—Operators agreed to continuation of former temporary 10 per cent. wage reduction. Two men were permitted to be slashed from staffs of Century and Great Lakes.

Tranquillity Reigns at Charlotte

CHARLOTTE, N. C.—No cut in salaries of stage hands or projectionists and if anything a raise in wages is expected. One man in the booth trend has not affected Charlotte and there is considerable doubt whether it will. No labor troubles. Indication of serenity existent can be gathered from aid given union houses by Charlotte Labor Journal, which editorially urges citizens to patronize them.

Sign Agreement at Chattanooga

CHATTANOOGA, Tenn.—Exhibitor interests at Chattanooga and suburbs signed with operators on practically the same basis as the previous agreement.

Chicago Continues Hot-Bed

CHICAGO—Nine theatres bombed in four weeks. Outlook unpleasant. Since reopening of 104 independents with imported operators, following decision to operate on one man basis, the breach between independents and union has widened until pressure on both sides is making it necessary to seek some compromise or truce.

Bombings have had demoralizing effect on attendance. Blasts have left shattered windows and thousands of dollars in damages in immediate vicinity—a grim picture to haunt the box office. Circuit houses, represented by Jack Miller, face renewal of contract with operators in January. At that time, according to Miller, chain houses will make a stand for one man in the booth plus wage reduction.

No difficulties appear with stage hands and musicians.

In the latest move to find a solution, operators' union proposed a conference with independents on a new wage scale in January, 1932. Suggestion was rejected by exhibitors Unknown thugs have kidnapped, robbed and beaten imported operators. Police continue vigilance in watching houses. Attention turned toward circuit houses by racketeers who have bombed a B. & K. theatre has caused speculation, in view of the fact that the fight is between independents and the union.

Fight at Cincinnati

CINCINNATI—Although no trouble exists with musicians and stage hands, and relations between first runs and operators are satisfactory, a deplorable condition developed between suburban and subsequent runs and the operators' union, dating from Sept. 1, when contracts expired and were not renewed.

Although exhibitors felt a wage reduction was in order, this was relegated to the background in view of the two man issue.

One-Man Fight Ends at Clarksburg

CLARKSBURG, W. Va.—Efforts of Warners to effect one-man order were unsuccessful. All quiet.

Two Men Continue in Cleveland

Situation settled in almost every situation. Independents succeeded in getting a 30 per cent cut by operators at subsequent runs. No effort was made to reduce to one man.

Colorado Springs Continues 2 Men

COLORADO SPRINGS, Col.—This is the only town in Denver territory which will continue two men in a booth operation without exception.

Columbus Operators Take Cut

COLUMBUS, O.—Terms of the new agreement signed this week between exhibitors and projectionists are nearly identical with those in the old contract. Slight salary cut.

EXHIBITORS STEM TIDE OF PAY COSTS

Bluffs' Suburbans Set, DeLuxes Not

COUNCIL BLUFFS, Ia.—When projectionists iron out salary and personnel cut differences with downtown first runs, the labor problems of this town will have been clarified. Independents agreed to an increase of from $5 to $12 per man each week, but succeeded in obtaining a one man booth.

Staff Halved at Dallas

DALLAS—Hughes-Franklin, principal local operators, agreed to employ union help after the latter accepted a slash in booth personnel. H-F originally intended to go non-union. Wages did not enter into the four-week squabble.

Strike Threatens Fox Denver Runs

DENVER—Only discordant note is the threatened strike of operators and stage hands in the four Fox houses, forced by discharge of a stage hand at the Mayan. Strike notice was served on Fox, and they sought court relief, court granting temporary restraining order, forbidding the unions to strike or pay benefits while the order was in effect. A strike would affect 50 employes.

Disorganized at Des Moines

DES MOINES—Thirty Publix houses contracted August 1 to use same booth personnel, with 5 per cent cut and relief of rehearsals. Twenty-two Blank theatres use non-union men and one-man booth, no salary cut. Independents, too, rapidly lining up one-man policy.

Musicians Take Cut, Operators Okay

DETROIT—No projectionist labor differences for the next year at least. Agreements will not expire until Labor Day, 1932. Agreements with musicians were reached, Publix having secured a reduction in the stage playing charge amounting to $25 per man per week, which was paid to each musician who worked in both pit and on the stage. Hereafter, this extra charge will not be paid.

Quiet Adjustment at Fall River

FALL RIVER, Mass.—With but one exception, theatres here have contracted with stage hands and operators to continue along previous lines.

Non Union Help for Fort Dodge

FORT DODGE, Ia.—Three local theatres have gone open shop. They sought salary reductions and a one man booth and could not strike an agreement with union help.

Little Trouble at Fort Worth

FORT WORTH, Tex.—No serious trouble here. Slight tilt with stage hands at one house over number employed.

Wages Houston's Problem

HOUSTON, Tex.—Circuits are conferring with operators on a lower wage scale. They agree to continue with two men per booth, but both factions refuse to budge on the salary problem. No trouble has marked negotiations nor is any expected. Musicians are not involved because of dearth in stage shows, etc.

Musicians Back at Indianapolis

INDIANAPOLIS—No union difficulties other than with musicians. Projectionists's contract expires in 1932, and ditto stage hands. Musicians and theatres ran into difficulties over salary, but the trouble has been ironed out now and the musicians are back. The scale is understood to be the same.

There has been no movement as yet toward one man in the booth.

Terrific K.C. Fight Continues

KANSAS CITY, Mo.—Charges and counter-charges are being made in public prints between operators and theatres who are nearing a climax in the lengthy fight over new agreements. Situation is centered in insistence of theatres for one-man and equally stubborn insistence of unions for continuation of two-man policy with last year's wage scale. Thirty-three suburbans have broken with Local 170. Of these, ten Fox theatres will remain closed until union agrees to one operator. Five Hughes-Franklin houses and one in Independence, a suburb, are also dark, but may reopen with one operator. Of 17 independents, a majority launched a one-man policy on Thursday, signing with Sound Projectionists Association, new union, which promises theatres "protection" and offers to take all responsibility arising from its members being employed. The association requires only one operator.

Lincoln Goes Open Shop

LINCOLN, Neb.—With but one exception, the town's entire theatre lineup has gone non-union after attempts of exhibitors and operators to adjust differences over lower salaries and a one man booth proved unsuccessful.

Quiet at Los Angeles

LOS ANGELES—Like Baltimore, this town is in complete ignorance of labor trouble. Summer voluntary reduction by operators continues until times are better, but this, too, is voluntary.

Conditions at Louisville Satisfactory

LOUISVILLE—Differences with operators just do not exist here. Trouble was ironed out in early summer and operators and exhibitors are working in harmony. De luxe theatres continue with two men, but suburbans secured an agreement whereby they use one operator and a helper.

Mansfield Retains Wage Scale

MANSFIELD, O.—Warners and Publix abandoned their fight for a wage reduction and signed with operators on the old scale. No effort was made to enforce one man.

Memphis Labor Situation Quiet

MEMPHIS—Situation quiet, arguments having been settled September 9. Salaries same as during summer, meaning continuation of 7½ per cent reduction for operators. Amicable relations between operators, managers. No one-man trend.

Wage Scale Remains at Meriden

MERIDEN, Conn.—Operators were victorious when Fox-Poli and Warners decided to retain present wage scale. A staff reduction in booths was not asked for.

Slight Pay Cuts at Miami

MIAMI, Fla.—Agreements with major exhibitor interests in this town were signed by operators this week. The new contractual deal remains practically the same as the old, except for slight wage reductio[illegible] lem did not come up.

Milwaukee Men Get Increase

MILWAUKEE—New wage scales between exhibitors and stage hands, musicians, projectionists, were settled amicably after several weeks. There were no material changes. A two-year contract had been signed last year with projectionists, which provided for a five-cent per hour increase. Theatres sought to have the projectionists operate on the same wage scale, but were unsuccessful.

There were no violences whatsoever during negotiations. Operators, it is understood, may go to the legislature with a bill guaranteeing continuance of two men per booth.

Minneapolis Goes Un-battled

MINNEAPOLIS—Peaceful, insofar as projectionists, musicians and stage hands' contracts go. Since the trouble between the projectionists and independent theatres one year ago, there has been no disturbance.

Montreal Exhibitors Pull Lockout

MONTREAL—Independent Amusement Circuit locked out union help at 30 houses, following failure to effect amicable adjustment on new contract calling for salary cuts and one man booth.

Things Jammed in New Orleans

NEW ORLEANS—Theatres and projectionists, stagehands and musicians have been conferring since August. No definite agreement has been reached and conferences will probably continue another month while crafts affected remain on the job, protected by an extension. Strikes are not considered probable, and all extended agreements, with the exception of musicians, are subject to conditions embodied in new contracts, which will be dated Sept. 1. Musicians may take a cut in orchestra quotas.

Chief sources of disagreement are: Length of contracts; cut in staffs; lower salaries.

Stagehands have been requested to take a ten percent cut, which they refuse. Other concessions have been asked with regard to number of men employed in a crew.

Managers are willing to increase salaries of certain projectionists, but wish to eliminate a man in the booths of certain other theatres.

New York Comparatively Quiet

NEW YORK CITY—Metropolitan New York, largest single territory in the country, has the least number of union squabbles of any important key town in the country. There exisits no wholesale salary slashing or one-man booth movements and whatever trouble prevails is between a few independent operators and projectionists. The biggest battle is being waged between Lee Ochs, upper-Manhattan circuit owner and the regular IATSE local. Others are unimportant and purely local.

Omaha DeLuxe Runs Settled

OMAHA—While operator's contracts with de luxe houses have just been signed, outstate and local suburban theatres are enjoying benefits of agreements made weeks ago.

Omaha operators gave neighborhoods a reduction of one man to a booth, but engineered a wage raise ranging from $5 to $12 per man. The agreement also stipulated that sound film only would be used. Contracts were signed for two years. Suburban contracts effect 24 houses. In the Nebraska division of Paramount-Publix, all "A" houses will retain two [illegible] in a booth, but with a wage cut of 25 per cent. In the "B," or second houses in each town, one projectionist will be retained with a wage increase of 7½ per cent.

ONE-MAN IN BOOTH IS BIG PROBLEM

Jersey Town Settles Contract Jam

PATERSON, N. J.—A one-year agreement has been negotiated between theatres and operators. Terms remain the same, but operators take a slight salary cut. Two men continue.

Trouble Closes Theatres Temporarily

PERTH AMBOY, N. J.—When operators and exhibitors failed to get together, the town's theatres darkened but later reopened with non-union men. Still negotiating on salary cut with regular union staff.

Musicians' Deadlock in Philadelphia

PHILADELPHIA—Strike situation is at a standstill as far as musicians' negotiations with Warner are concerned and the de luxe downtown theatres are continuing to advertise that "all the show is on the screen." Negotiations with Fox are proceeding and it is expected that favorable arrangements will be reached in a week. Musicians have withdrawn from Paramount houses, and Paramount has decided to eliminate musicians for the year. Independents have agreed to former conditions and terms.

The Musicians Protective Association has communicated with Governor Pinchot and Senators Reed and Davis, all of whom had agreed to do everything in their power to settle the differences.

The union is broadcasting news of the strike over the radio four times a week.

Warners hold firm for a reduction from 135, former winter personnel, to 50 men.

Kansas Town Unsettled on Slash

PITTSBURGH, Kan.—Refusal of union operators to accept salary reductions at Fox houses leaves contract signing unaccomplished. The matter now rests with Fox executives at New York, but in the meantime, projectionists continue on the old scale.

Pittsburgh Operators Get Tilt

PITTSBURGH—Nothing definite is in line for the one man to a booth movement which circuits and independents have been attempting to put over. Operators now get five per cent over last season's scale and signed a two-year agreement. Projectionists prefer a slight wage cut rather than accept the one man basis.

Stage hands, musicians continue unchanged.

Portland, Me., Unsettled

PORTLAND, Me.—Home offices of Publix and RKO are considering action on new contracts following refusal of operators to take wage reductions. They continue at their posts.

Okay at Portland, Ore.

PORTLAND, Ore.—First runs and projectionists have amicably settled differences. The fighting parties have signed an agreement which reads practically the same as the old contract except for a $2.50 weekly increase. Neighborhoods continue using one man per booth.

Scale, Two Men Stay at Providence

PROVIDENCE—Whatever differences existed have been straightened out and harmony is expected. There have been no wage cuts and two men still hold forth in the booths. With the exception of the attempted bombing of the Liberty, outside the downtown belt, there has been no disturbance of any kind.

Richmond Divided on Labor

RICHMOND, Va.—"A" houses continue two men on 5 per cent cut. "B" and "C" houses adopted one-man policy without cut. No trouble over new deal. Stage hands continue old basis.

Still Negotiating in Western N. Y.

ROCHESTER—Syracuse and this town have not settled on new contracts with operators, stage hands, musicians. Indications are that the old contract will be re-signed.

Musicians Lose Out at St. Louis

ST. LOUIS—Situation clear. Three small houses are using non-union operators. One has reported to police on several occasions that stench bombs were dropped to annoy patrons, but aside from that situation there has been little to disturb locally.

The St. Louis Amusement chain and all independent neighborhood and suburbans are operating without orchestras. The musicians' union, however, placed additional members in all first run houses. New agreements have been signed by the theatres with their projectionists and stage hands on the basis of the old contracts.

St. Paul Quiet in Labor Situation

ST. PAUL, Minn.—Quietness of Minneapolis labor conditions holds true here, with one man booths continuing as of last year and operators' and musicians' wages remaining unchanged. Stage hands, however, are negotiating, but their scale, too, is expected to continue.

Saginaw Continues on Old Basis

SAGINAW, Mich. — Butterfield Circuit signed contract with operators for another year, continuing on basis of old agreement.

Quiet at Salt Lake After Slight Tilt

SALT LAKE CITY—Operators have adjusted differences with circuits here, both agreeing to the old contract stipulations. Wage cuts and one man booth were sought.

Wage Revision Expected

SAN ANTONIO, Tex.—This town will go along with Houston in whatever agreement is reached with operators, who are balking at circuits' demand for lower salary. The two man problem will remain unchanged.

Little Trouble at San Diego

SAN DIEGO, Cal.—Except for stage hand trouble at a Fox house, which finally abandoned its policy, labor difficulties did not crop up here as in other towns nearby.

Quiet in Northern California

SAN FRANCISCO—Labor troubles are absent in San Francisco and Northern California, harmony prevailing between picture houses and projectionists, musicians, stage hands.

In September, the controversy over scales of projectionists at Fresno, Cal., was settled, with projectionists gaining an increase of $3 a week.

At San Francisco, salaries of musicians were reduced during summer and while this period has passed the lower wage still is accepted. Several orchestras have been dropped.

Projectionists have agreed to the one man in a booth plan in smaller theatres, but two men are the rule in larger houses.

Seattle Working Quietly

SEATTLE—Situation here has been ironed out amicably. Two operators at slight cuts.

Bombing Following Jam

SPRINGFIELD, Ill.—A bomb was exploded on the roof of the Capitol on September 27. Two weeks prior to the blast the management had declined to employ four projectionists instead of two.

Springfield, Mass., Signs Contract

SPRINGFIELD, Mass.—Another year will elapse before labor trouble exists, Publix and Warners having given operators a new contract on the basis of the old one, salaries and two men continuing.

Springfield, Mo., Showless

SPRINGFIELD, Mo.—While the labor situation is sizzling in Kansas City, Fox and Publix-Dubinsky houses in the territory are also seeking a one-man-booth policy. All theatres in Springfield will be closed for an indefinite period pending a settlement, leaving the city showless until the union meets the circuits' demands.

One Man in Booth for Tampa

TAMPA, Fla.—Practically free of labor turmoil. All but two theatres employ union men. Starting Sept. 1, the two men in the booth arrangement is out. Salaries remain same as last year.

No Trouble Expected at Capital

WASHINGTON, D. C.—No labor trouble in Washington, theatres operating under old agreement pending consummation of new one, probably without change. Little unemployment, either in theatre or other industries.

Booth Intact, Lower Scale at Wichita

WICHITA, Kan.—Fox Theatres signed new contracts with the projectionists' union here for four men at a reduction in scale.

The Canadian Situation

TORONTO—With one exception, very little change is noted in labor conditions in Canada. The exception is at Montreal, where operators and United Amusement, operating 19, have been at odds. Company reserved the right to engage or discharge men in the booth, agreeing otherwise to pay union scale or more and to accept working schedules. Many operators gave their assent to the offer but the union, as a body, placed pickets at the theatres—until United Amusements secured an injunction restraining the officials or representatives from picketing. Further, United issued a writ for $10,000 damages against the union; the case is pending.

All else is quiet on the labor front in Canada although a rumble of hostilities has been heard in the declaration of Oscar Hanson, of Associated Exhibitors, representing 75 independents, that steps would be taken to relieve the burden of small owners by requirement of two men in the booth. This works out to four operators in the case of theatres giving continuous shows.

Wages for operators, stage hands, electricians and what musicians there are unchanged.

Houses at Hamilton and Ottawa, other than chain theatres, continue to operate under open shop and the booths are manned by members of a so-called independent union as for many months past.

Fox in Fight to Finish on Kansas State Blue Laws

Fox Midwest Theatres and Fox West Coast are preparing for a finish fight, in the United States supreme court if necessary, against the antediluvian blue laws in Kansas.

This declaration is contained in a statement issued to circuit managers by E. C. Rhoden, division manager of Fox Midwest, following the issuance of an injunction in federal court restraining state and county officials from interfering with Sunday operations of Fox theatres in four counties in Kansas.

The enjoining order is hailed by theatre owners as a signal victory and as the opening wedge in a powerful assault on the troublesome Sunday labor and merchandise laws under which exhibitors have been harassed since the birth of motion pictures.

A hearing on the issuance of a permanent restrainer is scheduled for Friday. Should the circuit obtain a permanent order it will give relief to Fox Midwest for eight to eighteen months, or until the matter can be adjudicated by the U. S. court of appeals. A reversal by this court would result in an appeal to the highest court in the land. In the meantime, however, the Kansas legislature will convene and a united effort will be made to repeal the archaic laws. In this Fox will have the united and enthusiastic support of every independent and every circuit operating in the state.

The blue fight at present centers in Wichita, where three independents, including a woman exhibitor, have been arrested for several successive Sundays.

Joint Committee Agrees To Bar Pictures

Many Thousands of Dollars Lost Through Dishonest Accounting On Sharing Terms

BY WM. H. MOORING, London

Kinematograph Renters Society has just sent a hand grenade bursting about the ears of dishonest cinema owners. If that has no effect they probably will execute their threat to blow up theatres involved by means of an economic mine.

For months past the joint investigation committee of the K.R.S. and the Cinematographic Exhibitors Association has been busy investigating suspicious cases in which there appeared to have been some dishonest accountancy under sharing terms of film rental contracts.

Will Bar Bookings

Now they have decided that it is no longer of any use merely to issue warning notes. With a pretty serious state of affairs revealed by its inquiries, the committee went to the K.R.S. and recommended that in future all exhibitors found guilty of "cooking" recepit accounts shall be blacklisted and refused further films through the members of the K.R.S. That would mean that in nearly every case exhibitors so punished would be unable to continue their business, the K.R.S. embracing all but the Gaumont-British distributing units.

The K.R.S. resolved to accept this advice, and has issued a sensational warning that in future where cases of fraud are proved to the satisfaction of the committee, the exhibitor offending will find his theatre as dark as his fingers were light.

Cases of a suspicious nature are reported from all over the country, and it is regarded as likely that the renting organizations of this country have lost many thousands of pounds through this form of dishonesty.

Tax Increase to Be Resisted

This movement is characteristic of the strong line which the K.R.S. has taken over since Sam Eckman, Jr., started his year of presidential office; clearly Eckman intends to clean up the industry before his year comes to an end.

The C.E.A., while recognizing that the film industry must bear its share of extra taxation called for in the present financial crisis, is to make serious efforts for alteration of the incidence of the increase due to commence November 9, in order to relieve the added burden on the lower priced seats. At the moment the proposal is to increase the tax more on the lower seats than on the higher ones. The C.E.A. is to ask that a substantial reduction be made in the tax on the 6d. (12 cents) (which make up the bulk of country theatre seating), and that the difference shall be put on the higher priced seats.

NEW ERPI PLAN PERMITS PAYMENT OF PERCENTAGE OF GROSS RECEIPTS

Opens A New Field Among 400-500 Seat Houses

New Sales Policy Seen Responsible For Sharp Installation Increase Throughout Past Summer

Inauguration of a new Erpi sales policy by which exhibitors are permitted to pay for installations on a percentage of the theatre's gross has resulted in opening up a new, large sales field among small theatres of 400 and 500 seats, heretofore practically untouched by Western Electric.

The new sales policy is conceded by Erpi sales officials to be primarily responsible for a sharp increase in installations throughout the entire summer, and for boosting the number of Western Electric installations during July to the company's highest monthly total since the inception of the sound era. In the four-month period from June to September, inclusive, Erpi averaged nearly one hundred installations per month, with the peak being reached in July with almost 150 installations.

C. E. Bunn, Erpi general sales manager, conceded that the new sales policy was of primary importance in opening up the smaller theatre field for the company's equipment, although he maintains that an accumulation of other factors aided in boosting Erpi's summer sales record to its high level.

"In addition to the desirability of the new sales policy to owners of small theatres," Bunn said, "keener competition between theatres also aided in creating a large volume of equipment sales this summer. The fight for theatre patronage today makes good sound reproduction of vital importance. Exhibitors, realizing this, are equipping their theatres with a view to meeting the competition of the best in their locality.

"Sales this summer," Bunn continued, "were also aided by the defects in so-called 'bootleg' equipment which are now beginning to show themselves. Breakdown of this equipment, together with improper and unsatisfactory servicing of it, has discouraged many exhibitor-owners of it; and such equipment is now being replaced with accredited sound apparatus."

Still another factor which contributed to this summer's sales volume, Bunn said, was the seasonal replacement and improvement of temporarily closed theatres readying themselves for fall openings. The convenient percentage-payment plan adopted by Erpi this summer, however, is said to be of greatest individual significance.

By virtue of the new sales plan, a selected theatre list is offered Erpi equipment solely on the basis of payment on a percentage of the gross receipts of the theatre. Servicing of equipment is also paid for in the same manner.

Erpi sales officials declare that the policy is proving highly satisfactory to both the manufacturing company and to exhibitors, availing themselves of it. Only theatres whose financial records show promise and whose credit reputation is established are approached by the manufacturer. Installation of the sound equipment in such theatres, it is said, has resulted in increasing grosses approximately 15 per cent.

The plan, which has also been placed in effect by Erpi abroad, makes new equipment installations available to a large number of theatres of less than 1,000 seating capacity which found it impossible to purchase the equipment under former arrangements. This is demonstrated by a study of Erpi's summer sales records which show that the bulk of the summer installations this year were in 400 and 500-seat houses.

costly mess of litigation that has been regarded as an impediment to both individual profits and industrial progress ever since the fight took on the interminable aspects of an old Kentucky feud. This desire to wipe the slate clean, and to do so amicably, is given as one reason why the actual cash damages realized in the settlement were so far short of the $47,500,000 claimed. Another reason, besides the obvious one derived from an inability to prove damages or not pressing proof, lies in RCA's suits charging a number of the 21 manufacturers involved with patent infringements, in which group were such leaders as DeForest and Gold Seal. Where these counter actions had effect, all suits, brought by either side, were dropped.

Some of the independent concerns, among them such major tube manufacturers as Arcturus, Gold Seal, Diamond and Republic Radio, also settled with an arrangement whereby they were granted licenses to produce tubes under RCA patents. Objection is still made to calling this phase of the settlement anything pertaining to the movement toward "patent pooling," but at least it now throws open to a number of competing companies rights in the radio-sound tube art claimed exclusively for use by RCA, much as the Edison and Selig processes were extended to the other producers in 1907, stimulating the motion picture industry in its first step toward importance as a medium of public entertainment.

W E's Market Largest

The tube settlement is called just such a step by C. H. Braselton, president of the Arcturus Radio Tube Company, while Samuel E. Darby, Jr., of Darby & Darby, New York, counsel for the independents, states that "not only has disturbing litigation been ended, but practically all important tube manufacturers will be licensed on equal terms with RCA with the result that the industry should become stabilized." The same position is taken by David Sarnoff, president, and Dr. Alfred N. Goldsmith, vice-president and general manager of RCA.

The significance of this clarified condition in the radio field extends at once to the motion picture industry through the relatively new activity of the radio tube manufacturer in the film theatre, exchange and studio market. And the theatre tube bill alone (based on list prices) amounts to a million and a half dollars a year in just the United States.

The bulk of this market is sold to by Electrical Research Products for Western Electric equipment, which is used in about 5,250 of this nation's 11,500 wired theatres. Deep inroads by independent manufacturers of radio supplies, are admitted, however, in the business accruing to Erpi by its provision for the use of only WE tubes. Part of this provision is by contract, part is by the very design of the equipment to fit only WE tubes. But even where it is a matter of design, independent tubes have in some instances become adaptable and are being purchased by large circuits as well as small theatre interests for WE equipment. Sound engineers are not in agreement as to whether it is a good practice to disturb Western Electric's matched apparatus. Prices are proving a strong argument, however, with theatre men pointing to such examples as a WE rectifying tube costing $65, while a tube used for the same purpose is priced by DeForest at $40.

Tubes Replaced Twice Yearly

In general, it is pointed out, WE tubes, manufactured under RCA patents granted in the Radio-Audio Agreement of 1919-1921, cost from 50 to 60 per cent more than interchangeable tubes purchased on the open market at list prices.

RCA Photophone, with upwards of 3,000 installations, employs regular radio tubes, as do the "independent" makes of sound reproducing equipment. Tube replacements represent wide variation in cost due to the differences in complexity and power of systems. A sound system represents a financial outlay in tubes varying from $70 to $174 (excluding the original large-size WE system, which required tubes totaling about $324 in price). The tube investment in the present WE system for medium-size theatres, representing the majority of WE installations, amounts to about $106. In the average installation, tubes are replaced about three times a year.

At the same time that the tube fight, originating over the original Clause 9 in the RCA radio set licenses, appears as a definite gesture toward opening up its immediate field to the independent, the U. S. Department of Justice action against A. T. & T., RCA, General Electric, Westinghouse and others, is encouraging talk of extending patent rights generally throughout the radio-sound industry. One basis for settling the suit, which charges A. T. & T. and the RCA interests with participation in an exclusive patent pool, would be a proposal to grant all companies the privileges of these patents under license. It is known that the government would look favorably upon such an arrangement, and strong effort is now being made by the companies thus charged with violation of the Clayton anti-trust act to settle the case out of court.

PASSING IN REVIEW

This department does not attempt to predict the public's reactions to pictures. It does, instead, present detailed and accurate information on product, together with the frank and honest opinion of the reporter

—TERRY RAMSAYE.

"MAD PARADE." Looks like that dog-gone war ain't ever gonna end . . . and having run short of other themes for war stories, they now pick on the women's side of the fracas . . . and that's where your best selling slant comes in . . . A picture of the ladies . . . by the ladies . . but not alone for the ladies . . . 'cause the men are going to be curious to see just what the women did in that thar man's war besides . . . serving doughnuts. . .

If "names" count much at your b. o., you have some pretty good ones here . . . story . . . just one of those things, and even wiping off the windows of the box office so as to see the value of this one a bit clearer . . . we find it has audience appeal and if your cash customers don't draw the line at one girl murdering another . . . regardless of the reason . . . then everything is jake. . .

Whether you will do big business with this one is something hard to predict, but you can surround it with a campaign that ought to create enough interest at the box office to make up for what it lacks in entertainment . . . then build up your show with some cracker-jack shorts and your patrons will go home feeling that the evening was not such a bad one after all. . .

"PENROD AND SAM." If pictures of this type appeal to your class of patronage you'll do a good business with Tarkington's favorite story. But you will agree that it is not as good as "Skippy." That goes for story, cast and direction. But what you are chiefly concerned about is whether it will do any business for you.

We think "Penrod & Sam" is box office in the sense that its the type of story the audience of today is looking for. It won't overtax their imagination and where the hard-boiled reviewer finds fault they will find entertainment. It's "audience" to the extent that it will amuse and give them laughs; maybe a tear or two if they are sensitive to another "dead dog" gag. Of course the names may not be quite as well known in your community, but the picture does lend itself admirably to exploitation and all sorts of advertising and ballyhoo.

We can think of no reason why "Penrod and Sam" should not bring you some business, and suggest that you get behind it to help it over the rough spots.

"AN AMERICAN TRAGEDY" was caught immediately following the picture previously discussed and having shed a few stray tears over the loss of Penrod's dog—(yes, we're that soft hearted in every way except picture buying)—we found it almost impossible to find another tear to shed for Clyde Griffiths.

Here's a picture that is "box office" for most every community in the country. It will get them in and then make them wonder why they wanted to see such a morbid picture, so that lets out about all the "audience" appeal you may think it possesses.

It is cold, dreary entertainment . . . but it is entertainment no matter how you look at it Fortunately, there are not too many yarns like this being made into pictures. Especially in these days when laughs are so essential. Not a single giggle in the entire picture, just heart throbs and more heart throbs; so surround it with plenty of "extra good" shorts full of hearty laughs.

Theodore Dreiser's name is probably known all over in connection with the book and every effort should be made to convey the thought that this is a faithful portrayal of his story. Grim life, as viewed by this author, is what the producer has brought to your booth. Selling angles are not lacking and any enterprising showman should clean up with this picture.

May we also suggest that the attraction immediately preceding and following this one be something other than "heavy stuff"?

"RIDERS OF THE PURPLE SAGE".—Zane Grey notwithstanding, your audience will not accept this as anything but a "Western," so don't let anyone tell you that it's better than just that. We are quite certain that most houses will have to treat it as they do all other stories of this kind.

We do wish that the major companies would "lay off" delivering pictures like this one because they are not worth the usual "average" price charged for their other product.

"EAST OF BORNEO." There is something fascinating about this sort of title, maybe that's why they can be stamped "box office." Where pictures with such magnetic titles fall down is the adverse word-of-mouth talk that starts circulating after the first show, if the picture is punk.

"East of Borneo" starts off with every promise of living up to the interest and intrigue provoked by the name, but it does not quite come up to all expectations. And by virtue of the same argument, it does not fall down completely. It's darn good entertainment of the so-and-so order that any audience will enjoy, but they won't call their friends on the 'phone to tell them not to miss seeing it.

You have a "box office" title to start with. Use it to good advantage and you will be more than satisfied with the returns. Offering many worthwhile slants for merchandising, a manager possessing any ability at all should have little difficulty building up a fine campaign that will shake the folk out of that after-dinner nap and send them hustling to the theatre. You have an added angle, too, the kids. Although it is far from a picture with youngster appeal—so far as story goes—the jungle, animal and savage slant will give them plenty of good reasons to go home and tell Mom and Pop about it. They'll like it.

The volcano eruption is particularly well handled and will revive the use of a lobby or marquee volcano belching forth anything from confetti to real smoke or steam. The jungle setting gives you plenty of opportunity to display your ability as a creator of atmospheric fronts.

So, making up a final analysis of this picture; it's a "box office" title, plus entertainment of the satisfying variety, plus a lot of good exploitation and ballyhoo slants. What else do you want?

CHARLES E. LEWIS.

Lullaby

(M-G-M)

Drama

Helen Hayes, a great Broadway star, makes her first bid for cinematic fame in "Lullaby," from the play by Edward Knoblock, and her performance in this production will go on the records as one of the most outstanding of the year.

And it might be observed that if they get a few more of these Helen Hayeses and Lynn Fontannes out here in what are commonly known as "the movies"—well, the winters are likely to get cold and long for some of the sweet things who now pretend to be stars.

"Lullaby" is not a great play. M-G-M folk have labored long and earnestly to make it a good picture. Considerable of it was reshot after it was first previewed. I did not see the first preview, so I cannot say how much it has been changed. But with the performance of Miss Hayes it is certain to rank among the distinguished dramatic offerings of the screen season.

Miss Hayes, herself a very charming and lovely creature, does an exacting role which calls for the simple girlishness of sixteen, and all the way to the ghoulishness, the ghastliness, of a broken-down old hag of fifty-five or sixty. In spite of the deadly revelations of camera range, she portrays each moment of a life of tragedy with completely convincing perfection. In fact, the transformations from the sweet innocence of girlhood down to the bitterest dregs of life are at times shocking, so expertly and so courageously does she bury her own natural beauty and wholesomeness.

"Lullaby" is a story of sacrifice and betrayal, a story of a woman whom life treats with unfailing cruelty. Her lover deserts her. Her child grows to manhood scarcely knowing her. In the end, her identity unknown to him, he takes her from the streets and gives her a good home. Because he has become famous and successful as a physician, she buries her secret of motherhood deeply in her all but broken heart. No frothy fare, this "Lullaby," but what an absorbing drama!

Although the entire action is centered at all times around Miss Hayes, excellent support is given her by a splendid cast which includes Lewis Stone, Jean Hersholt, Neil Hamilton, Robert Young, Cliff Edwards, Marie Prevost, Karen Morley, Charles Winninger, Alan Hale, Halliwell Hobbes and Lennox Pawle. Particularly good were the few lighter moments given by the performances of Miss Prevost and Cliff Edwards. Miss Prevost has done two or three similar roles recently, each with consistent cleverness.

The production was directed by Edgar Selwyn, who has made the most of his star's genius and kept a rather slow and episodic story running smoothly throughout. The screenplay and dialogue are credited to Charles MacArthur, who also is the husband of Miss Hayes. Oliver Marsh contributed an excellent

East of Borneo

(Universal)

Drama

Universal offers a drama set in the jungle, with multitudinous crocodiles, snakes, apes, lions and so on, adding to the jungle scenery and meant to provide the thrilling moments, as Rose Hobart penetrates the wide fastness of Malay in an effort to find the husband who had left her, believing she no longer cares for him.

The husband is found, in the person of powerful and colorful Charles Bickford, as the almost always intoxicated personal physician to the prince, Rajah of Marudu, but the doctor is in a sullen mood. Her trip down the narrow stream through the heavy, overhanging verdure is spotted with various and sundry dramatic encounters with tigers, snakes and the crocodiles which infest the waters.

The following tale was termed as not altogether new, since it revolves about the attempt on the part of the prince to get rid of Bickford and take Miss Hobart for himself. Realizing the danger, Bickford attempts an escape with his wife, but the prince beats him to it, and after one of Bickford's rousing fights the two are captured. The prince forces his attentions on the girl and she shoots him. The doctor is called to tend the dying prince, but before much can be done, an adjacent volcano erupts with a dramatic forcefulness, and the lava and resultant landslide mow down everything in the path, palace and people, while animals of the jungle scurry to safety and the now reunited pair make their struggling way through crocodiles and frightened, maddened beasts to the refuge of their barge, which immediately sets forth down stream, away from the crumbling and disappearing kingdom of the rajah.

The film appeared to hold the attention of the audience at the New York Mayfair without effort. Praise was accorded the performances of Miss Hobart and particularly Bickford, who is generally appealing as the strong, he-man type. George Renavent, playing the rajah, comment indicated, made rather too much of the sinister aspects of his role, while the only other names in the cast, Lupita Tovar and Noble Johnson, as natives, were termed satisfactory.

Produced and distributed by Universal. Directed by George Melford. Adaptation by Dale Van Every. Dialogue by Edwin H. Knopf. Cameraman, George Robinson. Release date, September 15, 1931. Running time, 74 minutes.

Other People's Business

(Radio)

Comedy-Drama

Radio Pictures has compressed a whole grand summer holiday in Maine into six or seven reels of film. If enough people see the picture, and everyone should, the population of New England might rapidly increase. Right now Radio is calling it "Other People's Business," though I understand a change of title is in the offing. Never mind what they call it, the picture is one of the sweetest, most wholesome pieces of entertainment of the year.

It features Phillips Lord, the nationally famous "Seth Parker" of the radio. It will bring joy unconfined to Seth Parker's vast radio audience. It should add millions more to his auditors. I, for one, hereby declare myself a Seth Parker fan, radio or screen.

Radio has surrounded Mr. Lord and his wife, the "Liz" of his broadcasts, with a cast that is about perfect. Every one of them seems to have been seized with the spirit of the thing, and the results are tender, wholesome, laughable, romantic and even thrilling. I've never seen a better screen "chase" in my life than when old Seth tries to beat the villain (and what a swell villain!) to "the 9:30 local" at the Junction. Old stuff? Take a look and see what really can be done with hokum.

This Seth Parker picture has a most interesting story, too. It has sustained interest and realism that keeps you cheering for someone, or hissing the villains, from start to finish. Here is the best and most reliable hokum of the stage and screen for these many years, all burnished up and turned into a story which Jane Murfin wrote with obvious sincerity and which Bill Seiter directed with inspired fidelity to his characters and their backgrounds. Max Ree's sets are delightful and Roy Hunt has done a superb job with the photography, both interior and exterior. The locations are ideal. Carl Dreher, RKO director of sound, and his recordist on this production, Hugh McDowell, have done one of the most perfect jobs of sound recording I ever have heard.

Space doesn't permit special commendation on each member of the cast, but in addition to Mr. and Mrs. Phillips Lord, fine characterizations are given by Effie Palmer, Bennett Kilpack, Raymond Hunter, Frank Albertson, Bette Davis, Oscar Apfel, Stanley Fields, Dorothy Peterson, Frankie Darro and Wade Boteler. I was particularly happy to see Frankie Darro again in a part where he stands out for what he is, one of the best child actors ever on the screen.

Produced and distributed by Radio. Story by Jane Murfin. Directed by William A. Seiter. Supervised by Pandro Berman. Art director, Max Ree. Cameraman, J. Roy Hunt. Sound, Hugh McDowell.

Local Boy Makes Good

(First National)

Comedy

With the wellknown stage play, "The Poor Nut" as the basis for Joe E. Brown's latest comedy effort, the wide-mouthed comedian does extremely well, in the general opinion of an audience at the Forum theatre on the Coast. It is something of a clear indication of the comedian's ability and his success in this film, that a good part of the dialogue was completely lost to the audience, drowned in the din of laughter in the house.

Brown, as the bashful and botanically inclined college bookstore clerk, proves rather conclusively that his note as a comedian is not entirely based on his cavernous mouth, but rather on his ability to render amusing lines in a really amusing manner. The audience was equally generous with its greeting to Ruth Hall in the opposite lead, Dorothy Lee, Edward Woods and Eddie Nugent.

Mervyn LeRoy's direction of the play adaptation, was termed expert, while the adaptation itself, the work of Robert Lord, was noted as clever.

The story, replete with hokum, and plentifully be-sprinkled with laughs, of which the most was made, concerns Brown's sudden emergence from the obscurity of botony and books to the restless motion of school activities. His secret love for Dorothy Lee becomes known when a letter he has written is revealed. When she visits him, Brown is forced to live up to the reputation he had fictitiously built for himself, and goes out for the track team.

He displays unusual speed, and runs in the big meet, where, however, he suddenly exhibits a streak of "yellow," which cannot be overcome by his love for Miss Lee. The "overcoming" is accomplished, though, when Miss Hall applies a few kisses and rubbing alcohol (internally), and Brown wins the relay race, the meet and audience, by a good margin. There is plenty of slapstick in the race scenes, though it does not detract in the slightest degree from the laugh-getting qualities of the sequences.

The Beloved Bachelor

(Paramount)

Comedy-Drama

The women especially and the audience as a whole seemed to thoroughly enjoy Paul Lukas's latest effort for Paramount, when the film was shown at the Boulevard theatre on the Coast, recently.

Lukas, in the title role, was enthusiastically received, and the comedy supplied by Charlie Ruggles and Harold Minjir drew many laughs from the patrons. Dorothy Jordan and Vivienne Osborne were accorded praise for their work, and the balance of the cast was termed highly satisfactory.

Lukas, a sculptor, decides to raise Leni Stengel's child when the mother is killed, since she was a friend and his model. Miss Osborne sees him with the child, and thinking it is his own, breaks their engagement. Many years later, the child, now a woman, played by Dorothy Jordan, falls in love with Lukas, but he, still considering her a child, laughs at her feeling. But Miss Jordan, aided materially by Charlie Ruggles and Minjir, plans and executes her campaign, and Lukas returns her love.

The direction of Lloyd Corrigan received much favorable comment for the clever manner in which he handled the piece and for the maintenance of a fast pace throughout the film. Termed expert, were the adaptation of Ray Griffith and Agnes Brand Leahy and the dialogue of Sidney Buchmann.

(Tiffany)

Comedy-Drama

An audience at a theatre in San Bernardino, on the Coast, derived a great deal of pleasure from this Tiffany feature, a screen adaptation of the Ursula Parrott novel. Ex-husbands, ex-wives and ex-sweethearts form the theme of the piece, and the patrons' attention was fastened to the screen throughout the film, which was followed by sincerely appreciative applause.

Claudia Dell and Walter Byron were generously received for their work in the leads, but the supporting cast also came in for a fair share of appreciation, particularly Marjorie Rambeau and Roscoe Karns, whose comedy was deemed one of the best bits in the entire picture.

The film story concerns Claudia and Walter Byron as a couple who decide that they cannot make a go of marriage and accordingly agree to separate. Claudia is determined to be a writer and refuses alimony. A reporter, played by Roscoe Karns, asks why she refused alimony and for answer dates her for a party at which he promises will be several editors who will use her stories. The party guests, principally ex-husbands and wives, also include her ex-husband. She meets the host, Jerry, a writer of some repute and they discuss her career.

Though her stories do not sell, she refuses Jerry's help. When she finally does go to him for aid, she finds that he has become reconciled to his wife, through his love for his son. Claudia takes a job with a salary attached until her "ex" comes to the rescue.

Range Feud

(Columbia)

Western

This latest Western effort for Columbia by Buck Jones was not greeted too enthusiastically by an audience at the Forum theatre on the Coast recently.

The story concerns Jones as a sheriff, whose friend becomes involved in a range war over disputed property with the adjoining ranch owner. In a parley, Jones decides against his friend and the friendship ends. John Wayne, as the son, falls in love with the daughter of the opposing owner, and when the young man declares himself he is ordered off his father's property. The girl's father is unexpectedly killed and the boy accused of the murder.

Wayne is convicted, though Jones is himself convinced that rustlers are responsible for the murder. In attempting to capture a suspect to clear up the case, he is shot, but just succeeds in arriving at the hanging party staged for Wayne in time to discover the real perpetrator of the murder and save the boy's neck for his fiancee.

General opinion of the audience indicated that dialogue was principally to blame for the film falling short, since it served to slow the action considerably. The story, also, was thought rather indefinite, though the mystery angle was a novel idea which helped to a great extent.

Produced and distributed by Columbia. Story, adaptation and dialogue by Milton Krins. Continuity by George Plympton. Directed by Ross Lederman. Photographed by Dan Kline. Film editor, Maurice Wright. Release date, December 1, 1931. Running time, 56 minutes.

Platinum Blonde

(Columbia)

Comedy-Drama

This is Frank Capra's latest directorial effort for Columbia, with Jean Harlow in the title role and Roger Williams the center of sometimes moving and sometimes amusing events. The film was decidedly well received at a recent Coast showing.

There is perhaps a good deal more comedy than drama in the simple story, as Williams, in the role of the slow moving and smart talking reporter, supplies the ever-recurring laughs.

He is detailed to get a breach of promise suit yarn from the Schuyler family, considerably important, in its own estimation. The last thing they desire is publicity of any sort. However, the reporter succeeds, has the nerve to phone his story from the house telephone, and then proceeds to fall in love with the blonde daughter of the house, of course, Jean Harlow, who is fond of unusual men. They marry, and like it or not, he moves into the Schuyler home, and becomes "the husband of Ann Schuyler."

But it soon appears, to both of them, that members of the society elite are born, not made, and the climax comes when Williams entertains a group of his newsy friends while the Schuylers are away. Their return starts a riot, or something like one, and Williams leaves those parts to return to his pal, played by Loretta Young, whom, he realizes, he has loved from the first.

Unstinted praise was accorded the work of Williams, thought to be perfectly fitted for his role. Nor is he hampered in its execution in any way, being given every opportunity to make the most of the part, which he does. The dialogue was unusually successful with the patrons, indicating its sparkling quality. Both Miss Harlow and Miss Young were greeted, in matter of performance, with not a little praise, and Louise Hale was accounted as excellent Mrs. Schuyler. Unanimous was the verdict of merit accorded Frank Capra for his direction.

Produced and distributed by Columbia. Story by Harry E. Chandlee and Douglas W. Churchill. Adaptation by Joe Swerling. Continuity by Dorothy Howell. Dialogue by Robert Riskin. Directed by Frank Capra. Photographed by Joseph Walker. Sound engineer, Edward Bernds. Film editor, Gene Milford.

Heaven On Earth

(Universal)

Drama

If Universal will change the title of this one from "Heaven on Earth" to "Hell on a River" I'll help them talk Colonel Joy into selling the idea to General Hays.

There may be a lot of people who will be interested in the lives of "river rats" and wildcat skippers of river boats, but in spite of all the heroic efforts made to resuscitate the story with a flood at the end, which may make the producers of "Noah's Ark" envious, the water seemed to be shed in vain. It is all a little bit too unreal and uninteresting to hold attention, and down in the Democratic constituencies there may be complaints about the pseudo-southern accents attempted by some of the players.

Like "Reckless Living," which Universal previewed last week, this seems to be an attempt to make a human story with people who may be human all right enough, but who aren't very interesting. In one case it was tin horn gamblers and bookmakers. In this latter case it is a crowd of half-wits who live in the mud on the river bank, and the story relates their life-long feud with the steamboat operators who take an unreasoning delight in making them unhappy.

In spite of all Lew Ayres could do, Elizabeth Patterson did the one outstanding characterization. Harry Beresford, a splendid actor, was handicapped by an inconsistent part. Anita Louise was just blah. Her faulty accent was particularly noticeable. Russell Mack's direction was undistinguished.

Lew Ayres had a few good moments, proving his consistency as a performer when he has the opportunity, as he did in "Notre Dame." He should also be credited with having a swell mongrel pup named "Fido," who did some excellent work and should be promoted to those dog comedies.

Produced and distributed by Universal. Directed by Russell Mack. Supervised by Maurice Pivar. Continuity and dialogue by Ray Doyle. From the novel, "Mississippi," by Lucien Burman. Editor, Milton Carruth. Photographer, Charles Stumar. Release date, October 13, 1931.

(Sono Art-World Wide)

Drama

This film was found to be moderately pleasing to an audience at Loew's New York theatre, where it was seen on a double bill. The story is fair in the matter of interest, comment indicated, and the direction received a similar rating.

The cast includes Rex Lease, Blanche Mehaffey, Robert Ellis, Helen Foster and Henry B. Walthall. The story concerns the attempt on the part of Rex Lease to "get" the district attorney who sent his sister to prison though she was innocent. Lease's sister dies in prison, hence the intended vengeance.

But he decides not to go through with the design when he falls in love with the daughter of the district attorney, and assists her in living down a scandal being perpetrated against her by his brother-in-law for reasons of his own. Lease is later committed to prison for the death of his brother-in-law, which expedient was used by Lease as the only satisfactory way out of a bad situation.

The girl, however, comes to his aid and her father completes the job for the benefit of the two.

Produced and distributed by Sono Art-World Wide. Directed by Stuart Paton. Supervised by Clifford P. Broughton. Story by Betty Burbridge. Release date, October 4, 1931. Running time, 62 minutes.

Mystery

A mystery, involving two murders, and a number of possibly guilty individuals, occurs on board a ship bound from New York to Los Angeles, and is solved by Jameson Thomas as the detective who happened to be a passenger, in this second film from the Weiss Brothers, Coast independent producers.

Aileen Pringle plays the leading role, and becomes so deeply implicated that all evidence, though circumstantial, points definitely to her as the murderess. Thomas, however, happens to be in love with her, and convinced of her innocence, contrives to unearth the man who had committed the original murder for the money with which the victim had absconded from New York, and then murdered the only man who knew he had committed the first.

Supporting, in a satisfactory manner, the two leading players are Harry Meyers, Dorothy Christy, Richard Tucker and Wilfred Lucas. Christy Cabanne, who directed the film, was considered to have handled the suspensive action with reasonable success, while the actual identity of the murderer was safely hidden until the denouement, a bit of necessary plot more than a little overlooked in film mysteries.

The work of the leading players, in particular Thomas, Miss Pringle and Miss Christy, was noted as good.

Produced by Supreme Features, Inc., Ltd. Distributed by Weiss Brothers, Artclass Pictures. Directed by Christy Cabanne.

Football Thrills
(Columbia)

Great

This is far from the first of the short football series, but it comes sufficiently close to being the best of the lot to rate that title, at any rate from the standpoint of the football fan picturegoer, which is of some importance. There are six in the list, with an average running time of approximately 10 minutes. The manner in which this series differs, successfully, from the regular run lies in the fact that the footage is devoted almost exclusively to picturing numerous major teams actually in the course of their big games, rather than in highly technical practice maneuvers on their home gridiron.

Southern California, Notre Dame, Army, Washington State, all are seen engaging in major battles, before the huge, colorful crowds which add considerably to the effectiveness of the films. Perhaps the most unusual and punch-providing feature of this new series, is the synchronization of Ford Bond, NBC announcer, who accompanies the filmed games with a rapid fire description as though he were actually broadcasting over the radio from the field. He chooses salient points in the game and explains the plays in the course of his description, and with his splendid recording voice and "punchy" comment, puts a real kick into this group of shorts. In a number of the films, Knute Rockne appears, explaining special plays of his team. Photography is splendid. Claude Elliott directed the series and Leonard Mitchell very competently edited and supervised. Titles are "Air Attack," "Behind the Lines," "Backfield Strategy," "Military Tactics," "Nerve Wreckers" and "Precision."

Hocus-Pocus
(Vitaphone)

Different

Starting with the conventional ventriloquism setting, Edgar Bergen diverges from the regular run of such acts at the moment when he has a woman come to the stage for a watch-vanishing stunt. When the watch is extracted from between the layers of a ham sandwich the trick has been achieved—with the exception that it isn't the same watch, in fact, it's such a poor one that the lady in the case calls a cop. Then comes the trial. With the "dummy" on the stand, a bell rings. And out from under his coat comes a deluge of watches, rings, bracelets and other jewelry.—Running time, 10 minutes.

Battling With Buffalo Bill
(Universal)

Action Serial

Universal offers something spectacular, and something very exciting from the youngster standpoint in this new serial, which has much to do with the life of William F. ("Buffalo Bill") Cody. However, adults have probably seen it all before in the early Indian pictures, with the redskins attacking the white settlers, and the soldiers riding hard to the rescue, with Buffalo Bill as their scout. The Indians whoop it up in great style, the villains do their worst as though they meant it, and the youngsters, far and wide, should let go with the full power of their collective lung. The first episode, "Captured by Redskins," unleashes the full strength of the action plus, and while the following two, "Circling Death" and "Between Hostile Tribes" let down a bit, they are still strong enough by far to bring the younger generation back for more. Tom Tyler plays Buffalo Bill, while in the supporting cast are Lucille Brown, Rex Bell, William Desmond, Francis Ford and Jim Thorpe, well known Indian athlete of another day. The serial contains 12 episodes in all. Ray Taylor handled the direction.—Running time, 17 minutes, each episode.

Fried Chicken
(Terry-Toon)

Amusing

One of the commendably interesting angles of the Terry-Toon cartoons is that the music is not blatant or jarring. This particular issue has a Southern setting which is carried out in the singing. While there is no particular sequence to the cartooned events, at least the hero wins his sweetheart and that's sufficient.—Running time, 7 minutes.

A Journey Through Germany
(Standard Film)

Interesting

This Ideal production, presented by M. J Kandel, lives up to the virtues of its predecessors in the series by giving a straightforward pictorial story of a trip through Cologne, Munich and Dresden. An auditory description and a musical background add to the picture.—Running time, 10 minutes.

The Utmost Isle
(RKO Pathe)

Interesting

The third of the new series of Vagabond Adventure travel shorts, formerly done by Tom Terris, now supervised by Elmer Clifton. This one is concerned with the island of Ceylon, and pictures in interesting fashion the scenery, temples and customs of the people who flock the streets. Oxen here take the place of horses or motor cars. The accompanying dialogue is well rendered and tells something of the modes and manners of a people which dates its origin back many centuries.—Running time, 11 minutes.

Torchy

Fine

Educational has something in the juvenile comedy line in this "Torchy" series of the famous Sewell Ford stories, with Ray Cooke, bright youngster in the title role. Here we find the most enjoyable Torchy, the office boy, hired, fired and hired again, by reason of his smart escapades and excessive willingness. When his boss asks him to buy a birthday present for his daughter, Torchy takes as advisor a girl in the outside office, who unknown to Torchy, is the daughter herself. Supporting cast is good, and Torchy should be throughly appealing to anyone, young or old.—Running time, 21 minutes.

Fast and Furious
(Universal)

Slapstick

What this comedy lacks in cleverness and real amusement, it makes up in sheer slapstick. Both masculine and feminine players are decorated with pies, kicked, hit with furniture, thrown into wash tubs and scalded with hot water. Charles La Monte directed. The thing is explained when it is discovered that Daphne Pollard plays the lead. Hardly funny.—Running time, 19 minutes.

Thanks Again
(RKO Pathe)

Good

Ed Kennedy in one of RKO Pathe's "Average Man" comedy series, with Ed doing amusingly well as the average man, beset by a chattering wife, an annoying mother-in-law and a pestiferous brother-in-law. He attempts to build an airplane and live with the "family" in the hangar at the same time. This, naturally enough, is sufficient setting for all sorts of possibly amusing situations. They are all there, and many of them are humorous, though repetition of particular bits becomes tiresome. Good comedy.—Running time, 20 minutes.

The Starbrite Diamond
(Educational)

Good

One of the William J. Burns "Detective Mysteries," in which is revealed the solving of the sudden disappearance of a valuable diamond from a wall safe at a house party. Burns appears merely initially, indicates the case and then the scene shifts to the home and the circumstances of the robbery. Enacted without outside explanation, the short is of interest and to an extent suspensive. Rather worth while.—Running time, 11 minutes.

Mickey Steps Out
(Columbia)

Fun

Mickey, the animated mouse, goes jazz with a vengeance while Minnie supplies the music and inspiration. Gained a number of laughs in New York, and good synchronization does its part.—Running time, 8 minutes.

20,000 Legs Under the Sea
(Paramount)

Good

A Talkertoon number from which an audience at the New York Paramount extracted a great deal of enjoyment. The animated fishes and sharks at the bottom of the sea have a great time, and the conclusion is amusing when they all make their way to the canning depot. Synchronization is good.—Running time, 8 minutes.

Madeira
(MGM)

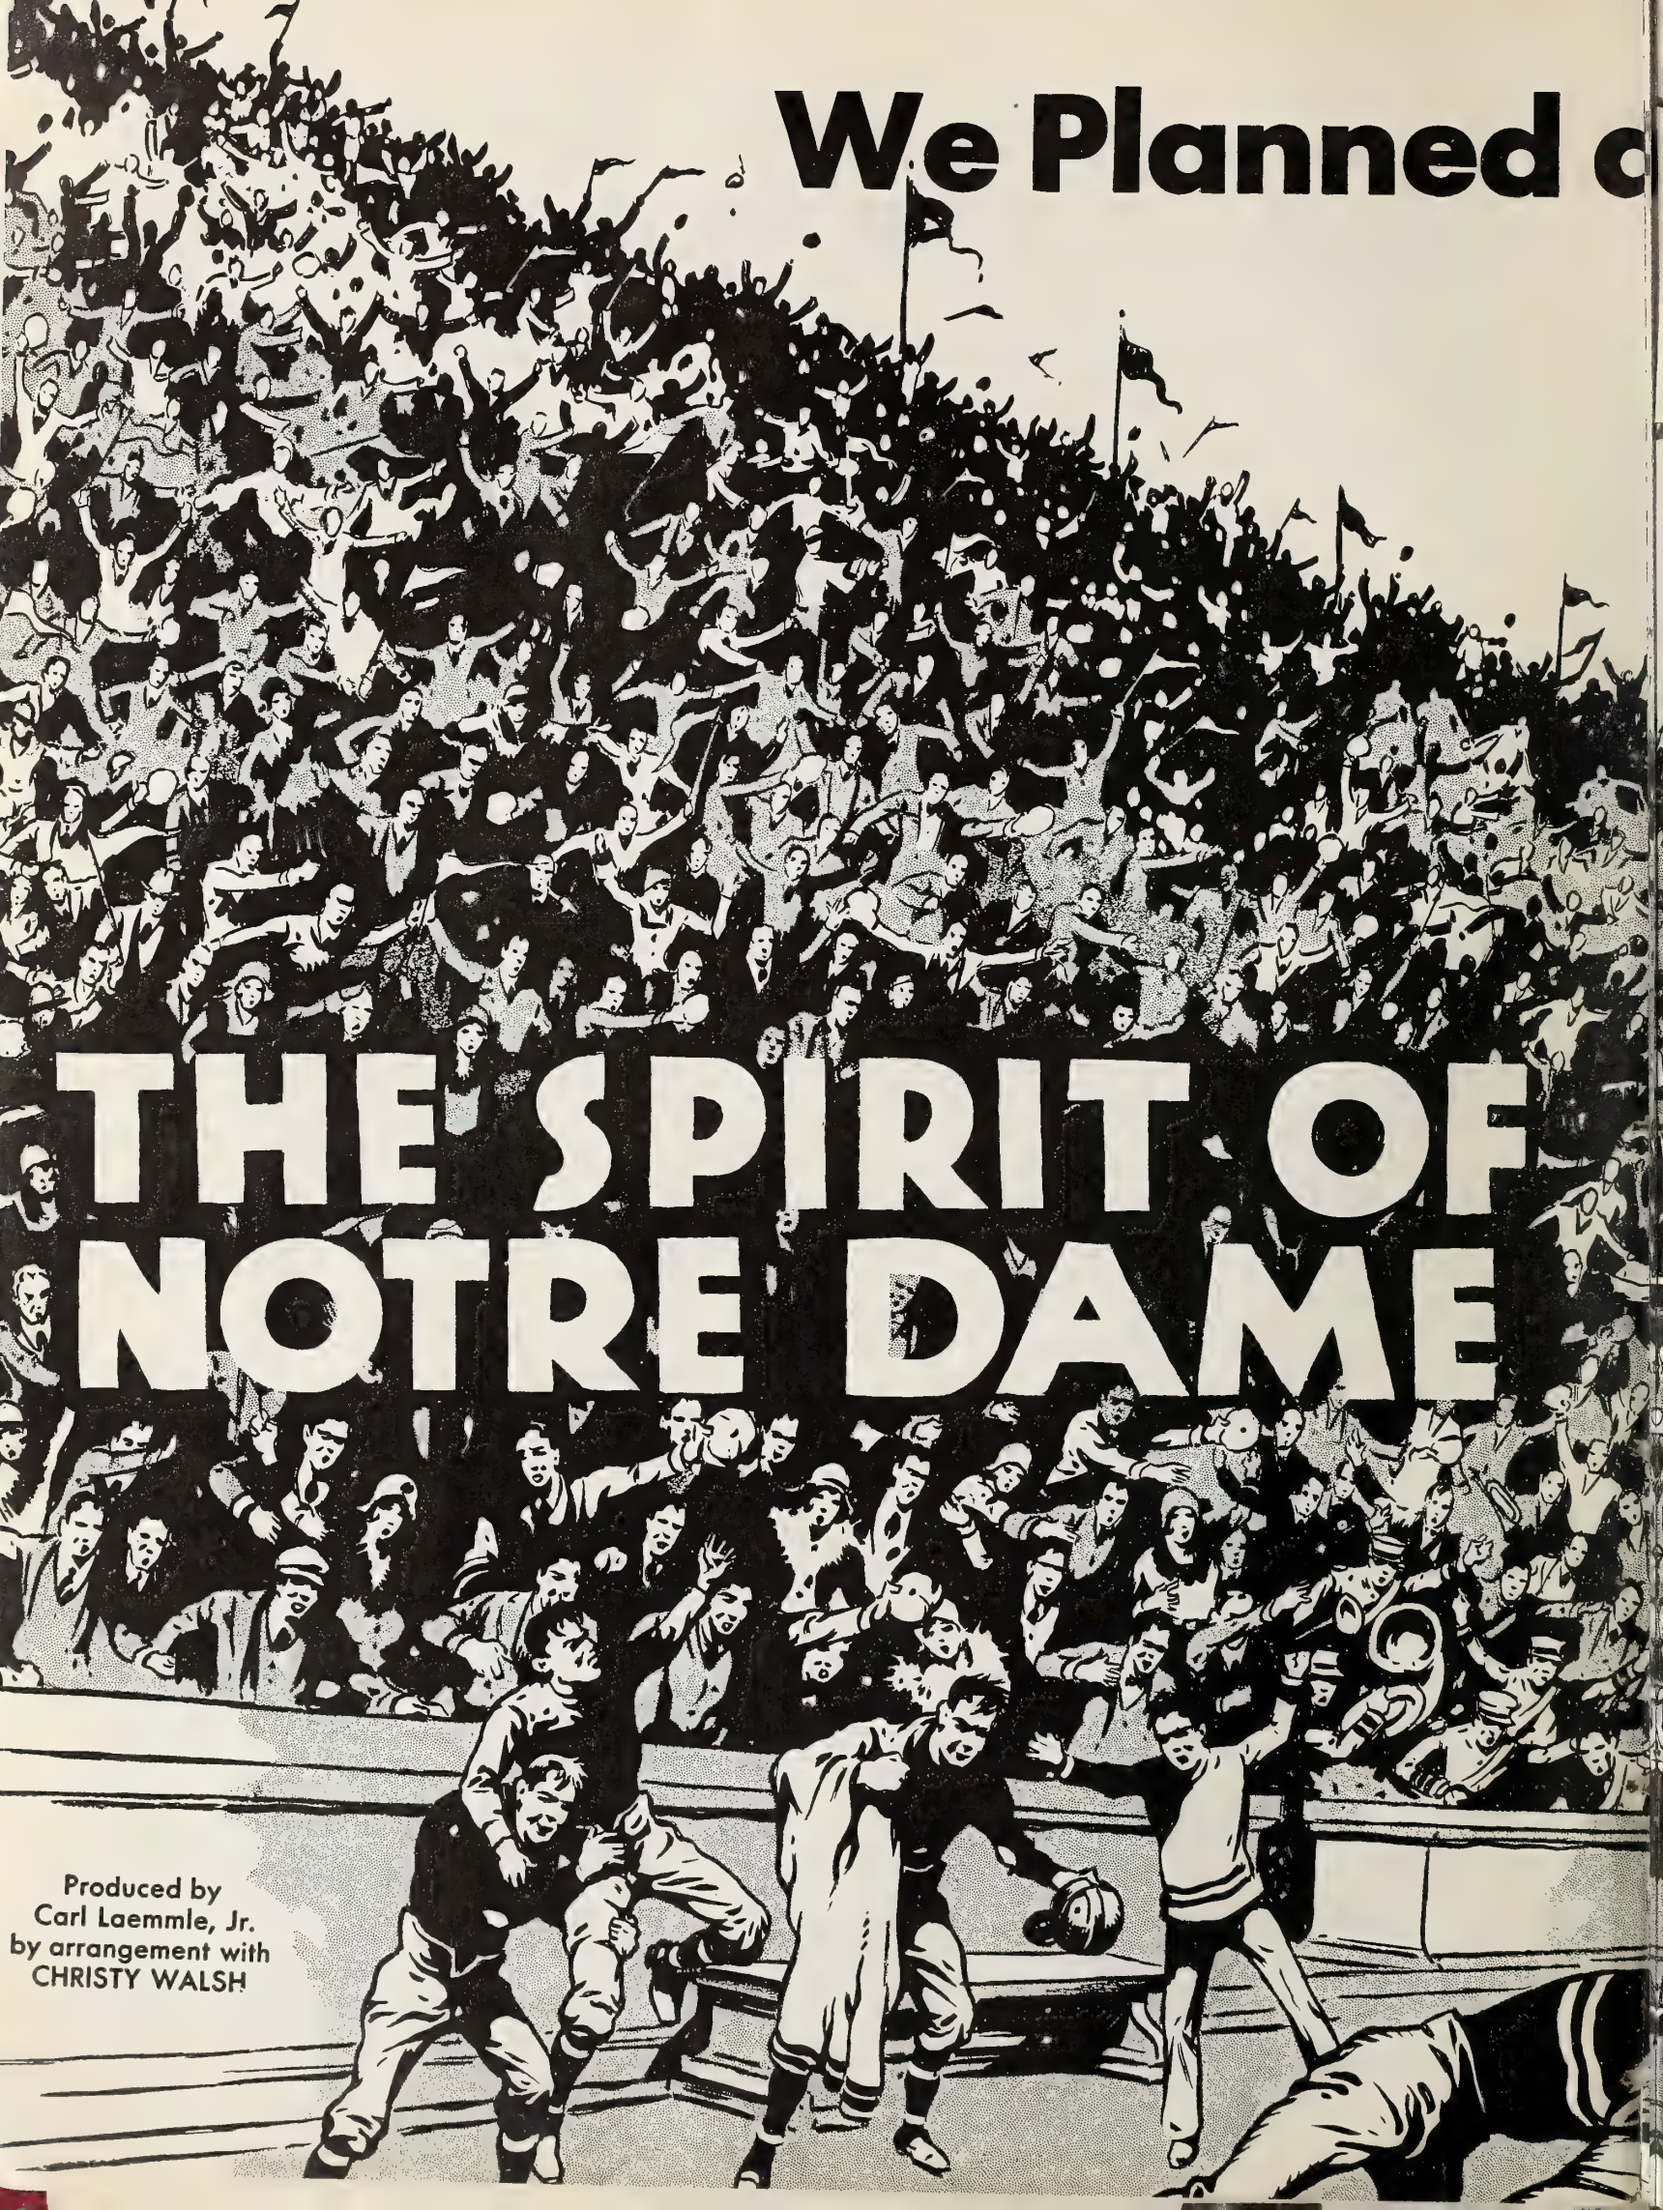
Interesting

One of the Fitzpatrick travel series, and like the others, an interesting subject. It is a silent, but a running fire of accompanying dialogue by the producer keeps the interest high. Shows shots of quaint streets in Funchal, capital of Madeira, and a few splendid shots of the Atlantic. Worth playing.

The Cat's Nightmare
(Columbia)

Clever

A clever piece of cartoon work, typical Silly Symphony number. The theme is as the title suggests, and animators have taken full advantage of its laugh-making possibilities.



Jazz Mad
(Educational)

Fair

A Paul Terry-Toon number, which is not strikingly unusual in idea or execution, yet has a few fair laugh spots, particularly when the various kinds of meat and fowl in the butcher shop, respond to the stimulant of the wandering animal street band. Fair enough as an animated.—Running time, 6 minutes.

THEATRE RECEIPTS

Theatre receipts from 29 key cities of the country for the current week in the HERALD'S compilation indicates a definite return to the upward swing of theatre business which has marked these reports for some weeks past. The total figure for the 29 cities this week reached $2,392,313 as compared to a total for the previous seven day period of $2,318,525, a gain for this week of $73,788. This week's compilation showed two new high figures, in Albany and Los Angeles, while only one was recorded last week. Two new low figures this week bettered last week's showing of three new lows.

And Lincoln might have added

You can't fool yourself any of the time

YOU may fool the public some of the time, but you can't fool yourself any of the time. Size up your show. Has it balance? variety? speed? spontaneity? sparkle? color? class? If not, you'll be the first to get hep. Then set about pleasing yourself. Remember that the balance of box-office power is in your short features. Use a comedy and two or three one-reel novelties. Vary the showings. Mix 'em up.

See that you have a trade-marked show, short features of the Educational Pictures brand. That means cumulative value in screen, fan and national advertising. Eleven years of specialization and concentration by Educational have pre-sold and made sure-fire the short feature part of your program.

MACK SENNETT

brings Radio's latest great crooning sensation to the screen in a sensational short comedy

BING CROSBY

in

"I SURRENDER, DEAR"

They'll never forget the baron of baritones singing his favorite number.

"Torchy" is back!

HOLLYWOOD SPECTATOR SAYS:

"I have seen several of them and from each of them I learned more about football than I had picked up in any other way. And I was interested, more so than I ever can remember being in a short picture . . . Here we have good showmanship. Exhibitors will make no mistake in booking the series." . . .

A FRANK STATEMENT OF POLICY

Before the present selling season opened, we made it clear to the exhibitors of the country that United Artists preferred to have you see our pictures before you bought them. We meant exactly what we said. We wanted to sell each picture individually after its box-office quality was thoroughly tested. This may be a revolutionary sales method but it is the only policy on which a quality product can be properly and honestly sold.

Although many exhibitors still prefer to buy our complete output in advance on faith without screening, we do not willingly sell that way, for we feel that great pictures deserve the most intelligent handling and this can be obtained only if an exhibitor knows exactly the importance and the value of the picture that he is buying. Every exhibitor wants to play every demonstrated box-office hit. That is why theatres throughout the country are clamoring for STREET SCENE and PALMY DAYS. They are demonstrated box-office hits and as such are entitled to a rental commensurate with their box-office value.

If, on occasion, we are unfortunate enough to make a picture that doesn't click at the box-office, you are not in any way obligated to buy it.

But when the real hits come along, the wise showman never hesitates to pay what those hits are worth. He realizes that he can well afford to pay up to 50% of his gross for a genuine hit whereas a poor or mediocre picture at only 25% of the gross is an unprofitable investment for him.

We expect the exhibitors to make real money on our pictures, and the thinking, far-sighted exhibitor knows that the producer of hits is likewise entitled to a substantial profit so that he can continue to turn out box-office smashes.

The motion picture business lives and grows through box-office successes. United Artists devotes its entire resources and energies to the exclusive production of great box-office attractions. This Company doesn't make a great quantity of pictures. It makes exclusively a quality product that has consistently built box-office receipts. This season is again demonstrating the superiority of this method of production.

1. STREET SCENE is doing a tremendous business all over the country. It has been held over for a sixth week in New York, fourth week in Chicago, and has had two weeks' runs in Detroit, Philadelphia, Milwaukee, Los Angeles, Montreal and Washington.

2. Eddie Cantor in PALMY DAYS is out-whooping "Whoopee".

3. Ronald Colman in THE UNHOLY GARDEN is demonstrating in previews that Samuel Goldwyn has brought to the exhibitors a Colman picture so teeming with action that it will set a new high box-office record for Colman productions.

Real box-office smashes are few and far between. You cannot afford to miss any of them. Here are three demonstrated hits that will build your box-office gross, and make you realize that a great picture is the only answer to your box-office problem. Book these winners now and cash in on our tremendous national exploitation campaigns.

CHICAGO

This is the story of an exhibitor whose timely action and practical thinking stopped a bank run, brought relief to the minds of hundreds of his patrons and incidentally cemented further that greatest of all exhibitor assets—public good will. The exhibitor is Ludwig Sussman, owner of the Adelphi theatre, and the story opens with a scene of pandemonium on the closing of a neighborhood bank. While hundreds stormed the institution and runs on other nearby banks were threatened, Sussman came to the front with the announcement that his theatre would be thrown open the same evening for a general mass meeting of depositors. The news of the bank closing had become generally known at 5:30 in the evening and Mr. Sussman's notice posted shortly thereafter. At 7 o'clock Sussman stopped ticket sales and admitted anxious depositors of the bank free of charge and continued his show with the announcement that following the completion of the program officials of the closed bank and other neighboring banks would appear on the stage to explain the situation. As a result a situation which would almost certainly have precipitated a run on other nearby banks the following morning was avoided and reassuring information given to the 1,600 persons of the neighborhood.

CONDUCTED BY AN EXHIBITOR FOR EXHIBITORS

Lend Me Your Ears!

JOBS are so scarce these days . . . and getting scarcer . . . that every man who has one should do everything possible to nurse it along and keep it healthy and productive of that weekly stipend. . . . Don't develop "ants in the pants" and get the itch to move to some other outfit. . . . Let well enough alone and use plenty of flit to kill the ants. . .

If the Unemployment Committee really means business, we suggest they start looking into the house managers situation . . . the large numbers of unemployed and the now meager salaries of those fortunate enough to have jobs. . . . It will provide them with much food for thought plus reason for plenty of action. . . .

Only a few short years ago the men who are held responsible for the operation of large and expensive investments in the form of theatres, were earning salaries averaging close to a hundred dollars a week. . . . Then came national circuits . . . and soon after came salary slashing of a variety that was nothing short of criminal. . . . And the practice is still very much in vogue among the so-called efficiency men of the circuits. . . . In fact you will find . . . and without any great amount of investigation . . . that even the house managers getting in the neighborhood of about fifty dollars a week, are being let out for assistants and ex-doormen who will take the job for thirty or thirty-five. . . .

Yes . . . there is plenty of work for the Committee . . . providing they really want to relieve a tough situation and possibly remedy a tougher one, too. . . .

National Screen Service is deserving of much praise for the compilation of their latest booklet, "Building Patronage." . . . What we were particularly impressed with was the portion devoted to Exploitation. . . . Every showman owes it to himself . . . and his theatre . . . to look through a copy of this book. . . . You'd be surprised to know the many fine ideas suggested . . . and practical, too. . . .

Premiums and giveaways have been the subject of much discussion for quite a while now . . . so it's time you gave the matter some consideration or proceeded to forget about it entirely. . . .

I've always been dead against such gags . . . you know . . . worked along on the theory that if the picture won't bring 'em in nothing else will. . . . Well . . . I've found out that I've had the wrong slant. . . . Premiums will bring them in and can do your house a lot of good . . . but be sure of what you select and who you are doing business with. . . .

The industry is swamped right now with a bunch of fly-by-night outfits all anxious to hook the innocent exhibitor (are there any left???) . . . so it behooves us all to use much judgment and less haste. . . . Find out a little about the merchandise you want to give away . . . Also,—the cost on the contract is not all . . . there's express charges . . . C.O.D. charges . . . crating . . . or what have you. . . .

Premiums have really helped a lot of exhibitors . . . possibly . . . we say possibly . . . it may be a boon for you . . . but watch whom you do business with and don't give away a bunch of junk. . . .

Warren Slee of the W & V outfit in Richmond, Va., has built up the morale of his staff by encouraging his employees to give a little better than their best for the house. . . . As a reward for such effort, Warren offers a free trip to Washington, D C., plus a ticket to the ball game. . . . Come on you Morale Builders . . . trump this one. . . .

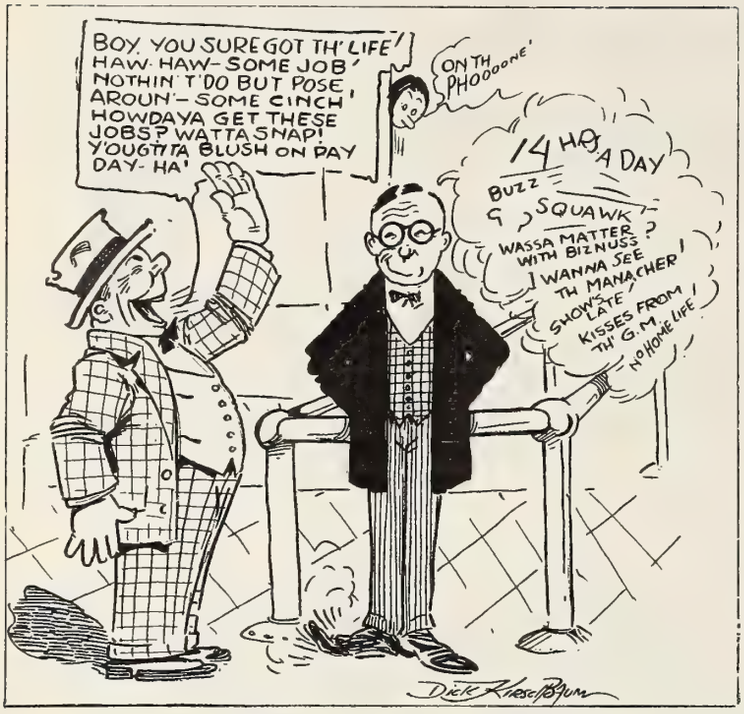
Showmanship, exploitation, merchandising or just plain selling; call it whatever you like. . . . Some take exception to one or the other of the names we call 'plugging for business," but as Cleopatra once chirped . . . "a rose by another name is still . . . a rose." . . .

What you want to call your various activities is of mighty little concern . . . it's the success you achieve in doing it that counts. . . . H. B. Franklin, in listing a group of great b.o. pictures, said: "Grand Merchandise" . . . so I guess H. B. will be shot. . . . Joe Brandt, in discussing the future of movie theatres, said: "Merchandising will do the trick" . . . or words to that effect . . . so poor Joe, without realizing it, was getting in dutch. . .



Let's forget all about the proper name for bringing patrons to the theatre and selling tickets . . . let the b.o. do the talking for you . . . but DO SOMETHING . . . don't sit on your hands and bellyache about poor business . . . the business is all around you and just waiting for a smart showman to get it into his house. . . . Good pictures, plus intelligent show-selling, will do the trick. . . .

If you missed reading Martin Quigley's editorial, "Shows or Sausages," in last week's Herald, you passed up one of the most truthful and pointed descriptions of the industry today. . . . "The heart of the picture business has always been and will always be—showmanship." . . . said Mr. Quigley . . . and if everyone in this business would only realize the truth of those words . . . we might still get back to something resembling a normal condition. . . . "Chick"

The "Dear-Dumb" Public!

Prytz Keeps Tab On Picture Detail With Good System

We feel that the following method of keeping tab on exploitation, outlined from the scheme followed by Roy Prytz, manager of the Granada Theatre, Duluth, Minn., will be of particular interest to the publicity man or manager responsible for the success of several houses located in one city; however, there doesn't seem to be any reason why it could not also be recommended as an efficient system for any one house to put in effect if there be need for it.

Each time he receives a number of confirmed play dates, haste is made to obtain press books on all. Then he takes a morning when undivided attention can be given them and thoroughly digests all sales angles, together with combing through two complete scrapbooks which contain all practical ideas clipped from Round Table Club pages and stunts used in past campaigns. Each picture is studied from every angle, proper line of action is decided and then attention is directed to a box containing cards indexed from 1 to 31. All the stunts are listed on a card and if the picture plays the 20th the card is filed under 10th, as first action would be taken that many days in advance. In the meantime, if he has another inspiration it is marked down on the card before it's forgotten. Every morning cards of the day are taken out and placed under the glass top of the desk, where it is impossible for one not to see and act on the several activities noted. After the campaign is complete the card is filed for a thorough record on each picture.

What Prytz has particularly in mind is a fool-proof system whereby the manager of five houses or so can keep up with all detail on the exploitation of several pictures every day. It naturally follows that the man responsible for results from five theatres in a fairly large city has five features to sell at one time. If located in a smaller community where pictures are changed three times a week, he is required to look after the exploitation of fifteen features. It is impossible to depend upon mental or even scratch pad notations to keep up with the never ceasing parade of detail and he offers his plan to Club members with the idea of not only stimulating other suggestions but with the hope that it will prove beneficial to some other member. So come on, Round Tablers, if you can add to or improve upon Roy's scheme in any way, shoot along your ideas and we'll pass them back to him. In the meantime, we're waiting.

A Bargain Matinee Tie With Merchant Was Help To LaBar

Matinee trade was perceptibly increased by F. LaBar, Jr., manager of the Imperial Theatre, Asheville, N. C., through a tie-up with a merchant on a ticket bargain sale on the occasion of "Mother's Millions."

The merchant ran an ad offering the sale of 500 theatre tickets at the price of 1c each; two to a customer. The tickets were good for the Monday showing between 11 A. M. and 1 P. M.

The store ran the ad in both papers on Friday, The Saturday morning Citizen, the Sunday paper in a box above their regular ad and then again in Monday morning's Citizen, the day of the sale and the opening day of picture.

The novelty value of women patrons reading about the remarkable fact of theatre tickets for sale by a department store excited unusual curiosity about the picture. In short, the sale amounted to a preview of the picture, attended by a large crowd of women who felt they secured a wonderful bargain and who consequently were in the best frame of mind to enjoy the picture.

Even though there were many women unable to secure the tickets at the bargain price, they were determined to see the picture just the same. The word-of-mouth comment also helped considerably in putting over the picture to excellent receipts.

According to the above the ladies reacted the same as when attending a dollar sale of dresses and even when the tickets ran out the stunt acted just like a snowball rolling down hill. It was a good one, LaBar, and we want to hear more about the work you are turning out for the Imperial.

Holt Inaugurates New Season Under Brand New Slogan

Instead of resorting to use of the old familiar "Greater Movie Season" slogan to announce new season product, Nat Holt, City Manager for Fox-West Coast in Wichita, Kas., started the drive under the title of "A New Show Year."

Apparently his reason for launching his campaign under a new name was that he felt that the old one was beginning to show signs of wear and tear, and that it was time to feed the public something different. As we write these few lines the drive just completed its first week and splendid results testify to the efficiency of his work.

Fox Wichita Theatres Inaugurate

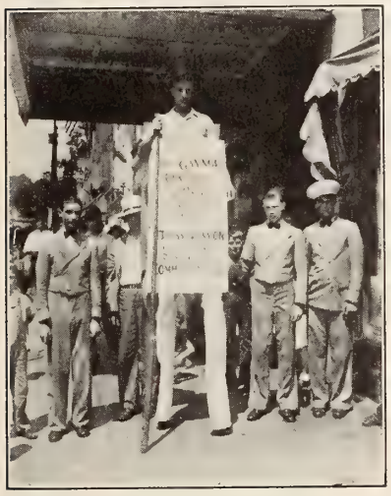
A NEW Show YEAR!

HOLLYWOOD STUDIOS

A SEASON of CERTIFIED PICTURES

A PARADE OF STARS!
A PARADE OF SUPER PICTURES!
The greatest in all film history!

Let's go!



As a part of the campaign a big splurge was made in the local newspaper, a whole section being devoted to merchant tie-ups, theatre ads and stories and photos on current and coming attractions. All merchant ads tied up with "New Show Year," as for example a sundae called "Show-Me" and small "Show Year" cuts in other ads. We are reproducing the first page of the section which, we believe, you will all agree was nicely worked out. You probably won't be able to read Nat's message but he outlined new season plans and signed his name to the article.

The above was only a portion of the campaign, the balance being devoted to window displays in all retail stores; flash fronts for theatres; banners on all street cars and busses, etc. This is all we can tell you of Holt's efforts right now and it seems to us that the main point to bring out is that he injected a new spirit into a more or less standardized form of drive. For details concerning the final outcome we will await a further communication.

Old Stilt Stunt Was Used To Good Effect By Parker

Prior to moving over to Torrington, Conn., where he and Johnny Scanlon are in charge of all Warner theatres, we believe most of you are aware that Jerry Parker was at the helm of the Commodore Hull Theatre in Darby, Conn., where he put over some live-wire exploitation stunts.

He played "Daddy Long Legs" just before leaving Darby and found that the old stilt gag was a most effective means of attracting attention to this picture. The only cost of the bally you see in the accompanying illustration was attached to the renting of high hat and long pants and this amounted to about $1, an utterly negligible item when compared with results.

A tie-up was also made with a druggist when he played "Night Angel," a window display explaining rules of contest and tying up with theatre, picture, etc.; but we cannot go into details on this because there's no dope at hand. Maybe he'll tell you if you're interested.

And when he opened a new serial, he used the old lucky card number gag, with which you are all familiar, to attract advance attention from the kiddies.

Most any one can afford to take a chance with that stilt stunt of Parker's and if the same results as his are achieved we are sure that any one who wishes to try it will be more than satisfied. In the meantime, we'll be waiting to hear what Jerry and Johnny are doing for Warners in Torrington.

Jack Goodwin Tied With Ball Team To Increase Patronage

Jack Goodwin of the Ritz Theatre, Scranton, Pa., has put over several tie-ups that have resulted in increased patronage.

One of these tie-ups is with the local baseball club. Tickets, consecutively numbered are issued to all purchasers of reserved seat cushions of which three lucky numbers are picked each day; the winners getting a pair of guest tickets each. In return, the ball club permits the posting of three 3-sheet boards within the grounds and makes an announcement at the end of the 7th inning relative to the current shows at the Ritz. Total cost of this stunt is $12.75 for 5,000 tickets which will cover entire season of activity.

A permanent tie-up was secured with an ice company whereby they display half sheet cards on each side of their five trucks. These cards advertise the current vaudeville and picture attractions

Indoor Fair Was A Result-Getter For Amos In Nashville

An indoor fair held for a full week in theatre lobby and foyer materially helped Charles Amos, manager of the Paramount Theatre, Nashville, Tenn., swell box office receipts over this period.

The local newspaper and 17 merchants sponsored the fair; the newspaper contributing four front-page stories in advance and giving daily publicity in regards to the fair throughout fair week. The merchants decorated and built booths in the lobby and foyer as well as giving away souvenirs daily.

The merchants also gave away $1,000 in prizes. The prizes were given twice daily from the stage and capital prizes being given on Saturday, the last day of fair. The winners of prizes were determined by the number on their ticket stubs; the tickets being taken from a barrel by a small boy on the stage.

This was not a new stunt for Amos for reason that he did the very same thing when managing a theatre in Asheville. It was good there and it proved equally attractive to Nashville people. It boosted attendance to a marked degree and the merchants were entirely satisfied with their end of the deal. As you all know, Charley Amos is an energetic showman and you've often read of his live-wire methods of selling shows. We shall hope to be able to continue to present other examples of his ability.

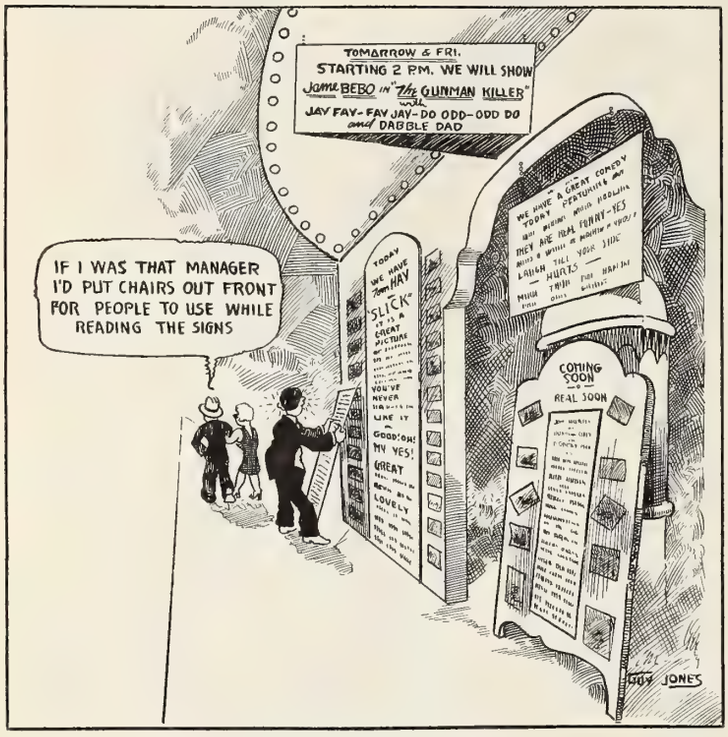
Earle Oscar Used Open Letter When He Raised Tariff

The back cover of his program was one medium used by Earle Oscar, manager of the Ritz Theatre, Athens, Ala., to send an open letter to patrons regarding a raise in admission. It's simple and direct, and as Earle states—"you might just as well tell 'em." In case others are up against the same conditions as he, it is possible that the form he used will be interesting. Here it is:

"We have tried Everything we could think of to Keep the Ritz open during the tough time we all have been having—We tried cutting prices and we lost more than ever so we simply must go back to our former prices if we stay open.



"We are sure you want us to remain open and we wanted to please, because that's what we're here for—but hereafter and starting today (Monday) July 6th our prices will be"——(prices follow below)

Comparing some of the Ritz programs we have on hand, we are forced to conclude that those printed in his local shop are just as attractive as a sample of one made up by a printer in the largest city in his state. As a matter of fact, the local job appears the best. Both are done in two-color and copy and mats stand out clearly.

We like the way Oscar came right out and put the facts before his public and as long as this depression lasts (some of the big shots up this way are telling us Fall trade is going to be great) there may be others who are thinking of getting out a similar message and will find an inspiration in the one which is reprinted above. We're mighty sorry to learn that Louis Rosenbaum, general manager of the Mussel Shoals Theatres, met with that auto accident and hope he has completely recovered by this time.

Did Someone Say, "Amen"?

Striking Displays of Beds Exploited Pictures For McKoy

Beds have figured prominently in recent campaigns made by James H. McKoy, manager of the Olympia Theatre, Miami, Fla., and we don't mean he's been using them for sleeping purposes, either. He's too busy a showman to do much of that. But what he has been doing is promoting them from local furniture dealers for exploitation of two pictures.

For "Smiling Lieutenant" a leading department store displayed in one of their windows a complete bedroom suite together with cut-outs of Chevalier as a background. The display carried out the effect of a girl having just left the bedroom to take a bath—with slippers, stockings and lingerie thrown over the bed. Two notes, plainly and large enough to read, were also in the window and carried some very snappy copy culled from lines in the picture which tied up perfectly with the situation. A little risque but certainly effective.

Cards alongside of the notes read: "These two unusual messages spell drama at the Olympia Theatre where Maurice Chevalier will be seen in his latest picture, 'The Smiling Lieutenant,' which plays August 8-11. This window also means prizes to clever feminine movie fans; passes to the picture, slippers, stockings, pajamas and garters to the best 25 responses to the following three requests."

The requests for prizes: (a) Spell correctly the name of the actress who plays the role of Franzi in "The Smiling Lieutenant." (b) List correctly five photoplays in which she has appeared. These may be either silent or talking, or a combination of both. (c) Tell us in 200 words or less the type of role in which she most appeals to you and why you think such portrayals will enhance her career as a star.

The window contest closed on the closing day of picture; it being necessary that all replies be deposited in the ballot box at the lingerie department on the second floor by that time.

Orchestrations of the two big song hits in the picture were given to four prominent orchestras. The orchestras featured these numbers particularly during the hours of broadcast as well as mentioning that these two numbers could be heard in Chevalier's picture coming to the Olympia Saturday, August 8.

Three thousand locally made special heralds were given an effective distribution. The heralds showed a cut of Chevalier pointing to a piece of garter which is attached above his thumb. Copy on these heralds: "Two Women! One gives her hand and the other her garter! And is everybody happy? What would you give if you were his girl?" And then followed copy about star, picture, theatre and playdates.

When he played "Confessions of a Co-Ed" a lobby display was made of twin beds, a lounging chair, dressing table and mirror with background of beaver-board and window effect in the center.

On each of the two beds was a cut-out of a girl with hands raised holding an opened book which read, "Confessions of a Co-Ed." Between the two beds was an announcement card stating that the picture opened Saturday and on the other side was a card giving credit to the store furnishing the display. The same store had a similar display in one of their windows during the showing of picture.

At another furniture department store there was a window display showing a six-sheet cut-out. This was used on a bed as it was a bit too large to use on a standard chaise lounge.

McKoy also had stills in five downtown drug stores in connection with cosmetic displays.

That tie-up on the Chevalier picture was a corker, Mack, and it's no wonder you had the public interested. We can also guess that the contest added to the general effectiveness of the scheme. From the calibre of work done by McKoy since he has been in charge of the Olympia, it's a cinch he's been setting a fast pace for any one to follow. Here's hoping he keeps it up and doesn't forget to tip his fellow showmen off to a lot more good ideas.

Classified Stunt And Subscription Tie Aid Drachman

Two stunts recently worked by Roy P. Drachman, manager of the Opera House Theatre, Tucson, Ariz., greatly helped to put over "Secret Call" and "Magnificent Lie."

On the former the newspaper ran three nine-inch ads featuring cut of Peggy Shannon with phone headgear on head. Copy announced that phone numbers were scattered among the classified ads and that persons finding their number and making the proper identification would be given guest tickets.

A girl was employed to do a lot of personal telephoning; she calling practically every number in the phone book. The girl used a low mysterious tone and told her listeners, "This is a secret call—Meet me tonight at the Opera House," and then hung up.

About thirty phone operators were guests of the management at an early showing of the picture. They started talking about the picture which further helped to spread the news about town. In fact, both newspapers commented upon these operators attending an early showing of the picture.

He tied up with the newspaper for a subscription stunt on the latter picture, the theatre receiving two 12-inch ads on the picture that made no mention of newspaper in any way.

In return for running these ads, Drachman admitted the newsboys as guests of the theatre provided each one brought in a subscription. This stunt didn't cost anything as there usually is ample room in the front rows where the kids were seated.

Both of the above stunts aided Drachman in the selling of these pictures and so we are passing them along for other members to try out. He's an active member of this organization and we will be looking forward to hearing more about his work out in Tucson.

ROUND TABLE BIOGRAPHIES

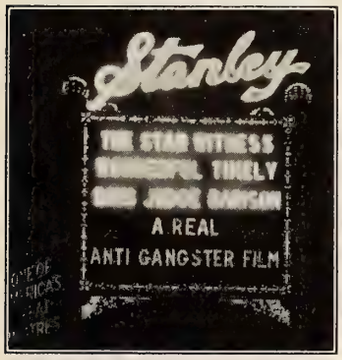
Harold Blumenthal proved that a man can save enough money to buy a partnership in a theatre and unload it at a later date at a handsome profit, for that's what he and his associate recently did with the Rex Theatre over in East Rutherford, N. J.

Harold Blumenthal

He started in the amusement business at the age of 20 years and went into the game because he liked it. He has acted as booker, supervisor and manager with the circuits of Harris Brothers, Fabian, Stanley Company of America and Warner Brothers in New Jersey; and prior to operating the Rex had charge of the Montauk and Capitol Theatres in Passaic, N. J.

In addition to being a loyal supporter of the Round Table Club and a regular contributor to its columns, Blumenthal is an active member of several fraternal organizations, including the Masons, K. of P., Elks, Kiwanis, Pica Club and the N.V.A. He was born in Paterson, N. J., February 22, 1898, and was educated in Paterson schools. He is planning a new venture in show business.

Carroll Put Over A Strong Campaign On "Star Witness"



Just before leaving the Stanley Theatre, Jersey City, N. J., to become executive-assistant to George Skouras, of Paramount-Skouras Theatres, Charles P. Carroll put over an effective campaign on "Star Witness."

Seven days in advance of picture an immense book resembling a bible was placed in the lobby and in the middle spread appeared copy relating to a letter from the "Star Witness" from Old Soldiers' Home, Kearney, N. J. It was headed, "An Open Letter to the People of Hudson County" and contained the statement made by the witness prior to testifying at trial. Just before closing a paragraph stated, "Friday, I'll tell the whole inside story at the Stanley Theatre." This was on the right-hand page and the left carried the "swearing in" oath and a quotation from George Elliott—"Justice is like the Kingdom of God; it is not without us as a fact; it is within us as a great yearning." Herald replicas of the book were made and distributed through the county, the front cover carrying copy relating to picture, theatre and playdates.

Larry Conley

Two days in advance he held a special preview of the picture for mayors, chiefs of police, prosecutor, heads of detective squads, clergy, members of bar, judges, civic lights, etc. The invitation was in letter form and went on to state that the film had the endorsement of the District Attorney of Los Angeles County, Calif., and discoursed at length on the campaign against crime. A similar letter was mailed to lawyers and counsellors. The newspapers played up the preview with a three-column story and photograph of celebrities attending the event, together with several other single column stories. The large electric sign atop the theatre bore an endorsement of picture by a local judge.

Burton Hoffman has taken Carroll's place at the Stanley and Larry Conley is still on the job as managing director. We'd like to call your attention to a classy little throw-away gotten out by Hoffman, a reproduction of which appears on this page. It was printed in blue against a white background and on coated stock. We believe you'll admit it's a mighty attractive little ad. And what about you, Larry Conley? How about dropping the Club a line now and then in order that your fellow showmen will know what you are doing to send the big house over the top.

Carroll is at present down in Pittsburgh on the new job but we understand he will not be permanently located in any one city. He did a great job publicizing the Stanley and on behalf of all Club members we wish him unlimited success with his new connection. He has a worthy successor at the Stanley in the person of Burton Hoffman and we hope that both he and Carroll will continue to be active members of this organization.

HOW TO STAGE A FASHION SHOW!

A limited number of typewritten copies of a successfully staged Fashion and Style Show is available upon request at Club headquarters.

They won't last long and we may not get a chance to make up others. So if you want some dope on how to organize and put over one of these box-office smashes, sit yourself down and write right away. First come—first served!

We assume that most progressive showmen are getting set for an event of this sort. It's one of those cooperative tie-ups that take in so many merchants and possesses so many fine newspaper slants that it's well worth working for.

Even at this early date we have already received several campaigns on these Style Shows. Others ought to get the idea under way as soon as possible.

Hadden Advertised "Everything Rosie" With Bill Of Fare

An advertising tie-up with a restaurant netted J. S. Hadden, manager of the Paramount Theatre, Joplin, Mo., a great help to focus the public eye on "Everything's Rosie."

The cafe printed and distributed through two attractively looking girls, 400 menu cards daily with theatre imprint and current attraction and play dates. These were passed out in all down town offices and stores.

Of these 400 menu cards, twenty were marked which entitled the bearer to a guest ticket when presented with cafeteria check at the theatre's box office.

This tie-up is to be a regular daily feature for an indefinite time.

Restaurants are generally a corking medium to effect distribution of a message, as Hadden's results will bear out. The mere fact that he intends to continue the stunt for an indefinite period indicates his faith in the scheme and so we're calling other Club members' attention to it. What else is going on out your way, J. S.? Keep the Club informed.

Wodetsky Still On Job In Chicago; Is Busy On "Specials"

Since leaving a hospital where he underwent an eye operation, J. C. Wodetsky, formerly associated with the management of a number of theatres in the larger cities, has been doing some high-powered exploitation work for the H. Schoenstadt & Sons Chicago theatres, among which were bathing beauty contests, tire changing contests, stage weddings, style shows, Mickey Mouse and Kiddie clubs, eight-day dancing contests, tie-ups of every description and numerous other exploitation gags.

Just to prove that there was a big wedding pulled off on the stage of the Peoples Theatre, Chicago, he sent along one of the programs gotten out for the event. The outside front cover announces that the "Biggest Entertainment Value Ever Offered On The South Side" would be presented at such and such date and the second page is given over to a photo of the bride and groom in costume. The balance of the program is filled with ads announcing wedding gifts from local merchants, same ranging from a wedding ring to a trip to Atlantic City. "Wody" states the affair was a rip-roaring success from every point of view, total cost to theatres being the license, lobby cards, trailer and fee to minister.

Another stunt which has been going over in a big way, is the promotion of $1,000 Bathing Beauty Contests, the money representing value of awards not the girls. These are held every Wednesday night on the theatre stage, funds for the gifts being collected from the participating merchants. Cards are handed out at stores and theatre which permit the holder to cast a vote in ballot box arranged in lobby. A popular priced auto was the leading give-away.

To stimulate attendance of the kids on Saturday and Sunday matinees, he made tie-ups with the Crackerjack Company and a concern distributing Kayo, the latter a chocolate drink. The kids were treated to both articles on attending the special performance.

"Wody" is one of the early members of this Club and we're glad to hear that he's been giving such a good account of himself of late but regret to learn that another eye operation necessitated a return to the hospital. He wants to be kindly remembered to all his fellow Round Tablers whom, we are sure, wish him a speedy recovery. Says he's still raising those champ "Pekes" in his Chinatown Kennels.

DO THIS NOW!!!

William H. Bergmann, in charge of advertising and exploitation for Nebraska Theatres Corp., has been confined to his home at 4746 South 18th Street, South Omaha, Neb., over a period of several months.

Prior to his illness he was an active showman and a faithful contributor to this department. Lying in a bed under these circumstances is not a pleasant experience and it is suggested that Club members drop him a line and tell him some news of the outside world. An act of this kind would be a worthy gesture on the part of Round Tablers and we are sure that it will be fully appreciated by "Bill".

Anniversary Gags Used By Lassman Produce Increase

There's always some theatre or film concern with an Anniversary just around the corner and so we'll submit details on a very successful publicity campaign recently waged by Garry Lassman, manager of the Egyptian Theatre, Milwaukee, who used the Warner 26th Aniversary as the occasion for employing some out-of-ordinary run of advertising.

Feature attractions and program of shorts were played up two weeks in advance of playdate by trailers, special lobby display, 5,000 flyers, 300 window cards and 25 window displays. Special anniversary plaques were placed in the lobby, along with cut-outs and a very attractive rock garden installed by a local landscaper at no cost to theatre. In addition to advertising the company attractions, the flyer carried some institutional copy at the bottom headed, "Things You Ought To Know," and featured what had been done to make the theatre the most attractive one in the North Side, etc.

The front of the house was decorated with anniversary banners and streamers and on opening day each lady patron was given roses during the evening show. On the last two days of the week, through a tie-up with a local bottling concern, soft drinks were served to all patrons.

On the three mid-week days, give-aways consisting of a fine wrist watch, six boat trips on a lake, and permanent waves, were handed out to the lucky patrons. All articles, etc., were promoted from local concerns. A baker also made an anniversary cake at no cost to theatre, which was put on display in the store window a week in advance and placed in foyer during the week. We are showing a photo of the baker's invention.

Other activities included tie-ups with local restaurants and soda fountains for anniversary sandwiches and soda drinks; trimming of interior of theatre by local florist, and effort on part of all ushers to acquaint friends and patrons with anniversary. The ticket booth was also attractively dressed, as per photo, and flanked on both sides with easels featuring Warners and the week's attractions.

Lassman's campaign brought a lot of new patrons to the theatre and impressed the older ones with the extra attractions offered for the week. All in all, it appears to be a well rounded out piece of work and we are passing it along to other members to use as a pattern or adapt to local needs when the occasion arrives.

"ALL FOR ONE AND ONE FOR ALL!"

The Club Receives A Letter From Ben Henning, So. Africa

We recently received an interesting letter from one of our new members, B. F. Henning, manager of the Town Hall Theatre in Alice, South Africa, and if any showman in this wonderful country of ours thinks he ought to squawk about conditions and lack of equipment, he can give a little thought to what Henning is up against down in his neck of the world.

Silents are still screened down in Alice because the white population of the town is not large enough to justify installation of sound equipment. However, Bennie owns a couple of DeVry portables and in order to make both ends meet he visits the neighboring towns of Peddie and Seymour every fortnight. He uses a motor lorry for transportation over the 40 odd miles and has to take along a small electric lighting plant.

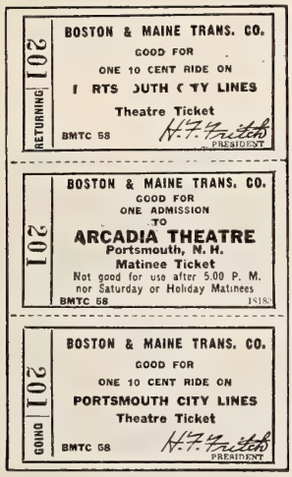
But Henning is a born showman and a few hardships don't make any difference in enthusiasm for the work. Anyway, he says he likes traveling around the country. He fell heir to the Town Hall when his dad, the former owner and operator, passed away. At that time Bennie was the projectionist. We are showing here the reproduction of a snapshot of his portable outfit and take it for granted that one of the figures represents this new Round Tabler. The other photo is a snap taken down his way on the occasion of a Kaffir dance, celebrated every year. The man's skin may look white but it was made that way by white clay. Lest you wonder why his face is covered, let us inform you that women are not permitted to look upon his face during this ceremony. Any further information will have to be given by Benny. In the meantime, we will look forward to hearing from him again. Looks as though he had some excellent subjects for newsreel shots down in his country and we would suggest that he try to communicate with his exchange for information as to the whereabouts of the nearest representative of one of the major newsreel companies.

It is very interesting to get a line on what exhibitors are doing in far-away countries and we hope that Ben will find time to tip the Club off now and then as to his activities. It takes a long time for a letter to reach headquarters from Alice, so by the time he reads these lines we'll be looking for another communication.

ROUND TABLE BIOGRAPHIES

Only in show business for three months and appointed director of publicity and exploitation for the big Stanley Theatre, Jersey City, N. J., when Charley Carroll left to become associated with Paramount-Skouras. Those three months were devoted to assisting Carroll with his work. Well, that's going some, we'll have to admit; but we note that Burton Hoffman acquired Phi Beta Kappa honors at New York University and they don't let a fellow wear those keys for being dumb.

Burton Hoffman



He was born in New York City December 14, 1910, and in addition to his course at the University is a graduate of James Madison High of Brooklyn. You can readily perceive that he stepped right out of college into show business for he's only 20 years of age at this writing. His reason for entering was because of liking public contact and because it was an interesting and fascinating game.

So we think it will be well to keep an eye peeled on Hoffman's future activities. They do things in a big way over in the Stanley and after being coached by Carroll we'll predict that this newly appointed director will keep business up to the mark.

Selette Has A Tie-Up With Bus Line That Is A Winner

There's always something interesting doing in show business over in Portsmouth, N. H., where Edward Selette manages the Arcadia Theatre, and among other things we're going to tell you about a tie-up he has made with a transportation company which is netting both an increase in patronage and wide circulation of an ad for his theatre. He opened the Arcadia eight months ago and the following plan has been in effect seven months.

You will note from the cut on this page that a transportation company issues a strip theatre ticket for a 10 cent ride either way, the one reproduced here being a yellow colored one for matinees. The evening strip is in the form of a red strip. The former regularly sells to patron for 30c and the latter for 35c, the transportation company retailing them in strip form for 25c and 30c. The theatre stands 1c of the loss and the buss line 4c. At the end of the month all tickets of this kind taken in at the box office are returned to bus company which, in turn, rebates the theatre by check.

The back page of the theatre program is devoted to an ad of the bus line, with information concerning transportation rates, etc., and notice that theatre tickets may be obtained at reduced rates. It is arranged to have the last buss leave from the theatre at closing time. In return for the ad, the buss company pays for cost of printing program. There are 16 busses on this line and every one of them carries banners on the rear of the coaches advertising the theatre. Regular routes take them through about 20 towns, or a radius of approximately 40 miles. Each coach has a little box in the interior to carry theatre programs.

He also put on a contest recently to determine the most popular boy and girl in town and tied-up with the Montgomery-Ward store to give away two bicycles. Special heralds were gotten out for the occasion and cards printed for the children to fill out in order to enter their votes, each admission being good for 10. The newspaper was tied-in for the mailing address but all votes will be counted by the theatre management. The accompanying photo will show how display was arranged in lobby.

Selette believes his deal with the transportation company is worthy of being passed along to other Club members and we're inclined to think likewise. When all angles are considered, such as direct sale of tickets and the constant plugging of an ad over a radius of 40 miles, with but a loss of 1c per admission, we'll say it's a darn good gag for any fellow to try out. The fact that it's been successful over a seven months period ought to mean something. This Club member is doing some aggressive work over in his town in the face of tough opposition. Although the Mayor owns the local newspaper and an interest in the opposition theatre, Ed won him over to officiate at the bicycle give-away and he's made good friends out of all the newspaper boys by always giving them a square deal. And so we're mighty glad to know that everything is going along so well and on behalf of the Club wish him all the success due.

Notice to Members

PLEASE be sure to notify the Chairman of any change of address.

—THANK YOU.

MAKE THIS A 'KIDDIE' YEAR!

There is no reason why every wide-awake theatre manager can't build up a big kiddie business this season. More so than every before. There are plenty of fine serials, westerns, cartoons and other subjects available and plenty good for the youngsters.

Formation and running of Kiddie Klubs are to be had from a dozen different sources. All you need do is ask, and you'll get all the help you could possibly require.

Incidentally, a word of caution if you're tied up with any gag involving the free distribution of candies, etc. Make sure that you are not getting a lot of old stale candy palmed off at your expense under the guise of "bargains." It would be suicide to take such chances.

Anything you engineer for the benefit or patronage of the kids should be fool-proof and safe. Cheap merchandise or candy will do you more harm than anything we can think of at the moment.

So perhaps it would be smarter to make your play for kids via the most sensible route; namely, your screen and what you can offer them in the way of good entertainment.

Lowrey Made A Deal With Light Company To Feature Picture

An opening night stunt and several others were effectively used by Victor B. Lowrey, manager of the Majestic Theatre, Wichita Falls, Tex., to put over "Smiling Lieutenant."

Arrangements were made with the Power Company to furnish at no cost to the theatre, six 1,000-watt flood lamps which were placed across the street from the theatre to flood the theatre with light from eight to ten o'clock on the opening night of picture.

This array of extra light focussed every one's attention on the theatre as well as playing up the splendid lobby display of cut-outs and art pieces.

A local trumpeter was engaged to ride in an aeroplane and blow the call that Chevalier uses in two of his songs. The trumpet player arranged for his ride during the opening of the air mail service at the municipal airport. Although the signs on the plane were not visible to people during the flight, they were, however, to some 5,000 people at the airport. This stunt at no cost to the theatre, also had a write-up in the paper.

A band was also engaged to play for fifteen minutes in front of the theatre—at no cost to the theatre.

Several excellent co-operative window displays and an attractive lobby also aided materially in publicizing the popular Chevalier vehicle.

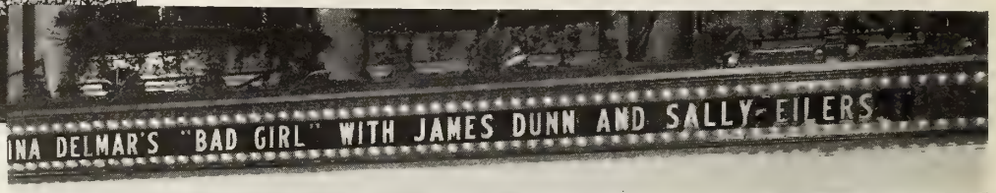
Lowrey's deal with the power company looks like one for the book. Bright lighting never failed to attract the eye and for an occasional means of focussing attention on outstanding pictures this appears to be a winner. We don't know just how he sold the power outfit the idea of making the hook-up at no cost but maybe he'll let us in on this end of the arrangement. In the meantime, we'll hope to hear some more about this enterprising showman.

Novel Whispering Campaign Brought Patrons For Howe

A unique advance publicity stunt engineered by Walton B. Howe, manager of the Paramount Theatre, Framingham, Mass., in connection with "Daddy Long Legs" gave this picture a decided boost at the box office. He called it a whispering campaign—and it could very easily be called a "repeat" campaign.

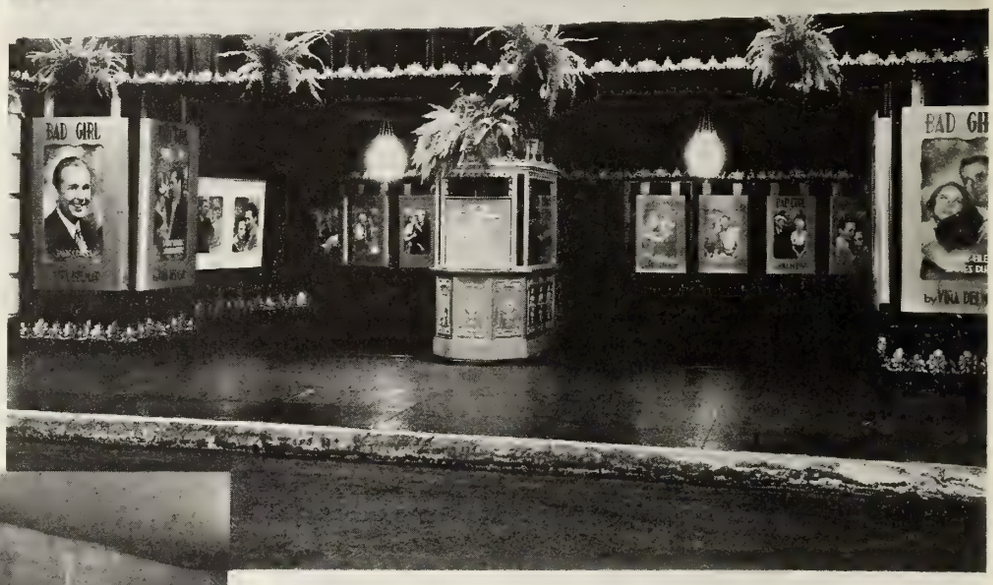
For a week in advance, each patron purchasing a ticket at the boxoffice was informed by the cashier that "Daddy Long Legs" starts next Saturday for a four-day run. This message was repeated by the doorman as he took the ticket and then again by the ushers who courteously found seats for the patrons.

Practically every patron for a week in advance was told three times that "Daddy Long Legs" would start Saturday. And then as a gentle reminder the patrons saw lobby announcements on their way out of theatre.



That was getting circulation of a message to patrons and with the ushers using discretion as to overdoing the repetition, the stunt started the word-o-mouth advertising along in great shape, all of which resulted in increased patronage. We hear that business had been extra good up East, Walton. How about letting the Club know your views on that subject?

Your Show Window!



In Los Angeles, Cal., Fred Cruise, a showman well known throughout the west, realizing the tremendous possibilities of his theatre's front, has paid careful attention to the ticket-selling potentialities of that front, with the result that artistic and atmospheric displays, as pictured on these pages, have been a keynote of his many activities.

It is well to emphasize, at this time, the fact that these displays are as inexpensive as they are attractive. This is a result of careful planning and using more brains than material in working them out. Close inspection of these pictures will further convey the point we are trying to get across to every showman who wants something "fine."

To the right we show you a long shot of the Criterion front for "Bad Girl", and above a close-up view of one side of the lobby. Note, if you please, the effective manner in which this display was built to carry out the "book" idea. Dignity is the keynote of this, as well as all other displays for this progressive Coast theatre.

"A Connecticut Yankee" (below) lent itself to a dignified draped background on which were hung the framed enlargements of the stills and stars. Here again an atmospheric effect was worked out in the crests and ornament along the bottom of the drapes which added the proper finish.

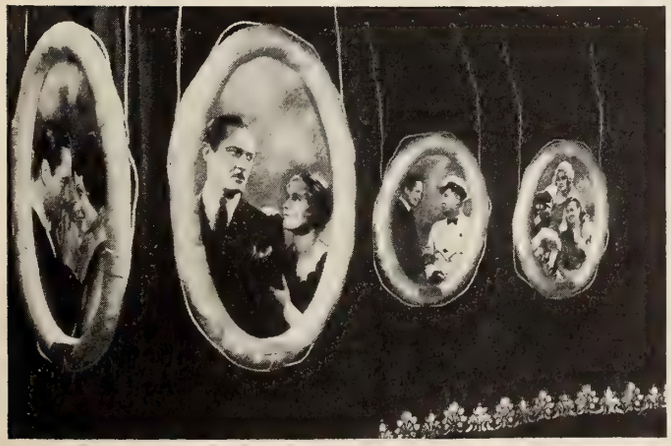
For "All Quiet on the Western Front" (above) a little additional atmosphere was added in the form of cannon wheels and trench bags. This, together with the barbed wire effect and silhouetted trench background at the base of the display, made a most impressive "war front." Why can't something as effective be worked out in that present foyer of yours?

Are You Using It?

There is no denying the fact that many theatres, located in transient spots, are overlooking a valuable angle in the appearance of their lobby and fronts. All too often an otherwise smart showman will spend a large sum of money to have a gaudy or, so-called, flashy display built.

Working along the lines of Fred Cruise and his assistants, your theatre may be able to accomplish something far more impressive than ever before by adopting this type of display.

Additional "shots" of the Criterion front will be reproduced in next week's issue, showing how they stress their current attractions via giant letters on the front of the theatre.



"Madam Satan" (above and to the left) offered something entirely different than before to the creative genius of this theatre's art department. You will agree, we are sure, that this striking display more than paid for itself in the attractiveness of the finished job. Compare this display with the others on these pages for a contrast in successful lobby art work.

"Transatlantic" (below) immediately lent itself to the life-preserver idea against another draped background hung completely around the entrance foyer of the Criterion. Small wonder that this theatre is one of the most outstanding on the western coast. Real showmanship is being used.

Here again, for "Secret Six" (above) we find the draped background, together with the framed enlargements, a most pleasing sight for the passerby, as well as the seasoned showman with a taste for something unusual, yet really attractive. We are not at all surprised that these displays are being talked about and probably you can accomplish as much for your own house.

READY FOR WINTER?

Every time the first cool breeze rattles 'round our skinny knees we suddenly remember that winter is just a short time away and we ought to caution you to be sure that you're ready for it.

How about the furnace? Is it in shape for a winter's work? Are there any parts needed or repairs necessary? Has it been cleaned out thoroughly? Washed out or water changed?

Vacuum valves . . . packing around the shut-off valves . . . adjustments in the automatic controls . . . etc. . . . etc. . . .

And then there's the question of fuel. Those managers who are permitted to purchase their own should be well set by this time and not take a chance of being caught napping when the weather hits cold enough to start the old boiler working.

Just suggestions. But if you're wise you'll be all ready when the gong rings for the annual tussel with old Kid Frost.

O'Neill Ties With A War Ace To Help 'Plane Film Along

A fine publicity break in his local newspaper was recently obtained by A. J. O'Neill, manager of the Lyon's Madison Theatre, Madison, N. J., on the occasion of presenting an aviation celebrity to his audience when "Hells Angels" was shown.

The aviator in question happened to be a local man who had distinguished himself in the world war by bringing down nine enemy 'planes. After the war he capitalized upon his experience by following up air transportation and became an executive of a nearby flying field. O'Neill arranged with the Ace to be present during the showings and give a talk on his experiences as flight commander and also obtained permission to display aircraft guns, war maps, etc., in the lobby. This stunt tied in nicely with the picture and earned both front page and editorial mention in the newspaper.

A humorous incident recently occurred in O'Neill's theatre when a lady dropped in to remonstrate the showing of an "Our Gang" comedy. It was her contention that "Gang" pictures should not be shown to American youth and stated that she and other clubwomen would take immediate action to prevent such a thing. However, under cross-examination the lady admitted that she was not very familiar with the movies and had never seen an "Our Gang." Her taste in amusements, it appeared, ran to the legitimate drama. Now laugh that one off!

In connection with O'Neill's stunt of having an ace aviator appear, this may be a tip-off to other Club members to search their own communities for an aviation authority when playing a picture having to do with 'planes. They can be found most any place these days and inasmuch as the public is so air-minded at present, an account of an aviator's experiences should make an interesting added attraction.

Ed Moore Put On Big Campaign To Exploit A Serial

Generous space was taken in a special appeal to kiddie patronage when Ed R. Moore, manager of the Rahway and Empire Theatres, Rahway, N. J., played the first episodes of the serial "Danger Island."

In a full length two column ad headed "Happy Days For the Kiddies," the following copy went on to tell the youngsters that a real treat was in store for them, action mats of the serial emphasizing the statements. In addition, cut-outs and banners were used on marquee and in lobby and 5,000 heralds and 4,000 programs were distributed and mailed. A special trailer was screened and ads were also inserted in 11 country newspapers. To provide some atmosphere the lobby was decorated with a jungle flash. On the other side of the newspaper page which carried the large ad, another good sized ad played up the feature attraction, "Daddy Long Legs." All in all, Moore got away with four full columns of free space.

That was some send off to give your serial, Ed, and we don't wonder that you made Universal Joe Weil sit up and take notice. From what we gather, the splurge not only brought in a mighty host of kid attendance but served as a strong bid for future patronage from the younger element. With the serial placed on the same bill as the well advertised feature, the line up was exceptionally well received by all patrons. Next time you pull off something like this, send the Club a line.

Parade And 'Plane Were Highlights In H. Shaw's Campaign

A big parade, an airplane stunt and numerous other publicity gags featured a campaign made on "Politics" by Harry F. Shaw, manager of Loew's State Theatre, Syracuse, N. Y.

Two bands, exactly 82 automobiles, with banners, red fire, torch-lights and a variety of noise-makers paraded through the city's main thoroughfares on the Thursday preceding opening day. the crowd being so great along the sidewalks at the start that both sides of the block had to be roped off and policed by city patrolmen. Chester Hale girls and others were passengers in the cars as the parade whooped its way through practically the entire city, finally winding up in front of the theatre amid the glare of red fire on both sides of the street.

Crowds of people stood around and gazed at the 20,000 heralds fluttering from the seven airplanes that stunted over the city for approximately 34 minutes during the noon hour. Vic Frank, assistant manager, was up in one of them directing distribution of "political" literature and in addition to indulging in a number of trick flying stunts, the 'planes zoomed down within 750 feet of the theatre. Distribution covered a number of neighboring towns within a radius of several miles.

Other stunts included the placing of voting machines in the lobby; election cards placed in conspicuous places all over town; screening of letter from the Mayor; stencils on sidewalk; badges worn by house employees; election band effect by orchestra when talking sequence of trailer finished, and the use of loud speakers to announce "Marie's election by 15,000 laughs" from a microphone in theatre office.

Even if Shaw didn't do anything else for the picture, the parade and 'plane stunts must have told all Syracuse what was playing at the State; but while these stand out as highlights, we believe you will all agree that his campaign was well rounded out in all respects. Shaw is an entrant in the M-G-M contest for best campaigns on "Politics" and we're sure all Round Tablers wish him luck. The more we read about campaigns made on this picture the more evident it becomes that it's a natural for a live-wire showman to exploit; so get aboard this one Round Tablers, and when you work out your advance campaign, give it the attention it deserves.

ROUND TABLE BIOGRAPHIES

At the age of 16 years, Henry Spiegel started out to look for a job and the only one he could find at the time was a hook-up with the mail department of Famous Players; and so he began a career in show business which he has followed in various capacities up to the present time.

Henry Spiegel

From mail clerk he was promoted to office boy; then to office assistant, and later became the assistant editor of a house organ published by Paramount. He rendered important assistance in connection with the openings of both the New York and Paramount Theatres, prior to and after openings, and today finds him holding down the job of assistant publicity director of the Brooklyn Paramount Theatre, a house managed by Robert Weitman.

Brooklyn is home to Spiegel for he was born in that city March 6, 1908. He attended city grade schools and later entered New York University. Chance threw him into show business but it seems that old dame fortune was on the job that day because he says that if he had to do the same thing over again, the theatre would be his choice. Unless conditions have changed since getting this dope on Henry, we'll record that he's a single man.

MORRIS GABLE has been shifted from the Stanley Theatre, Philadelphia, to manage the Palace, same city, succeeding Manager Heller, who is now at the Allegheny.

F. M. KENDALL, formerly manager of the Dixie and Mayfield Theatres in Mayfield, Ky., has been sent to the Empress Theatre, Owensboro, where he replaces E. P. Thomas.

PAUL WYCKOFF is the new manager of the Mayfield-Warner Theatres.

GEORGE YOUNG has been appointed manager of the Alvin Theatre, Pittsburgh, suceeding T. Boonville, who has been placed in charge of the Alexandra Theatre, Toronto, Canada.

WILLIAM ROBINSON is the new assistant advertising manager for RKO theatres in Minneapolis, under Morgan Ames.

G. S. GRANGER is the new manager of the Dreamland Theatre in Cardington, Ohio.

J. E. SCOVILLE, manager of the Gordon Square Theatre in Cleveland, Ohio, has reopened under a vaudeville and picture policy.

ART BARRY has been transferred from Lakeland, Fla., to Macon, Ga., where he will city-manage Publix houses. He succeeds R. M. Swanson, who has been transferred to the Community Theatre, Miami Beach.

H. J. BROWN will be the manager of the Capitol Theatre, Martin, Tenn., when this house is opened.

FALKINBURG'S NOVEL SIGNS!

The signs illustrated in the accompanying photo were constructed and painted by R. E. Falkinburg, manager of the Majestic Theatre, Lexington, Neb., and are being effectively used by this versatile showman as road signs along the Lincoln Highway entrances to his city.

The sign boards are made in easel style, measure 4 x 5 feet and are mounted on three two-by-fours, each ten feet in length. The lettering and cartoon work is done in Duco colors and the general effect is an unusually attractive piece of work. Many comments are brought to Falkinburg's attention by patrons of the theatre, such as children calling elders' attention to the signs when passing with remarks such as, "Oh, see the Mickey Mouse, or Krazy Kat!" Desirable vacant lots within city limits are used for locations as placing them too far out renders them attractive targets for local hunters.

He also has four 3 24-sheet stands on the Highway entrances to the city and finds this form of advertising well worth the investment for a town of 3,000 population. These are kept covered at all times on coming attractions and with the passing of playdates are immediately covered again, never allowing the board to be idle or, so to speak, dead.

We think that Falkinburg has turned out a particularly fine job of sign painting and we'd like to see further examples of his handicraft. Of course, everyone can't paint as well as this unless they've followed this kind of work for some length of time. At the same time, if the idea appeals to others it is possible to employ either house or outside artist to do the work. We think you'll all agree that these signs are quite different than the general run and that for this very reason will attract attention. For the attention of the uninitiated, it might be pointed out that there are mechanical devices on the market which permit the sketching of facsimile drawings such as the cartoons shown above.

Giant Post Card Stunt Bags Space For J. Rosenberg

A giant post card stunt netted Jack Rosenberg, manager of the Plaza Theatre, San Diego, Calif., two 2-column photos and captions in his newspaper on the occasion of playing "Night Nurse" a few weeks ago.

The first photo showed the enlarged card, which measured 3 feet by 5 feet, being mailed at one of the city's letter boxes. A theatre attache stood by, holding one end of the card. 160 two-cent stamps were required for postage and it was mailed to the Mayor as a pass to attend a performance of the picture. The second photo showed the arrival of the pass in the Mayor's office and the official expressing appreciation to Rosenberg by handclasp.

A couple of other gags recently used by "Rosie" included exhibition of playing card size heralds with selling copy for "Smart Money" on one side and Edward G. Robinson representing the ace of spades on the other side, and the placing of pie plates in various drive-in sandwich houses about town. The centre of the plates carried a pasted in circular ad on "Night Nurse."

That was getting a nice break from the newspaper on the post card stunt, Jack, and when it is figured out that the beaver board cost but $5 and postage $3.20, you certainly came out 'way ahead of the game by amount of free space obtained. Thanks for passing this one along, and also for the other suggestions.

Larry Woodin Has Two-For-One Stunt That Pays Its Way

Information on a new gag in connection with the issue of complimentary tickets reaches us from Larry Woodin, manager of the Arcadia Theatre, Co., Wellsboro, Pa., which, if practical in other communities, will bring a lot of joy to the hearts of all Club members. It's really a variation of the two-for-one ticket scheme and here's what it's all about:

Larry believes that discriminate distribution of complimentaries will result in one of the best forms of advertisements a theatre can get—a "walking-talking satisfied customer." So he places them in a way that the tickets will act as a two-for-one. When he gives out 50 tickets, he is reasonably sure that 49 paid admissions will accompany the return—which anybody must admit is a darn high average. He watches his pass holders closely and if he finds one of them not bringing along a paid customer, an attempt is made to find and remedy the trouble.

Another stunt he recently pulled in the face of widespread propaganda among orphanages that "Daddy Long Legs" would not present true conditions to inmates, was a tie-up made with such an institution in his County. With the backing of the local newspaper and Rotary Club, the latter voting funds to supply the children with sandwiches and ice cream, he entertained 34 orphans at one of the showings of this picture.

Other recent activities of his include a special showing to all lawyers in the County for "Lawyer's Secret" and the extending of invitations to all telephone operators in the County to be guests at a screening of "Secret Call."

To return to the subject of complimentaries, it would be interesting to see one of Woodin's tickets in order to understand just how he sells the holder the idea of bringing along a paid customer and we hope he will send this information so that we may pass it along to other members. As he says, there's a lot of power in the old "comp" if used in the right way and we'd like to have some additional information. He certainly deserves a lot of credit for effecting the tie with the orphanage and valuable newspaper publicity resulted from this move.

Taylor Advertised 'Pardon Us' By Use Of Several Mediums

Several effective advertising mediums were used currently and in advance to sell "Pardon Us" to the public by W. V. Taylor, manager of Loew's State Theatre, Houston, Tex.

Street car cards, trailers, want ad tie-up, newspaper and radio were all used in advance, in addition to an especially painted front and displays in theatre lobby and lobbies of three local hotels.

As a gag to get attention from city merchants who were running a dollar day campaign at that time, their ads and the M-G-M national ad on picture were clipped together and sent to each merchant, a fictitious name stating that the two ads were the best in the paper that day.

The picture on this page shows the Boy Builders of America and their girl friends when they were all invited to attend a matinee. They carried the fifteen foot banner reading, "We Thank Loew's State and M-G-M and Hal Roach for Inviting Us To See Laurel and Hardy in 'Pardon Us,' Their First Full Length Feature Picture at Loew's State Now."

Several valuable windows were obtained, among which was the 15-foot window of the city's largest newspaper. The want ad tie-up referred to above yielded 30 inches of free space daily and in addition the combined free space in several publications amounted to 235 inches. Local radio stations were also tied in with contests for best color cartoon and did their share to publicize the film.

This was considerable of a campaign that Taylor put on and we understand that his efforts were more than justified by returns at the box office. Continue the excellent work, W. V.

Finger's Costless Activities; Nancy Harris' Clock Tie

Costless activities captured the attention of Martin Finger when acting manager of the Paramount Theatre, Needham, Mass., and we'll admit he's been quite busy promoting a number of tie-ups that earned valuable publicity for the house at no expense to his concern. We are also indebted to him for calling our attention to a tie-up engineered by Nancy G. Harris only lady manager on the Paramount circuit, photos of which we are reproducing.

When playing "6 Cylinder Love" he tied up with the local newspaper to run a "Good Driver's Contest," co-operating with a State safety drive on at that time. The paper ran a story commenting on the safety angle and that it would pick out a good driver in Needham every day during the week. Picture, theatre and playdates were mentioned in the story. Registration numbers of the chosen drivers were published the following week and they became entitled to a pair of guest tickets.

He made a tie-up with a local bakery whereby this firm put out 3,000 heralds free of charge on "Daddy Long Legs," each package delivered for two weeks containing a herald marked with one of the letters spelling "Daddy." When bakery customers collected the five letters they were entitled to a guest ticket. In order to limit the number of free tickets it was arranged to have only a few Y numbers. Also, in connection with this picture, he tied up with a beauty parlor for the free distribution of 5,000 flyers which were distributed at the theatre in advance of playdate. To all holders who presented the flyer at the beauty parlor store, a compact rouge or lipstick was given gratis.

Some valuable goodwill and an opportunity to tie up advertising with New Season product, were gained when he arranged with an underwear company to have their new fashion reel shown in the theatre instead of the conventional place. All division managers and employees attended the special showing and the company paid expenses attached to the occasion. The idea was that each company, film and underwear, were announcing new product.

The two reproduced photos appeared in an issue of the house organ gotten out by the Telechron clock manufacturers and picture a lobby display and window obtained by enterprising show-woman Mrs. Nancy Harris, manager of the Colonial Theatre, Natick, Mass. The tie-up was made in connection with "Behind Office Doors" and the local clock distributor was so pleased with results that he hopes to make a similar tie-up in the near future. Mrs. Harris is noted for adding the "personal touch" to any show selling stunt she undertakes and we believe you will all agree that these are finely arranged displays. Finger was assisting her at the time this deal was made.

According to information on Martin he's back at the Paramount Theatre in Framingham, Mass., and while we're congratulating him for his enterprise we'll also state that we intend to be on the lookout for future contributions. Are you settled now, Martin, or is your stay in Framingham only temporary? Keep in touch with the Club wherever you are. That deal with the Safety Committee and the choosing of careful drivers can be successfully used with any number of pictures besides those with an auto angle. We have no hesitancy in stating that your local Committee will welcome any deal that will publicize its work to keep down motor accidents.

GEORGE WASHINGTON BICENTENNIAL CELEBRATION!

(February to November, 1931)

Many showmen have followed our advice and communicated with the Commission at their headquarters in Washington, D. C. So they are in possession of many important details in the plans for this nation-wide celebration.

Those who have not asked for literature and information should do so at once. Every leading theatre should be the headquarters for the local committees now being formed and should be active in the formation, too. The manager can make himself mighty valuable to these committees and besides it will offer many angles for future tie-ups, etc.

Here's an event which will receive the backing and co-operation of every newspaper and organization in the entire country. Everyone's attention will be focused on the celebration and the local programs arranged for each community. Without question the progressive managers will be mighty certain to be right in the midst of the activities.

Clip sheets, suggested programs and even a motion picture production will be available. By enrolling with the Commission they will keep you supplied with press material and other information according to the progress being made and the decisions reached for the national celebration.

ROUND TABLE BIOGRAPHIES

Starting in show business at the age of fifteen, Robert C. Cannom, manager of the Fox-California Theatre, San Diego, Calif., has tackled practically every job between portering and his present position.

Robert C. Cannom

He entered show business in Grand Rapids, Mich., at the old Powers Opera House, where he tossed around trunks about twice his size and carried props back-stage for the different road shows. Then he ushered for this house and in due time became successively doorman and cashier. With a crew of two operators and a cashier, his next step led him to the operation of a small house.

Says he really got into show business when he went to work for Sid Lawrence at the Isis Theatre; that it was Sid who gave him his first real chance to take a shot at selling shows on the outside. When Lawrence went to Grand Rapids to manage the de luxe Regent Roof Garden, Cannom was given the post of assistant. Some other managerial posts he held in the past include the Jeffer-Strand, Saginaw, Mich.; the Capitol, Lansing, and both Fox California and Orpheum, San Diego, Calif.

He also had some interesting experience as partner in a theatrical booking office and when with the Butterfield Circuit became a very good friend of Colonel W. S. Butterfield, to whom he says he is indebted for heading him West and to his present job.

Dowling Ballied "Trader" By Using A Lettered Ford

E. M. Dowling of the Granada Theatre, Olyphant, Pa., used a car ballyhoo with successful results to exploit "Trader Horn" for his house.

The title of the picture, name of theatre and playdates were painted on the body of the old Ford numerous times to attract more attention.

A large sign on top of the flivver stated that a number of guest tickets would be awarded to the persons guessing the nearest number of titles on the car.

This stunt got a lot of recognition from people and hundreds filled out an estimate blank which was handed them by the driver of the car.

Pival Plugs Club Over Local Radio To Sell Matinees

For his first contribution to this department, John Pival, manager of Ben Cohen's Senate Theatre, Akron, Ohio, tells us about a Kiddie Party which is being carried out successfully every Saturday matinee.

He has gathered together a number of the best kiddie entertainers in town and they meet each week in the theatre as contestants for loving cups. As a means of obtaining additional publicity, Pival promoted a half hour of broadcasting privilege over a local station during the stage performance and as a result of this many requests for certain numbers are received by mail. The newspapers also play up the kiddie matinee in a generous way, calling it the "Senate Theatre Kiddie Hour."

The above has been an effective means of boosting Saturday attendance because the listeners-in want to see the little radio stars in person and Pival assures us that box office returns have been most gratifying. We'll be looking for further reports of what Pival is doing for the Senate and if you will glance at the above photo you'll see him standing at the right. At the left is Ed Heal, a sign man who makes them believe in signs. He turns out some novel work, examples of which we will hope to present in the near future. And when we state that you may expect something different in the way of signs we are quoting from the lines of Pival himself, who admits that Ed wields a mean brush.

Kane's Assistants Campaign "Skippy" While Tom Is Away

When Tom Kane, manager of the Fox Sequoia Theatre, Redwood City, Calif., was vacationing this past season his assistant, Clinton Eberly, and the rest of the staff kept the ball rolling at a fast pace. To quote Clint, the boys put reverse English on "when the cat's away" and did themselves proud in finishing out a campaign on "Skippy."

The local newspaper was tied-up for a gigantic bike race which turned out to be one of the most successful boys' events ever staged in Redwood City. Every boy in town who could ride a bicycle was eligible to ride in the races and compete for the 20 prizes of money, theatre tickets for "Skippy" and baseball bats, gloves and balls. The contest was handsomely supported by the newspaper, issue after issue containing generous space devoted to news of the coming event. On the day it was pulled off the paper had a photographer on hand to take a shot of the more than 50 entrants in the race.

In addition to the race a window tie-up was made with the "Yo-Yo's" kiddie novelties, in which the merchant sold out his entire stock the first day the window was in. As the theatre ad covered about 90 per cent of the entire window, it is a safe bet that the "Skippy" message was thoroughly conveyed to the purchasers of the "Yo-Yos." Another window was secured in the newspaper office for display of a miniature club house done in shanty style. Moving cut-outs of Skippy and Mitzi Green gave the effect of the two heads peeping out of the windows from time to time. A similar display was placed in the theatre foyer.

Good work, Clint, and now we know that Tom Kane enjoyed his vacation because of assurance that his work would be carried on in the usual manner.

THE INDUSTRY'S CLEARING HOUSE FOR IDEAS!

GEORGE KANN has charge of the Willard Theatre, a Loew house in Woodhaven, N. Y. We're glad to introduce you to the big army of other Round Table members, George, and hope you'll become a regular contributor to this department. Woodhaven is but a short distance from New York and the Willard is a theatre any man would be proud to manage. The Club will look forward to hearing about what Kann is doing in the way of selling shows.

HAROLD E. ARMISTEAD is the co-manager of the Lyric Theatre down in Easley, S. C., the other co-manager being his brother and these two are the latest Carolinians to become members of this Club. He says it's a great game keeping the ball rolling in this 400-seat theatre and while he hasn't much to offer right now in the way of show tips, he promises to become an active contributor to this department. That's the spirit, Harold, and we'll be looking forward to your next letter.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

E. A. ARMISTEAD is the other co-manager of the Lyric Theatre in Easley, S. C., and brother of the Harold Armistead referred to in another introductory paragraph. We presume that these new Club members are independent operators of this house and are glad to extend the Club welcome to both. Which one of you does the show selling, E. A.? Or do you both take a shot at this end of the game? That football schedule you sent along is seasonable stuff and we shall make mention of it.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

ROBERT P. CORBIN manages the Fisher Theatre in Detroit, Mich., and we're mighty glad to include this new member's name among the Michigan contingent of this organization. We realize that he is a very busy man but hope that he will find time to jot down some information on his show-selling activities in order that we may pass it along to his fellow Club members. How about it, Bob, can we depend upon your doing this?

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

CHARLES FERGUSON is at the helm of the Avenue B Theatre, Avenue B and 5th street, City of New York and since neighborhood theatre managers still pull showmanship stunts in the big town we predict that he'll soon be telling you all about what he has up his sleeve. What was that last selling stunt you put over, Charlie? Let's hear about it.

ROY YOUNGBLOOD manages the Grand Theatre, a Loew house down in Atlanta, Ga., and we are glad to introduce this new Round Tabler to his host of fellow showmen. Says he felt as though he was a member before filling out the application on account of having followed this department's doings for some time, and he now proposes to repay other Round Tablers by sending along some show tips of his own. That's the stuff, Roy. Shoot your ideas along and we'll do the broadcasting.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

GENE KEARNEY is the assistant manager of the Fisher Theatre, Detroit, Mich., a house managed by Robert P. Corbin. We are always interested in the Club enrollment of assistant managers because it has been our pleasure to note that most of them keep on climbing the ladder of success. The same kind of luck to you, Gene, and let's hear about what you are doing to help your boss sell shows.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

NORMAN L. DAVIS is in charge of the Marvel Theatre, a Frisina house in Carlinville, Ill. We can tell right off the reel that Norman is going to become an active member of this organization because in addition to his application he requested a Club pin and sent along some snap-shots of a stunt he worked on a recently played picture which we will publish at the first opportunity. He is only 22 years of age but has been in the game for seven years and in that length of time a man can find out a lot of things about show business.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

BEN GRIEFER is the first assistant manager of the big Paramount Theatre over in Brooklyn, N. Y., and he's another one of Robert Weitman's boys to become a Round Tabler. He has been with the Paramount for 2½ years and was promoted to his present position. His boss says that Ben is very much on the job and so we'll keep an eye on what he's doing to build patronage for this large Publix house.

SOUND REPRODUCTION

The BLUEBOOK School

By F. H. RICHARDSON

QUESTION NO. 99—If there be frequent variations in projection speed, what effect will be set up? What is the motor control box and what is its function? May compound wound or synchronous motors be depended upon to regulate the speed of projection motor sufficiently closely? Give reasons for your answer. Upon what does a motor control box depend for its action? What is a "tuned circuit" and what is its action?

NEW YORK CHAPTER MEETS.

Last Friday evening the New York chapter of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers held a most interesting meeting in the auditorium of the Bell Telephone Laboratories.

S. K. Wolf of the Bell Telephone Laboratories, presented a paper on screen brightness. This paper and tests were very interesting though your Editor does not approve the tests because of the lack of distribution of the audience. Each member of the audience was handed a paper and was invited to watch the projection of four reels. These reels were divided into four different values of projection light, two reels being projected with high intensity and two with reflector type lamps. The members of the audience took down their impressions of both light color and the various light values.

Your Editor thoroughly approves of this method of attacking the problem of what theatre people call screen illumination but which scientific gentlemen call "brightness." He doesn't however, believe that this particular test was properly made because of the fact that there were two brilliant, uncovered red lights located respectively about 10 and 14 feet from the screen and practically all the audience was within a radius of perhaps 40 feet from the screen. Also, save for these glare spots I have mentioned, the auditorium was entirely without light except for the reflection of light from the screen.

Your Editor voiced his objection to this arrangement whereupon several scientific gentlemen undertook to tell him that the distance of the observer from the screen made no difference, insofar as concerns screen brightness—which you and I call screen illumination. Admitting that it is always possible to be in error, I will certainly have to have that proven to me definitely before I believe it and after all these years of observing screens, proving it will be a hard job.

During the demonstration I was seated within 25 feet of the screen. While some of the pictures which seemed rather glaringly bright were on the screen, your editor ambled back to the rear of the hall and there found these pictures were not even sufficiently bright to afford a satisfactory view. Under that condition the best scientists on earth cannot convince me that distance makes no difference.

I believe the tests should have been made without glare-spots, with a careful assimilation of theatre lighting and with the audience in three groups, located say 25, 75 and 100 or 125 feet from the screen—not less than ten people in each group. I believe such a test would have very large value in the determination of a compromise value in screen illumination and, unless the Society makes such a test I intend to have one made myself in some large theatre.

Now, don't get me wrong. I really and honestly do not mean this as a criticism of the committee. I think the test it made erred only in the things I have mentioned and these things may easily be straightened out by a second test. I am afraid, though, that the committee will not do that because apparently the men of science disagree with me in my conclusions. Well, very often science and practice do not agree so well, particularly under conditions which make scientific accuracies impossible. The committee admits that all which may be hoped for is a compromise and that, in my opinion, is perfectly correct.

Answers to Be Resumed Next Week

Because of the fact that many answers come from distant points, which requires much time for the issue carrying any given question to arrive at its destination, and often considerable time is necessary to dig out the answer, which added to the time required for a letter to come from these points represents, in total, a period of weeks, it has been decided to delay the publication of answers for one more week. Next week their publication will be resumed and it is hoped we will be able to avoid any future mixups.

One exhibitor in Texas wrote, some while ago: "I have only a village theatre, with a large farming community to draw from. We give four shows a week and, except in bad weather almost always have a house full. Capacity 486. I cannot of course employ a city projectionist. Instead, when I decided to open this little theatre four years ago I went to the president of a projectionist local union located in a city forty miles away. I explained the situation to him—that it would be impossible to pay the wage a city man of ability would demand. It just would not be done. I found him to be amendable to reason. He said competent projectionists came looking for work quite often, and agreed to send one out, at a price agreed upon, to remain one month and teach a young man I would select.

"Well, the man I got really knew his business; also he did all he could do, with the result that after he left we got along fairly well, improving all the time.

"And now, Mr. Richardson, here is what it is all about. As soon as I had made the arrangement for the man, I ordered a set of your Bluebooks and set the young man I had selected for my future projectionist studying, using the Bluebook School as a basis. That was four years ago. During all that time I have required my young projectionist (age 20 now) to come on duty two hours early every Tuesday morning and we both put in that time in trying, usually with success, to solve the week's set of questions, and if time permits other things.

"Thanks to your 'School' and the Bluebook, Mr. Richardson, I venture to say this young man, Lennox Cossaboom, is today one of the best motion picture projectionists in this great state. Partly because his work has been so consistently excellent, my patronage has been such that I have been able to raise his wage each year, until it now is $25 per week, which may seem low to city men, but is a really big wage here, considering that he only has to work four days a week. Next year I expect to enlarge the theatre, and may be able to raise him to $30 per week. Thanks to the Bluebook I understand projection myself."

MUSIC AND TALENT

PRESS BACKS CAUSE OF MUSICIANS

Players' Appeal is Timely, Says Omaha Paper

Have Certain Claims to Consideration Despite Sound Films and Radio, Public Is Told

By O. C. MICHELMANN

The human element in entertainment has a place in the hearts of many, and the musicians deserve consideration, particularly because of the inroads made into their field by talking pictures and the radio.

Champions Musicians' Cause

This championing of the cause of the theatre musician is reflected in a recent editorial article in the Omaha World-Herald, under the heading, "The Musicians Strike a Note." The editorial followed an appeal made by the musicians through an advertisement. By their home-owning, their tax payments and war services, the musicians declared, they deserve the consideration of the public. With this the editorial writer heartily agrees.

The editorial follows:

"An ad we liked was that by the Omaha Musicians Union, which told, modestly but effectively, the part the professional musicians of this city play in the community life. It was a reminder, as was recent advertising by the Union Pacific Boosters' league, of the fact that modern life has not divorced us from neighborliness, and in any city worth while the problems of a group are the problems of all.

Players Hard Hit

"The musicians have been extremely hard hit by the development of the radio and the talking picture. Men and women who devoted their lives to the pursuit of one of man's highest vocations found, of a sudden, that their earning power had been greatly reduced. The fickle public, lured by a new avenue, turned from the person to the machine.

"In the statement of their war services, their tax payments, their home-owning, the Omaha musicians have reminded us that they have certain claims to consideration and friendship from all of us. Their plea is timely, and, unless we are much mistaken, it will prove effective."

Lopez Back in New York

Vincent Lopez and his orchestra have returned to New York from a six-weeks tour through the South and West under the auspices of the NBC Artists Service.

North To Manage Rich Unit

Frank North, stage manager, will manage the Larry Rich unit when it opens with a revue in Louisville, Ky., on November 5.

EDWARD PAUL

In our gallery of famous personages "Eddie" Paul's likeness must appear. Mr. Paul, who for the past two years, or since the house opened, has been chief musical director of the Brooklyn Paramount and also in charge of musical activities at the New York Paramount for a year more than that, is making quite a name for himself in his "Women's Radio Revue," broadcast over station WEAF, New York. This is the hour that Vincent Lopez has been conducting and making popular. Recently Lopez signed up for six-week tour of the country and as the hour still had to go on, he picked Paul as the most suitable and competent director he knew to handle the program and keep in it the same high caliber to which he, himself, had built it. At the recent Radio Show in Madison Square Garden the program was chosen as one of the representative ones and broadcast direct from the "Garden." Paul has made such a fine impression in his handling of this program that it is rumored that one of the big chains is dickering for his future services. Paul was born of a musical family in Rensselaer, New York, and has been musical director at the Lansing Conservatory of Music, Adams Theatre, Detroit, and Roxy, New York.

Baltimore Manager Organizes Boy Band In Newspaper Tieup

J. Lawrence Schanberger, manager of Keith's in Baltimore, has completed arrangements with the Baltimore News to organize a Keith-News Cadet band for all local youngsters under 19 who wish to go in for such musical work.

Applications are furnished to prospects at the theatre, where rehearsals are held. The News is giving ample newspaper space to the organization.

STAGE SHOWS

Detroit Michigan

Week ending September 24

Benny Davis, song writer and discoverer of youthful talent, came back to the Michigan last week for his second "personal appearance." The title of his show was "Broadway Stars of Tomorrow," but it might well have been called "Out-Gusing Gus Edwards." Benny seems to have a knack of picking up real talent. The set depicted a night club, with Davis as M. C. Patsy Coyle, a blonde mite, started the ball rolling with a fast bit of tap. Then came Martha Ray, a husky-voiced blues singer who should go a long way up in the heap. Vera Dunn and Billie Severen, a newly paired dance team, added to the occasion, Billy later doing an acrobatic dance that nearly stopped the show.

Little Jackie (Jakie to you) Heller, a lad with a great voice and a future, gave the crowd full value, and was called upon for several encores. Sunny O'Dea, a tap dancer, stepped up and did her stuff in a way that reminded one of Marilyn Miller. Vilma and Buddy Ebsen, a brother and sister team who are headed for big time next season, stopped the show. Buddy is long and lank, and Vilma is—just right. Benny himself took a turn and sang bits of some of his best-known song hits. He was assisted by his better 9/10ths (the wife), and had the audience eating out of his hand.

A well-rounded and nicely balanced show, the kind you could see two or three times. Twenty-four Evans girls, a local unit of steppers, pepped up the picture, after doing a military-ballet-drill to the wartime tune overture presented by Eduard Werner and his pit orchestra. Arthur Gutow, organist featured a series of song slides to complete the bill.

Baltimore Century

Week ending October 1

"Splashes," a Loew-Capitol unit staged by Arthur Knorr under the supervision of Louis K. Sidney, was introduced by selections played by the orchestra in the pit under direction of George Wild. The Chester Hale girls in afternoon frocks did a routine dance followed by Horton Spurr doing acrobatic dance work and then a slow motion novelty of a golfer at his first game and more eccentric acrobatic dancing.

Carl Emmy came on with his assistant, a long table and his trick dogs. After this an unnamed man in tuxedo did some chatter and introduced Raquel Torres. After comic chatter she sang "Moonlight Saving Time," followed by another from "Palmy Days," and then did the dance from her picture "White Shadows in the South Seas." Fritz and Jean Hubert next did their eccentric drunk dance and a burlesque fight.

Curtains part on a large tank with mirrors to reflect the water. Chester Hale girls go into a routine dance while Neptune and two mermaids disappear. The girls parade up steps at either side and come down center stairs into pool disappearing. They come up again in brown silk bathing suits and go into fancy diving stunts. Lottie Mayer then does a high dive, then poses on back steps as Neptune rises.

SLICES OF MELLIN

By BOBBY MELLIN

CHICAGO

WILLIE HOROWITZ, Chicago song publisher, who is regarded as one of the Loop's most ambitious practical jokers, found himself the victim of a Coon-Sanders prank when he visited the famous MCA orchestra leaders recently in Milwaukee. Horowitz had phoned Joe Sanders from Chicago that he was coming to Milwaukee for dinner. Sanders and his partner, Carlton Coon, put their heads together. They arranged for a large table in the main dining room of the hotel, had the chef prepare a large birthday cake with lavish scroll work and a message—"To Horowitz the Great." Beautiful bouquets of flowers graced the table, and when the Chicagoan arrived he found the whole waiter force at his command. Greetings were exchanged between the visitor, Joe Sanders and Carleton Coon, and the orchestra began playing "At Your Command." Horowitz smilingly sat there waiting for the food to be served. No waiters—no food—and after a half hour's wait the Chicagoan retired to the coffee shop for his dinner. Coon-Sanders had won and the orchestra began playing "Old Playmate."

Arthur Jarrett, the good looking tenor who made thousands of friends as a featured artist with Earl Burtnett's Californians and with Ted Weems Orchestra, has been engaged as a sustaining artist by the Columbia Broadcasting System and will be heard through its Chicago studios. Jarrett served as a boy soprano soloist in the choir of St. Patrick's Cathedral, New York City, attended Fordham University until 1927, and became a professional musician as a banjoist-vocalist.

Jules Herbeveaux, NBC orchestra leader heard from Chicago on many networks, has just obtained his private pilot's license and so joins Wayne King among the NBC Maestros flying their own planes. Herbeveaux was a chief gunner's mate in the navy during the late war and held a license during that time.

Gene Arnold, NBC announcer, is usually an "old reliable" in being on deck for his shows, but one day he failed to arrive in a studio for a scheduled broadcast—the worst sin in the book for an announcer. Pages were sent on a frantic hunt for him. Gene was discovered in the staff dressing room playing Yo-Yo.

Painters were varnishing the woodwork and cleaning the walls in the lower corridors of the NBC Chicago studios the other day, leaving "wet paint" signs liberally in their wake. But Al Cameron, of the team of Al and Pete, with characteristic boyish incredulity had to find out for himself.

May Have Stage Shows

The Palace, San Antonio, may inaugurate stage presentations, it is understood. Acts will probably be drawn from local talent and routed out of the Dallas booking office.

Institutes Stage Shows

The Pueblo in Pueblo, Colo., has instituted stage shows as an added attraction, with business reported improved. Admission is 25 cents for matinees and 40 cents for evenings.

Publix Doing Own Shows

Edward J. Weisfeldt is preparing all stage shows appearing at the Michigan and Fisher, Publix Detroit houses. Fox is still playing Fanchon & Marco units in its local house.

STAGE SHOWS

Philadelphia Fox

Week ending September 18

The Fox Theatre is reaping the benefit of the musicians' strike at the Warner theatres and is playing to full houses.

Bob West, the new organist, seems to have accomplished the impossible and actually makes the audience sing. Perhaps his song with all the words starting with the letter "s" put everyone in the proper mood.

A beautiful color film, "Trees," is shown to the accompaniment of Joyce Kilmer's poem of the same title, set to music and played by Max Bradfield and his Music Masters, while Willard Singley, baritone, sings as the last picture fades away.

Fanchon & Marco present the "Varieties" Idea, featuring Sully and Thomas. Shown up perfectly against a black backdrop, "Four Aces and a Queen" do some really remarkable trapeze stunts. The girl is tossed from one to another while the audience remains breathless, there are somersaults in midair with one man suspended by his ankles catching another by the wrists and quick half turns while being tossed from one to another.

Baker, Dove and Allen are very clever jugglers. Two enter juggling Indian clubs while the third juggles his hat, a ball and cane, barely missing some of the clubs as they are tossed. The clubs are highly polished, reflecting the light so as to give the impression of being electrically illuminated. With ten clubs rapidly spinning through the air from one to another the three reach the climax of their act and are heartily applauded.

Sully and Thomas provide the comedy of the show. Their jokes are told in a fresh and sprightly manner that makes the audience laugh in spite of depression and unemployment. Norman Thomas and his Sextette are very fortunate in having Freddy Purch as drummer, for his antics are a show in themselves. During an interlude Norman Thomas plays "Listen to the Mocking Bird," with one hand playing the accompaniment, the other imitating the song of the bird.

Three colored boys who tap dance like veritable demons add variety to a most enjoyable show.

Week ending September 24

"Art Gallery," a new F & M Idea, gave the customers of the Fox something very different from the usual stage show. The travelers opened on a "front" of some French (?) museum, with three lads, later identified as Bob, Andy and Tod, doing some good stepping. Felovis, billed as a European Wonder, tossed things into the air and juggled them around in great style. His exhibition of balancing lost somewhat with this reporter because a better act of the same kind had been seen the week before. Moreover, he hurried his performance for no good reason, and, as a result, fumbled some of his best tricks.

A fast bit of clowning between one of the dance trio and Eddie Cole opened up some real comedy. Cole, having declared he once had directed Charlie Chaplin, caused one of Chaplin's oldest comedies to be thrown on the screen. He then "told" Charlie just what to do, evoking great rounds of merriment from the audience as Charlie would topple into a tub of water after having been loudly warned of the danger by Cole. Next came a full stage set with five groups of silver and gold statuary, in poses of some of the world's best known groups of figures. These figures "came to life" and performed all manner of acrobatic and adagio fandangos, while Marion and Katharyn, as two of the Muses, sang.

The work by the Cachalots, Olga and Lester, Mavis and Tod, and the Herculean Trio, was better than average. Stan Meyers, directing the pit orchestra, led his boys through the best orchestral offering of the week, put on for the benefit of visiting Legionnaires. Each of the musicians was dressed in khaki, behind barriers of sandbags. A scrim drop the width and height of the stage opening permitted the showing of several hundred feet of Army Signal Corps official war shots, while the insignia of each of the 40 American divisions was shown in colors on the traveler curtains surrounding the scrim. Popular war songs were played, ending up with Sousa's "Stars and Stripes Forever," after "Taps" had been sounded as two West Point cadets lowered an American flag behind the scrim. Truly, a great show.

Week ending September 24

Glen Welty and the Wisconsin theatre orchestra playing "Your Requests," with the Three Rhythm Boys and Raymond Brown, precede Fanchon & Marco's "Hot Java" Idea. Songs offered include "Me," "Sweet and Lovely," "Trees," and "Love."

The Idea opens with the chorus attired in black and red costumes representative of waiters. They dance and sing "Hot Java," and give way to Noree, a very clever dancer, who works with the chorus.

The Three Samuels Brothers perform several tap dances including a military number. The boys are good and work nicely together.

For the next episode, members of the chorus are garbed in vari-colored costumes and perform various steps. The scene is representative of a Javanese street and Vincent Yerro enters drawing a vehicle atop which is Amanda Chirot.

Yerro gives an impersonation of Harold Lloyd and then proceeds to show how the hula is danced in Hawaii. Miss Chirot sings and she has a very fine voice.

Weston and Lyons engage in plenty of nonsense. Weston clowns, sings a bit, while Miss Lyons dances, sings and plays the uke.

For the finale the chorus dances in oriental costume, before a Buddha background. Moree again entertains with a bit of splendid dancing. She is extremely lithe and able to twist herself into unusual positions. A feature of the finale are the six suspended members of the chorus, beneath whom the six other members dance, attired in similar costumes. The effect is that of mirror reflections.

Loew Publicist Handles Real Tieups With Store and Paper

Arnold T. Stolts, publicist for Loew's in Baltimore, has recently completed two successful tieups on stage acts at the Century. The first was with a large department store coincident with the appearance of Helen Kane at the theatre for two weeks.

The other was with the Baltimore News, for the Loew-Capitol stage unit, "Splashes," also at the Century, whereby the paper publicized a diving act, by giving space to a Century-News diving contest in a tank on the house stage, in which contest all residents were permitted to compete.

Appearances For Seth Parker

Seth Parker (Phillips Lord) radio star who is making a film for Radio Pictures, begins a series of personal appearances October 1, which will cover 70 cities, with radio broadcasts in advance of the tour.

ORGAN SOLOS

LEO WEBER (Boston Memorial) for his first solo at this house presented a program of popular songs for the audiences to sing and met with very favorable response. This young man makes a nice appearance at the organ, plays well and has an intimate appeal that will go a long way in making him very popular here.

Opening his program with a few well selected words, he then plays "On the Beach with You," "With You," and "Million Dollar Baby." He follows with special lyrics on "Million Dollar Baby," some comedy gag slides and then announces that inasmuch as the audience has favored him by singing nicely he would reciprocate by offering a solo of the beautiful song, "Trees." He presented this number in distinctly entertaining combinations and received a very good response at finish. The closing number on the program, which the audience all joined in singing, was the popular tune, "Nevertheless."

DICK BETTS (Stamford Palace) opens his community songfest this week by singing the introductory song himself (to the tune of "Heigh-ho Everybody") and then goes into the playing of "Just An Empty Nest" and "I Wanna Sing About You," for the audience to sing. A special, written about a discontented husband and played to the tune, "Cream In My Coffee," aroused a lot of enthusiasm and laughter. The audience then sang "You Don't Know What You're Doin'," followed by a clever tongue-twister, with words all starting in the letter "S," to the tune, "Should I," and a closing chorus of a special version of "World Go By," with words all pertaining to the liquor situation. A good solo and one thoroughly enjoyed by the audience.

TED MEYN (Jersey City Jersey) recently offered a community-sing organ solo dedicated to "Tin Pan Alley," in which he featured the names and songs of some of the more famous writers. The solo proved to be an entertainingly different novelty.

Opening with a special version about "the Alley," to the tune "Wabash Moon," Ted then followed with "Oh, How I Hate to Get Up In the Morning," "Reaching for the Moon," "Hello Beautiful," "Without that Gal," "The Man I Love," and a final chorus of "Over There." The audience's reaction was distinctly favorable, but apparently some of the supposedly famous writers didn't mean a great deal to them.

AL HORNIG (Baltimore Century) presented his "Song Derby" with a slide introducing it while he played "Horses, Horses, Horses," particularly appropriate as the racing season is under way at Havre de Grace, Md. A slide explained that the audience could decide what melodies are the best. Then he swung into the strains of "Whistling In the Dark." Followed a cartoon of two horses with the words "I'm Keeping Company," and the audience's voice grew stronger. Another horse cartoon followed with burlesque words on "Just a Gigolo," and this was followed by his playing "Moonlight Saving Time."

BETTY HAMMOND (Scranton Riviera), new organist at this Publix house, has apparently succeeded in giving that city something different in the way of entertainment and novelty, the entertainment part being singing and good organ playing and the novelty being a woman at the console. This combination, which never before has been presented here, is already the talk of the town, and Miss Hammond's exotic beauty, fine voice, beautiful costumes and intimate appeal, which these audiences experienced for the first time, undoubtedly will go a long way in gaining her a great popularity.

Miss Hammond opened her first week's solo by introducing herself, orally, and then proving she can play good organ by offering "Moon Comes Over the Mountain," in a pleasing ballad style. She then announced that it was the audience's time to sing, and to make it easy she would play the popular "Million Dollar Baby" tune. The audience, a little reluctantly or bashfully at first, and then gaining courage, came along nicely and by the time the solo was finished, most everyone was singing. The organist surprised the audience by singing or crooning "Take It From Me," and received a very good hand. A cleverly worded introduction preceded the final number, "Roll On You Mississippi," and at the finish Miss Hammond took five bows amid very good applause.

CON MAFFIE (New York Paradise) presented a program of request numbers which were legitimate but which were burlesqued when they were orally introduced by him. He added enjoyable comedy situations by including cartoon slides of supposed letters in between the real ones. The songs played were "Nevertheless," "Keeping Company," "Ah, Sweet Mystery of Life," "Million Dollar Baby," and "I Love You in the Same Sweet Way."

At the finish of the request numbers, Maffie mentioned that inasmuch as he had received around thirty-six more requests he had used the titles of each of them to form the lyrics for "Happy Days are Here Again." This received a good hand, as did his "Mysterious Human Voice" effect and his own singing of "I Love You in the Same Sweet Way." The "M. H. V." effect was merely the use of a singer who hummed through a mike in the organ loft as the organist played a chorus of the last named song on the "vox humana." This supposed invention of Maffie's really did have three-quarters of the audience mystified.

EARL ABEL (San Antonio Texas) rendered an organ solo "idea" of his own which he termed "School Daze." "School Days" was the opening selection, followed by "Many Happy Return of the Day"; "Aw, Come On and Let's Get Friendly"; "Nevertheless" and "The Eyes of Texas are Upon You," this bringing a great big hand. Earl Abel had a school bell and tower mounted on the console. When the audience didn't sing very loudly, the organist would ring the bell, and when the "singing teacher" rang the bell they all knew just what it meant.

"PUTTING OVER" COMMUNITY SONG FESTS
NOW READY FOR IMMEDIATE ENGAGEMENTS

ADDRESS M & T DEPT., MOTION PICTURE HERALD

1790 BROADWAY NEW YORK, N. Y.

UP AND DOWN THE ALLEY

Hello Everybody!

George Engles, vice president in charge of NBC Artists Service, has just appointed J. Ernest Cutting (for the past year and a half booker of dance orchestras for NBC), and Edward Paul English III, former social director at the Lido Club, Long Island, to supervise NBC musical and social activities at the new Hotel Waldorf-Astoria. . . . Their offices will be in the hotel. . . .

Just received a nice letter from Miss Betty Hammond, "The Sweet and Hot Girl from the South." . . . Betty, who has been organist at the Strand and Saenger theatres in "Nu Awleens" for the past four years, was a recent visitor to Broadway and during her stay received an assignment to go to the Riviera, Scranton, Pa., to fill the job as solo organist . . . and according to manager reports she is doing real well already. . . . She has not only got herself set at the theatre but she also is to play over WGPI from the big four manual organ in the Masonic, twice a week. . . .

That new DeSylva, Brown & Henderson tune, "When Autumn Leaves Begin to Fall," which was written by "the boys," is an appropriate number and it's getting quite a play with theatre orchestras, organists and also over the air. . . . It's a darned nice tune and it looks like it will be one of the firm's best sellers soon. . . .

Johnny Winters, former organist at Dallas and Houston, Texas, for Publix, is "putting over" an entertainingly varied program up at Warners' Beacon for his first week there. . . . The discriminating audiences of this house are getting a presentation that runs from the most difficult of operatic music to red hot jazz. . . .

Jack Robbins, president of Robbins Music, has just signed Dorothy Fields and Jimmy McHugh for their exclusive services. . . . This famous team recently returned from the Coast where they previously were contracted directly by Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer. . . . Their latest achievement includes the score of the forthcoming film, "The Cuban Love Song." . . . They have written a song titled "Cuban Love Song," which runs through the picture as a musical background, and is expected to prove one of the greatest talkie songs of all times. . . .

Irving Fiedler, former pianist at the Brooklyn Gates, has been promoted to musical conductor at this house and has brought youth and pep at one house where it was sorely needed. . . . Phil Lampkin is now m. c. and orchestra conductor at the Savoy in Brooklyn. . . . The house is changing hands and it may be that Phil and his gang will be out, here's hoping he won't because the house needs him and the audience likes him. . . .

NBC To Sponsor Symphony

Rudolph Ganz, former director of the St. Louis Symphony, will head the National Little Symphony, which is being organized under the sponsorship of the National Broadcasting Company.

J. C. Jenkins—His Colyum

Casper, Wyo.

DEAR HERALD:

When you boys who like to fish go to Valentine, Neb., look up Harold Dunn of the Jewel theatre and he can tell you where every crappy and black bass bed is in the country.

When we got in Valentine Tuesday evening Harold grabbed us and said, "Come on with me," and we said, "Now look here, boy, we're not going up to your house to supper; that's settled right now, for Mrs. Dunn is entitled to a little consideration from both of us," but he replied, "Shut up that noise and come on," and so we did, and when we sat down to her dinner table there was a great big platter sitting right in the center with four great big black bass done to a beautiful brown and all four of 'em within easy reach of where they seated us, and oh, boy, but then why bring up such pleasant memories when it's hotel grub for us from this time on? If Mrs. Dunn don't know how to serve a dinner, then all you can get at the Ritz-Carlton is a handout.

Harold sent us over a detour because they were working the regular road, and after we got out about four miles we tried to go up a steep sandhill and when we got about half way up April Shower began to quiver and shake and finally gave a big cough and stopped. We looked back and she had buried herself clear to the runningboard in loose sand.

We debated a while as to whether to go back and shoot Harold or give him rat poison and let him die a lingering death, but presently an old Sioux Indian and his squaw came along in a wagon on their way to the fair at Valentine.

We wanted to appear friendly and so we stopped them and said, "How Cola," and the old buck grunted "How." Then we said, "Say, old timer, won't you hook your team on this car and pull us up this hill?" but they both sat there and looked at us and never gunted. Our knowledge of Sioux was so limited that it was painful, but we worked what little of it we knew, but to no effect; then we said, "Heap big sand hill; car she no pullem; you take cayuse and pullem; we pay." Then the old squaw crawled out of the wagon and came over to the car and said, "How much pay he pullem?" We reached in our pocket and pulled out a silver dollar and a half and handed her the half, but she got her eye on the dollar and that was where we made a mistake, for she said, "Dollar he pullem," and we replied, "No; half dollar he pullem." Then she said, "No dollar, no pullem." Then we thought we'd try something else on her, so said, "Now look here, Minnie Ha Ha, don't you realize that we are passing through the greatest depression this country ever experienced, and don't you know that that Wall Street smash a couple of years ago made paupers out of a lot of us millionaires? Have a heart, Minnie; have a heart." But she said, "No dollar, no pullem."

Then a brilliant idea struck us. We thought we'd touch her vanity, so we said, "Say, Min, how would you like to get in this car and go out to Hollywood with us and make a picture? You and me will play a love scene in it and we will call the picture HOT FOR MINNIE, and you can take it from us, old kid, that it will be a riot; it will panic the picture going public and—but just then we saw the old buck start to climb out of the wagon and we thought best to change the subject, so we handed over the dollar and she grunted something to the old buck in Sioux and he unhitched his broncs from the wagon and hooked on to the car and pulled us up the hill.

A Fine Theatre

Dad Pace at Charron has about the finest theatre in the Northwest. Dad says business could be worse, but he don't know how. It would seem that a town the size of Chadron would storm Dad's theatre until he'd have to put on sideboards. He thinks business will pick up when the potato harvest is on and we hope he is right.

H. J. Heterick at Whitney has closed his theatre for the time being, but he still hangs on to the HERALD. He thinks he may open the show later on and he wants to be right in the procession with the boys who are up to the minute and that the HERALD will be just what he will need. He tried to hold us over to dinner with him, but good gosh! we can't stop at 9 o'clock in the morning and wait for dinner when we've got that long, long trail ahead of us. Smothertime, H. J. Thanks just the same.

Mrs. Higgins at Crawford has leased her theatre to Harry McDonald, but still retains her place in the box office. When it once gets in the blood it's hard to get it out. She said she was glad to meet us again, but when we told her that her subscription had expired to the HERALD she nearly fainted, but she said, "Not on your life; don't you think I will ever let that expire." There should be more members of the Higgins family in the business, and then business would pick up.

Good Projection

Judge J. H. Wilhermsdorfer of Harrison wanted us to stop long enough to hear his sound equipment and see his projection. He had his son screen for us Columbia's GOOD BAD GIRL with James Hall and Mae Clark. If Columbia never makes a worse picture than GOOD BAD GIRL they will never have any call to apologize for their service, and if there is any theatre in the country that has any better projection and better sound than the Judge has, it has been our misfortune to have skipped it.

J. F. McParland of the S. & S. theatre at Rushville is fully equipped to give that community all that is desired in amusements. He has a fine ballroom in the basement of his theatre and he obtains the best music possible, and this, together with his knowledge of how to select his pictures for his patrons, puts Rushville rather well up to the front of the procession for entertainment for a town of that size.

W. T. Porter of the Garden theatre at Lusk, Wyo., has been running three changes a week, but thinks he will have to go to two changes unless business takes a turn for the better. Lusk is a right snappy town and Mr. Porter has a theatre that would seem to meet with all the requirements of a town twice the size.

Schulte a Hero

HELP, HELP! We have just called on E. J. Schulte of the Rialto, Rex and America theatres here in Casper and three film hounds from Denver have got him out on a limb and the Home Guards are off on vocation.

Schulte says they have scuttled the ship, but before he will run up the white flag he will go down to a wet and briny grave, unloved and unsung if need be. Heroes like that generally die young. If the boys are trying to sell Schulte film on the basis of what Casper was 10 years ago, 'taint fair, for 10 years ago Casper had 35,000 people, while today she has about 20,000 and maybe not that many. Well, anyhow, let 'em fight; they are all Irish but two Swedes and two Dutchmen, so what's the difference.

At Lusk we met R. J. Behmyer, film salesman for Pathe. R. J. told us he wanted us to send the HERALD to his home address in Denver so his wife could read our Colyum to keep the blues away during his absence. Now there's a sensible man. The woods ought to be full of 'em.

We wonder what the film boys back east would think if they had a territory to cover that was nine hundred miles from the exchange on one side and a thousand miles on the other.

We are heading for the Yellowstone National Park. We've been routed that way and if we can't get through the park we will have to backtrack over two hundred and fifty miles of the same road we went over. If we get snowed in in the park we are going to sue the Government for damages.

Just now it looks like we'd be snowed in, for there is a heavy bank of clouds hanging over the mountains and the mercury is headed downwards.

THE RELEASE CHART

Productions are listed according to the names of distributors in order that the exhibitor may have a short-cut toward such information as he may need, as well as information on pictures that are coming. Features which are finished or are in work, but to which release dates have not been assigned, are listed in "Coming Attractions." Running times are those supplied by the distributors. Where they vary, the change is probably due to local censorship deletions. Dates are 1930, unless otherwise specified.

6 MONTHS FROM NOW!

(It takes two minutes to read this. It will give you plenty to think about!)

WE'RE NOT PESSIMISTS! We merely believe in being prepared for any contingency. If there's a cold, hard winter ahead we're ready for it! Are you? If there's going to be keen shopping for pictures by the public, we're set for it. Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's plans for 1931-32 visualize a year when it is more necessary than ever for M-G-M showmen to have a wide edge over competition. Last year we took top production honors in a walk! The "Trader Horns", "Free Souls", "Politics", "Min and Bills", and all the rest of them — we'll have shows of that calibre plus! We've got the important money names — no question about it—the Davies, Garbos, Crawfords, Shearers, Haines, Dresslers, Novarros, Lunt-Fontannes, Keatons, Gilberts, Montgomerys, Beerys, Tibbetts, Jackie Coopers, Clark Gables and more!

NOW IS THE TIME to visualize what your theatre marquee would look like if those names were to appear on your competitor's house-front! Now is the time to look ahead to SIX MONTHS FROM NOW and realize that what you buy now is what you'll have to sell to your public THEN! To a public that won't be in the mood to throw money away on unknown quantities!

NEVER BEFORE in all the history of this industry was your buying problem more important! Success!—or Failure!—there's no in-between this year! Buy badly and you'll have empty seats in these times! Buy with intelligence and you'll have the assurance backed by seven years of solid success of another Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer Year!

MOTION PICTURE HERALD

Vol. 105, No. 2 October 10, 1931

Our Great Anniversary

FORTY-TWO years ago this week—the morning of October 6, 1889—the motion picture was born and christened the Kinetoscope, in the West Orange laboratories of Mr. Thomas A. Edison. And coincidentally he was then a youth of forty-two. This natal day of his most famed invention found Mr. Edison, in his eighty-fourth year, struggling for life against his first grave illness, at his home in Llewellyn Park, while the Society of Motion Picture Engineers in session at Swampscott was voting him special honors.

It was a bright autumn Sunday morning that Mr. Edison returned from an excursion to Paris and hurried over to his laboratories to see the newly completed "living picture" machine, assembled in his absence, after tedious months of research begun in 1887. It had been only since late in the August of '89, when he had received the first sample of Eastman film, that Mr. Edison had felt content that the problem of the motion picture was solved.

The whole vast empire of the screen has since been builded on that little black box with the peep hole, the Kinetoscope, into which Edison peered just forty-two years ago.

The Engineers Elect

THE election of Dr. Alfred N. Goldsmith to the presidency of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers may be observed to be of a piece with the increasing scope of the technology of the industry. For its first three and a half decades of existence the motion picture was entirely photographic, with its problem consisting of lumens and ergs. Today with sound it is also much concerned with ohms and frequencies, gammas and decibels and such. And with that lurking minx Television somewhere in the ambush of the future there will be more and merrier complexities of technology. Dr. Goldsmith in his capacity as vice-president and chief engineer of the Radio Corporation of America, with all of its subsidiaries and assorted scientific coordinations, is eminently well chosen for the leadership of the growing society. He also brings to the position a very considerable experience in organization and administrative affairs in scientific societies in other and related fields.

Mr. J. I. Crabtree, who had been the signally successful president of the Society for the last two terms and now refusing renomination, may well look with satisfaction on the progress that has been made in the years that the destinies of the organization have been under his guidance. His close familiarity with scientific aspects of the industry, through his activities in the Eastman research laboratories at Rochester, and his energetic appreciation of the increasing problems of the industry and the responsibilities of the Society have enabled him to render sterling service, and to leave the post of president with his organization in a decidedly stronger and vastly more important position.

Decidedly important problems appear in the immediate future of the organization, most immediately urgent among them the question of inter-relating activities between the great technical centers of the East, where motion picture engineering begins, and the West where it becomes an applied science. Meanwhile the Society of Motion Picture Engineers and its technicians have ahead tremendous work to do. The dissemination of motion picture technology has hardly more than begun. A movement in progress aimed at reduction of the subscription price of the society's Journal, and plans to make membership more easily available to juniors are both important to the wellbeing of the industry.

Of and For Hometown

A SPECTACULAR demonstration of the manner in which a motion picture theatre can be woven into the life of its community is afforded in the "Booster Club" for youngsters now flourishing in New Orleans under the auspices of the Saenger Theatre and the Item-Tribune. A real membership of 15,000 children means a contact with a vast array of homes and a big adult audience as well. An interesting story of the rise and success of the club is told in a special article in this issue, by Mr. Joseph M. Estes, the organizer. It is increasingly important that the motion picture theatre be of and for its community. It is not wholesome that the public mind should think of the motion picture institution as the sole property of a group of gentlemen who sit in offices on Broadway and operate factories in Hollywood.

THE STILL OF THE MONTH

EARNEST BACHRACH is the photographer who wins this month's attention for the best still out of Hollywood. Mind you this is a judgment of still photographs and nothing else. It tells its story in nuances of light and shade with the singleness of purpose and economy of detail that make it art. One may have any number of notions about other aspects of the matter. The picture portrays Erich Von Stroheim and Lily Damita in "Friends and Lovers," a Radio picture, directed by Victor Schertzinger, from a novel by Maurice de Kobra. It is, entirely incidentally, an extraordinary portrait of Mr. Von Stroheim. The purpose of this monthly page is to encourage and recognize the art of still photography as an important function of motion picture activity.

WARNER-WESTERN ELECTRIC BREACH SEEN WIDER; LEANS TOWARD RCA

Britain to Aid English Industry

(By Cable)—The British government has at last decided to lend a helping hand to the industry in England. After hanging fire for six months, a plan to aid distributors in British colonies has been set and awaits the trade's office sanction.

A central clearing house will be formed through which will be marketed all product of English companies, in West Indies, east and west Africa, Malay States, Hong Kong and lesser colonies. Canada, evidently, is not included in the plan.

The new company will be operated by C. M. Woolf, Gaumont British; John Maxwell, British International; Simon Rowson, Gaumont British; Sam Smith, British Lion and Regal Films, and H. Bruce Woolfe, British Instructional. Sir Reginal F. Johnson will represent the government.

One-Man Booth May Change Code

Wholesale revision of the national electrical code governing the operation of projection machines is expected in equipment circles if the present agitation for a one-man booth assumes nationwide proportions.

Work of operators would be considerably lessened by a new code, it is expected, and this is to allow the single projectionist to concentrate solely on the projector's operation to safeguard against fire.

New Plan to Help Solve One-Man Booth Agitation

Theatre owners may be presented with a new union plan which would give additional duties to operators in houses which operate on a two-man booth policy. Complete supervision of equipment and full responsibility of checking apparatus would be done by the second operator at no increase in wage scale.

The plan, it is understood, would be suggested to break down resistance to the employment of two men in towns where theatre owners are fighting for a single projectionist.

Warner Reopening All Houses, Including New Coast Western

Warners is going ahead rapidly with plans to reopen all theatres of the circuit which have been closed during the summer. Dan Michalove, head of the circuit, has added the Nittany, at State College, Pa., to the circuit's list. All theatres will be open within two weeks.

The new Warner Western theatre, in Los Angeles, erected at a cost of $2,000,000 was officially opened on Wednesday.

7,500 Seats for Picture House at RCA's "Radio City"

Engineers and RCA executives in charge of building the picture theatre which will be a part of "Radio City," are at a loss to determine its size. Plans already drafted provide for a house seating 7,500, but company chiefs are of divided opinion as to the advisability of erecting a structure seating so many.

If the theatre is built from present plans, the house will have a proscenium opening twice as large as the Roxy in New York, and a stage equally as large.

The Roxy operating costs for moving sets and scenery totals $1,500 each week, while a $4,500 weekly cost has been estimated for the new RCA structure.

Allied Theatre Owners of Ohio, Kentucky and West Virginia, with headquarters in Cincinnati, will hold the first annual convention at the Netherland-Plaza hotel there, November 10 and 11.

Would Be First Company To Turn From W. E. Sound

Deal Quietly Concluded for Photophone Installation in New Dixie, Kentucky House

Further widening of the breach between Warner Brothers and Western Electric is indicated. Warners, it is understood, will in the future lean considerably toward RCA Photophone, Erpi's competitor, in purchasing sound equipment for new Warner houses.

The reported Warner move to the RCA camp comes as a sequel to the long drawn out Warner-Erpi battle which now is being arbitrated in New York.

With the exception of RKO, which is an RCA ally, all major distributor-circuits have practically concentrated on the use of Western Electric sound equipment in studio and theatre. Warners' breakaway from this group would be the first step of its kind.

Warners have quietly concluded a deal for the purchase of a Photophone sound reproducer for its new Dixie theatre at Mayfield, Kentucky. Another will be bought immediately for an important Warner key house which is scheduled for opening soon, and negotiations now said to be under way will, within the next month, reveal definitely the exact nature of Warners' future relations with Photophone—and, possibly, the extent to which Warners will refrain from doing business with the Western Electric sound subsidiary.

Holds Blanket Contract

Electrical Research holds a blanket installation contract for Warner theatre business, the existence of which is the basis of much speculation in view of Warners' new dealings with RCA. Whether or not Warners will seek a release from this contract, or ignore it completely, is a question which can only be answered sometime in the future; likewise Western's reception of the reported Warner bolt and possible action —if any—which the electric will take to prevent it.

Executives at Western Electric, Warner Brothers and RCA Photophone refused to discuss the situation when queried this week regarding the significance and possible outcome of Warner-Photophone dealings, although verification of the new Kentucky deal was made at the RCA home office. Charles Bunn, chief of sales at Erpi, merely stated: "It's all news to me."

Resume Arbitration November 1

The Warner-Western tilt dates back five years, when Western and Warners got together for the purpose of commercializing sound. Western Electric, it is claimed, owes Warners $50,000,000 on royalties involving disc recording and reproduction. Two years ago, Warners and Western Electric agreed to arbitrate the claim; the board of arbitra-

LOSING CHICAGO FIGHT WOULD BE NATIONAL LOSS, GILFORD WARNS

Declares Operators Run Houses, Not Owners

Turning Point in Depression Reached Myers Tells Delegates at Allied Convention in Michigan

Chicago theatre owners are fighting a national battle with projectionists, delegates attending the annual Allied Michigan convention were told this week at Mt. Clemons, Mich., by Fred Gilford of Chicago, a director of the Chicago Allied Association, who stated that Chicago exhibitors are not merely fighing a local situation, but one of national importance. If they lose their fight, he said, theatre owners of the nation are threatened; projectionists will have gained the foothold which exhibitors nationally have succeeded in undermining in the labor war of the early part of this season.

"Operators are running Chicago theatres, and not the owners and managers," Gilford concluded in his fiery speech which was the most sensational of the Michigan confab.

Corner Turned, Says Myers

Preceding Gilford on the speakers' platform was national President Abram F. Myers, who sounded a generally optimistic business note when he stated that the turning point of the depression had been reached and that he believed, after a careful survey, that all industries were on the road to recovery and prosperity.

Myers pointed out that there have been worse depression periods than the current situation. He warned the industry that it must be prepared to fight a sales and luxury tax which will be introduced in the next Congressional session. Industry must be alert or its passage will be certain, Myers said in advising theatre owners that the tax will be rushed through Congress.

Copyright abuses and the two-man booth situation came in for vehement denunciation by Myers.

The convention passed resolutions protesting service charges and the high rates for trailer service.

Glenn Cross President

Glenn Cross of Battle Creek was elected president; P. C. Schram, Kalamazoo, vice-president; H. T. Hall, Detroit, secretary, and John Niebes, Detroit, treasurer.

Flint was selected as the meeting place next year. Ray Moon, of Cooperative Booking Corp., Detroit, took first prize in the convention golf tournament.

A long list of grievances by the local Detroit Exhibitors' Club, part of Allied, against the state association, was not brought before the delegates, as had been expected. The club charges mismanagement and inefficiency in the conduct of affairs of the state association. A complete measure of reform was to be advanced by the Detroit group, but when it found itself outvoted even before presentation, leaders of the club withheld the resolution

However, club members announced they would pay no more dues and would drop out of the state association, contributing financially only when Allied needed help in fighting for protective measures and against legislation, labor, etc.

Glad Tidings

Believe it or not, numerous welcome notes of optimism are beginning to seep through the hard-to-penetrate spirit of pessimism.

A staff reporter making the rounds through New York's film circle this week heard, in four different spots, glad tidings of a brighter outlook for the film industry in the immediate future.

Giannini To Head 438 Coast Banks

Dr. A. H. Giannini will leave New York for Hollywood in about one week to assume the chairmanship of the executive committee of the Bank of America National Trust and Savings Association, which operates 438 branches along the West Coast.

Officials of the Bank of America have been urging the financier by telegraph for the past several weeks to accept the post. Giannini, in the new position, will actually be in direct charge of the largest banking organization on the Pacific Coast.

It is definitely understood that he will not sever his long-standing identification with motion picture production financing, and the film industry in general, although his headquarters will be in Los Angeles instead of New York. Giannini is said to have described his move as merely a change in address, referring to his motion picture connections.

Academy States Plagiarism Rule

The conciliation committee of the Academy of M. P. Arts and Sciences at Hollywood, at its last session announced a special rule applying to plagiarism cases, which states: "It shall be the committee's policy not to undertake the hearing of a claim coming under the general head of plagiarism unless both parties concerned voluntarily agree in writing in advance of the hearing to abide by the decision of the committee."

All studio executives have been informed of the ruling and it is now definitely in effect.

Ochs, Kaplan Sign Pact Terminating Long Union Fight

Lee Ochs, militant New York City independent exhibitor, who heretofore has consistently refused to employ union projectionists in the booths of his theatres, and Sam Kaplan, president of Local 306 of the union, on Thursday signed an agreement at the hospital bedside of Sol Bloom, intermediary or arbitrator in the protracted negotiations.

The agreement, which becomes effective on Monday, October 13, brings to an end a long-drawn and often bitter struggle between the union leader, Kaplan, and Ochs, which commenced last March and since has been one of the dominant issues in projectionist circles in New York.

The consummation of the pact, which will extend for "an average period of time," in the words of Harmon Yaffa, partner of Ochs, sets at rest recent rumors that Ochs would employ members of the Empire State union, a group not affiliated with Local 306. The agreement provides for two men in a booth, and payment of full salary contingent upon the individual house grossing a stated amount.

Ochs' 10 theatres in uptown Manhattan and the Bronx—Manhattan, Costello, Uptown, Majestic, Gem, Ogden, Kingsbridge, Tuxedo, Mosholu, United States—have, since last March, been the object of a vigorous series of applied pressure maneuvers directed by Kaplan. Women's clubs in the neighborhood of the various houses have staged series of outdoor entertainments, sponsored by the union in an effort to draw patronage from the Ochs theatres. In addition, in September, was started the New York Labor World, union labor weekly, published uptown in close proximity to the Ochs theatres. Each issue has carried militant attacks, some signed by Kaplan, others by Morrison, editor, charging Ochs with "backwardness" and "buying cheap labor." These papers were circulated in the neighborhood of, and for the most part, directly before the Ochs houses, which have been regularly picketed.

Six of the 10 houses recently were turned back to Ochs by Fox, which had unionized them. Last week, Ochs was understood to have agreed to reinstate union labor in these six houses as a compromise measure, but Kaplan had refused to consider the offer.

The refusal on the part of Ochs in past years to unionize his projection booths is understood among oldtimers to have been based, not particularly on the wage question, but more especially on the methods employed by the union in enforcing its demands.

DISTRIBUTORS GO AHEAD ON ZONING; NEGOTIATIONS BEGUN AT CLEVELAND

Honors and the Pioneers

An esteemed contemporary, The Film Daily, on Tuesday last presented on its first page a conspicuous "box" item reading as follows:

LEROY RECOGNIZED AS PROJECTION INVENTOR

Swampscott, Mass.—After two years' controversy the S.M.P.E. has recognized Jean A. Leroy as the inventor of the first projector used commercially for the public and has extended him an honorary membership. Expected opposition failed to materialize. The Society also gave an honorary membership to Eugene Lauste as inventor of sound recording apparatus. Action was taken at the recommendation of the board of governors and historical committee, following investigation.

Since this item appeared at variance with the probable facts, and carried with it implications of purposes rather beyond the superficial matter presented, a telegraphic inquiry was addressed to Mr. George Schutz, editor of Better Theatres, representing Quigley Publications at the Society of Motion Picture Engineers Convention at Swampscott, resulting in the following reply:

JEAN LEROY AND EUGENE LAUSTE ARE TO GET HONORARY MEMBERSHIP FOR EARLY WORK IN SOUND AND PROJECTION. NO CONSIDERATION WAS HAD OF LEROY AS INVENTOR OF PROJECTOR BUT ONLY AS NOTABLE PIONEER.

It so chances that the editor of MOTION PICTURE HERALD is and has been for these several years a member of the historical committee of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers, and was a party to the report upon which it was agreed that it would be proper to recognize Mr. Leroy and Mr. Lauste as pioneers only.

It is also true that a number of years ago the present editor of MOTION PICTURE HERALD had occasion on his own account as a student of the industry to examine into the alleged claims of both of these esteemed old gentlemen, together with their archives, and their testimonies in old patent controversies and their commercial records. Again and subsequently, when an effort was made to seek special recognition and aid for Mr. Leroy from the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, Inc., this editor made a re-survey of the alleged evidences. Several times since he has been solicited by persons interested for a modification of his negative findings as to claims of priority. He has repeatedly in spoken word and in writing stipulated that no harm could be done by recognition of the fact that both of these interesting gentlemen were among the early workers in the industry, and beyond that nothing.

It is still proper that they should be so honored. The editor of MOTION PICTURE HERALD treasures a friendly relation with both Mr. Leroy and Mr. Lauste, without at all agreeing that their retroactive memories and the melodramatic fancies of their friends square with the records.

Meanwhile one may mention, too, that because of sundry pending and impending controversies, and hopes of questioning concerning the prior art, it is reported that both Mr. Leroy and Mr. Lauste have been retained by the Telephone company as consultants. This is entirely proper, but is not to be taken as a ground for assumption that they founded the art.

The certain final findings of every unprejudiced investigator will discover that: Thomas Edison invented and delivered the Kinetoscope, the mechanism upon which the entire industry was founded; that Auguste and Louis Lumiere of Lyon, France, first demonstrated to the public a projector which developed a career and contribution to the industry; that Thomas Armat of Washington presented the first projector of large commercial importance and the projection machine on which the present art is founded; and that all of these mechanisms depended for their success upon the flexible photographic medium known as "film" evolved by George Eastman for his "roller photography" now known as the Kodak.

The issues concerned have long ago been amply closed and settled, for all save those who rely on short memories and a hope that reiteration may pass for fact.

Spikes Reports of Delay Pending Trial of Suit

Palfreyman Confers With Exchange Managers and Exhibitors—Omaha System Called "Satisfactory"

(By a Staff Correspondent)

Confirming MOTION PICTURE HERALD'S exclusive announcement that national distributors immediately would resume conferences with exhibitors seeking the establishment of uniform zoning and protection plans, Dave Palfreyman, distributors' representative, from the Hays office, arrived in Cleveland early this week and participated in joint negotiations between exchange managers and exhibitors on zoning.

Palfreyman left on Thursday for New York with two uniform zoning plans to present to distributors.

The current Cleveland negotiations are the first of several planned by national distributors for the immediate future, and their beginning definitely discredits anonymous reports published by New York daily trade papers this week to the effect that national distributors had decided not to participate in zoning conferences until the suit attacking the legality of the uniform zoning and protection plan recommended by Omaha, Nebraska, exhibitors has been tried. The action was instituted by W. R. Youngclaus, a Madison, Nebraska, exhibitor.

Proceed With Negotiations

Distributors' representatives have announced their intention to proceed with negotiations for establishment of zoning plans wherever invited to do so by exhibitors and numerous requests to this effect have been made by Cleveland exhibitors, and exhibitors in other cities where existing zoning systems have proved unsatisfactory. The distributors' representatives are understood to be proceeding with zoning negotiations in such situations in accordance with an opinion recently expressed by the Department of Justice which indicated that "fair and reasonable protection," equitably arrived at, would be legal.

Omaha Status "Satisfactory"

Trial of the Nebraska suit cannot be concluded prior to next spring, according to official opinion, and in view of the insistent demands of both exhibitors and distributors in certain situations for immediate establishment of zoning plans, a six months' delay because of an obscure and unrelated legal action would be unwarranted and unlikely, insists responsible distributor opinion.

Omaha exhibitors and exchange men, in the territory affected by the Youngclaus suit, expressed the opinion this week that the existing zoning agreement there is "satisfactory" and that "confusion and disappointment will result from abandonment."

In defense of the BUDGET

...he faces management's demand for PROOF of full value per dollar

Somewhere, in an executive office, a director of advertising rises in his chair. The budget —his budget—is questioned...

He moves in defense of media, of space requirements, of insertion timing.

And yet, behind his defense, how certain is he of the underlying truths about the raw material his budget buys? About circulation volume, values, distribution?

Positively, accurately he knows these things if his budget calls only for publications of audited circulation.

He knows—and business accepts—the indisputable character of data from the Audit Bureau of Circulations. The full story of circulation practice is given freely and frankly by A. B. C. publications. They open up everything to the A. B. C. auditors and the Bureau in turn transmits the facts to you.

Make sure that your budget, this year above all years, rests upon undebatable values, upon audited circulations. Success or failure in many a campaign may hang on the extra margin of value that Bureau information—and that only—can bring.

THE INDUSTRY'S OWN SCOTLAND YARD

Copyright Protection Bureau investigates thousands of cases with millions involved

By SHERWIN A. KANE

For some years the motion picture industry has had its own Scotland Yard, with operatives adventuring up and down the land unearthing irregularities and peculations in the motion picture exchanges and theatres. Thousands of cases have been investigated, and millions of dollars a year are involved. All the while a hush-hush policy has been in effect and few persons in the industry other than transgressors who have felt its hand have known of its existence. The article presented here, written by a member of MOTION PICTURE HERALD'S staff, is the first discussion of the Bureau to appear in print. —THE EDITOR

The history of the Copyright Protection Bureau is the history of law and order applied to an industry in which the opportunities for misappropriation and diversion of income, at one time, were almost unlimited.

Beginning about 15 years ago, organized and systematic practices first began to divert large sums of money from distributing organizations. The coffers of the industry were unguarded at their source, and so common and comparatively simple did the practice of profitable irregularities in film exhibition become that the racketeers and crooked operators out of scores of other industries and occupations were attracted to the film and theatre business and, after plying their peculiar talents within it for a period of years, threatened its professional repute, if not its very existence.

First Effort in 1921

Local sales and distributing organizations in New York were first to realize the need of an organized checkmate on the widespread and costly irregularities which were increasing from year to year. In 1921, the New York Film Club, the precursor of the present Film Board of Trade office, created a secret investigating organization which operated against contract violators in the metropolitan area in the manner of a local constabulary. Not only were dishonest exhibitors exposed and their operations curtailed, but the dishonest members of the distributors' own organizations were identified and prosecuted.

So effective was the work of the New York "constabulary," and so amazing the scope of the irregularities it uncovered, that the national distributors became interested. They assigned Jack H. Levin, the present director of operations of the Copyright Protection Bureau, to extend the investigations of the New York organization into the principal national distributing centers.

In 1927, after an exhaustive investigation of exhibition conditions nationally, Levin presented his findings to the national distribution organizations. They confirmed the revelations of the New York "constabulary" as existing in all sections of the country. Accordingly, Gabriel L. Hess, now associated with the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, was summoned by the distributors to recommend ways and means of eliminating the unusual practices in existence.

Plan Presented by Hess

The same year, Hess presented his plan for the organization of the Copyright Protection Bureau to operate on a national scale and in the territories of the United States, for the purpose of investigating and revealing unlicensed exhibitions and other exhibitor malpractices. The Bureau was to be maintained by the appropriations of the distributors. Hess was placed in charge of the Bureau in order to act as its chief counsel, a capacity he retains today. Levin was placed in charge of investigating operations, and an associate legal staff, headed by Edward A. Sargoy, was organized.

Within a year after the Bureau began its operations, it was revealed in the St. Louis territory, the subject of one of the first investigations outside New York, that pictures there were not being booked for approximately 20 per cent of their available playing time because of the prevalence of unlicensed exhibitions. Similar revelations in other cities were responsible for an estimate, made three years ago, that national distributors were losing in excess of $10,000,000 annually due to unpaid for available playing time resulting from unauthorized exhibitions.

These irregularities were at their height at the time. They had been on the increase, without any official restraining influence, since 1915, and in the years just prior to the organization of the Copyright Protection Bureau they were given an added impetus by the rise of the national theatre circuits with the consequent reduction of field sales forces. Film salesmen, particularly in rural sections, exerted a certain check on the common exhibition irregularities, the effect of which depended entirely on the honesty of the individual salesman and his branch manager. With the reduction of field sales forces, due to centralized national buying by the circuits, much of the sole existing "police" influence of the distributors was eliminated.

Circuit Theatres Rarely Under Fire

Somewhat offsetting the increased opportunities for irregularities for which it was responsible, the rise of the circuits eliminated a small percentage of the malpractices by absorbing, among others, some theatres which were prone to avail themselves of any opportunity for unlicensed exhibition. Circuit theatres are rarely the subjects of investigation by the Copyright Protection Bureau. Their exhaustive auditing systems and their close supervision of theatres eliminate virtually every opportunity for unlicensed exhibitions.

During a brief period of operations the Copyright Protection Bureau uncovered several thousand instances of malpractice among exhibitors. The number of violations revealed varies from year to year, depending on current sales policies and on business conditions. Percentage selling, when prevalent, inevitably increases the number of violations, as it presents the added temptation of falsification of returns.

This year, an unusually large number of violations are expected—and already indicated, according to investigators for the Bureau. The increase in the number of percentage contracts, concurrently with the existence of a subnormal business period, are expected to give the Bureau its most active year. Subnormal business increases the activities of the Bureau in two primary ways. Decreased revenues, first, make it imperative that all available revenues yield their uttermost and all costly leakages be stopped. Distributors demand increased surveillance and activity by the Bureau. Secondly, house managers and other theatre attaches who are dismissed in times of business stress, frequently express their displeasure by informing on the dishonest employers.

Many "Tip Offs" This Year

This year, the number of theatre employees "laid off" has already resulted in a large number of "tip offs" reaching the Bureau and its investigators. Discharged theatre employees rank as one of the most prolific sources of information for the Bureau. Other sources are branch managers and salesmen of the distributors' organizations, attaches of Film Boards of Trade, and other exhibitors who have been injured by the malpractices of unscrupulous competitors.

Once the "tip off" has been received, the Bureau's investigators go to work immediately seeking the evidence of irregularities, which is presented to the distributors for their action—either private settlement or legal prosecution. The Bureau maintains its investigators in or near every principal distributing center. Occasionally, in instances of extensive irregularities, the Bureau's investigating organization is supplemented by professional operatives. Specialists in certain types of violations also are maintained by the Bureau, and these progress from key to key, always in touch with branch managers.

Investigators Spurn Bribes

The Bureau's investigators have won for themselves a reputation for efficiency and integrity that might be envied by Scotland Yard and the Pinkertons. Not once in the Bureau's existence has one of its investigators been dismissed for bribe-taking or any other form of dishonesty. Thousands of dollars in cash and thousands in gifts have been offered or received by the investigators, but these are inevitably reported or, if actually received, with the purpose of turning them over to Gabriel Hess to be returned to their senders. It is a stringent rule of the Bureau and one that, so far as the knowledge of its operators is concerned, has never been violated. To do so would mean immediate dismissal, if substantiated.

The Bureau's investigations are thorough, lengthy and costly. Early in its existence, it came to learn that uncovering a single violation was next to meaningless. The offending exhibitor inevitably has an alibi which, though of little weight in a court of law, must be considered in a system such as this by which more than 90 per cent of the cases it develops are settled outside of court.

14 Major Alibis

The Bureau learned that there were 14 major alibis which would be proposed by an exhibitor against whom a case was established. Thus, it became necessary for the Bureau's investigators to reveal not one, but 14 violations, in order to exhaust all ready alibis and establish an unassailable case.

The most common of these alibis encountered by the Bureau thus far are:

1. Denial of guilt.
2. Plea of ignorance of law on copyright violations.
3. Allegation that the offense is a common practice and that the instance of which he stands charged is his first offense.
4. Allegation that his operator ran the program, in the case of holdovers, without his knowledge.
5. Non-delivery of a new program forced holdover.
6. Was at a second theatre he owned and didn't know what was going on at the first.
7. Inclement weather or other conditions made it impossible to return the film to the exchange.
8. That, in the case of rentals, he had agreed to pay the distributor too much for the film and took the irregular means to equalize matters.
9. That the print had been returned to the exchange on time, regardless, and that no damage had resulted in consequence.
10. Hadn't read his contract (which had been signed by the house manager) and consequently didn't know how many days playing time it called for.
11. That in the case of percentage contracts, he had returned "enough" to the exchange, in any event.
12. That verbal agreements with exchange existed.
13. That he had been out of town at the time of the alleged offense and was unaware of it.
14. That, in the case of falsification of returns, an innocent miscalculation had been made.

Falsifications of returns, it may be explained, are prosecuted by the Bureau under the Copyright statutes as unauthorized exhibitions, or falsifications arising out of holdovers.

Based on Federal Statutes

Prosecution of all violations established by the Copyright Bureau is based on the Federal Copyright statutes which allow damages of not more than $5,000 and not less than $250 for each offense. In the case of holdovers, the damages recoverable under the statutes are most often far in excess of the actual damage done the distributor by the unlicensed exhibition. This was demonstrated in St. Louis one year ago when a district court awarded Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer damages of over $13,000 in a case where the actual rental for the period of the unauthorized exhibition would have amounted to only $186.

This seeming discrepancy between the heavy penalties of the Copyright statutes and the apparent damage done the distributor has afforded the Bureau a weapon by which distributors are able to effect settlements out of court in more than nine cases out of every ten. It has also been the basis of bitter complaint and attack on the part of exhibitors.

Made Issue by Allied

Allied States Association has made a national issue of the matter and is about to draft proposed amendments to the Copyright statutes which will seek to have holdovers and other common violations defined as breaches of contract rather than Copyright violations.

Allied's official attitude is that with its power of invoking the Copyright statutes, the Copyright Protection Bureau becomes "an unofficial agency enforcing penalties provided by a public statute in favor of private parties which have no relation to, and are greatly in excess of, any possible damage resulting from the act penalized." Allied maintains in addition that exhibitors should be responsible only "for provable damages resulting from holdovers, as in all other cases of breach of contract."

This viewpoint was upheld by a Federal District judge at Boston last spring in denying damages to Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer and Educational Film exchanges from a Massachusetts exhibitor.

The court held that "to permit the plaintiffs to recover would be deeply inequitable. The Copyright statutes are designed to protect authors and composers against piratical appropriation of their work. They ought not to be used as a means of imposing severe penalties on a licensee for violation of a contract."

Case Awaits Rehearing

This case, however, was appealed and is now awaiting rehearing. The Copyright Protection Bureau alleges that the decision was made on a mistaken surmise on the part of the court, and declares that the same brief presented in the prosecution of that case was also offered in a similar case against a Maryland exhibitor, heard at the same time, and that the Maryland court awarded damages on substantially the same evidence as was presented in Massachusetts.

The Theatre Owners' Chamber of Commerce of New York likewise holds, as does Allied, that "the most numerous activities of the Bureau relate to holdovers, which are mere violations of the license agreement and not of the Copyright statutes, and as such should be treated as breaches of contract only."

The Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, although invited to do so by Motion Picture Herald, refused to make any statement on the attitude of the organization to the activities of the Copyright Protection Bureau and the accompanying methods of settlement and prosecution. However, the organization, through its regional affiliates, frequently warns members against violations of contract which may be construed as violations of Copyright statutes. Allied States takes the same attitude in not condoning the common offenses, but objects to the manner in which they are punished.

Other Courts Hold Differently

Other federal courts have held otherwise than the Massachusetts court in recent actions brought by the Copyright Protection Bureau; holding that the common offenses were properly prosecuted under the Copyright statutes and not to be construed as violations of contract. Among these decisions, in addition to the District of Maryland case cited above, were those of Judge Bondy of the Southern District of New York, Judge Raymond in the Western District of Michigan, Judge Meekins in the Eastern District of North Carolina, and, more recently, Judge Mack in the Southern District of New York, who decided against Apollo Film Supply Company of New York, charged with licensing "bootlegged" Pathe prints for exhibition. In the latter case, the defense contended that unauthorized exhibition was not a violation of the Copyright law, basing its contention on the Massachusetts decision. Judge Mack refused to allow the Massachusetts opinion and granted the injunction sought by Pathe.

The Copyright Protection Bureau contends that its method of settlement and invoking of the Copyright statutes is justified by the large financial loss involved, the heavy cost of investigating violations, intangible damages done producers and distributors by unauthorized exhibitions of copyrighted motion pictures, by the seriousness of the offenses to innocent and honest exhibitors, and, lastly but most significantly, perhaps, to the inequality of the damages recoverable under contract to the nature and consequences of the offense.

Cites Typical Cases

The Bureau cites what it describes as two typical cases to illustrate the damage done distributors and the harm done honest exhibitors by the practice of unlicensed exhibition.

In the first instance, a recent investigation revealed that a Philadelphia exhibitor had realized $6,000 in two months on picture holdovers. The money involved was the financial loss of the distributor. It affected all distributors by reducing the amount of available playing time in the exhibitors' theatres by shutting their product out of his houses each time a picture was held over at a clear profit to the exhibitor. This exhibitor was brought to task through the action of a discharged employee.

The case was said to be typical inasmuch as hundreds exactly like it in all respects are uncovered every month. Another recent investigation revealed that a midwestern exhibitor had obtained $11,000 in six months through holdovers of pictures bought for two days' exhibition and played three or four days. The amount involved was re-

STOCKS DID WELL, NEED 'SEASONING'

Resistance Shown By Motion Picture Shares To "Bear Drives" Adds To Prestige With Brokers

By THE ANALYST

Much has been said in the daily newspapers and financial papers uncomplimentary to the worth of motion picture securities since the New York Stock Exchange announced its comparisons of stock prices at the end of September and the end of August. Amusement stocks listed on the New York Stock Exchange showed a decline of 44 per cent during September and by attaining this high percentage led all the groupings of the Stock Exchange in the matter of depreciation. From this fact financial writers have drawn many and various conclusions, one going so far as to say that "it is to be hoped that this will be taken as a warning that the investing public will not tolerate high extravagance and wanton waste in the motion picture industry."

Financial Writers in Error

Aside from the fact that "the investing public" was conspicuous by its absence from the stock market during September, and therefore had nothing to do with the decline in motion picture stocks unless it be through the sin of omission in not buying, this writer is guilty of the error, common to many, that the Amusement grouping of the New York Stock Exchange is the motion picture industry. As a matter of fact, amusements within the meaning of the statisticians of the New York Stock Exchange includes radio, phonograph, and piano companies as well and legitimate theatre companies in addition to motion picture companies. For that reason amusement statistics from the New York Stock Exchange are meaningless as far as the motion picture industry is concerned.

As a matter of fact, the motion picture stocks did not do as badly in the stock market during September as the financial writers are prone to believe. The list published in adjoining columns is compiled for the purposes of following daily fluctuations in the market. In addition to motion picture companies it takes in others that are dependent, to a greater or less extent, upon motion picture companies for income and therefore is a much fairer list upon which to base percentage comparisons to reflect the actions of motion picture stocks than is the Stock Exchange grouping of "Amusements."

This whole list shows an average decline of 9½ points from an average price of 35⅛ as of August 31. This is a decline of 29.09 per cent, a much smaller decline than was shown by "Amusements" during the month and one that more fairly reflects the action of the motion picture stocks. Eliminating all of those companies which are not strictly engaged in the production and distribution of motion pictures, the Stock Exchange stocks show a decline of 32.1 per cent for the month and the stocks listed on the New York Curb Exchange showed a decline of just an even 50 per cent. The bonds listed on the New York Stock Exchange showed a decline of 20.9 percent for the month.

Picture Stocks "Unseasoned"

Viewed from any angle, the motion picture stocks fared comparatively well in the September bear market. Considering that the oldest of the motion picture stocks, which have been in the hands of the public, was issued but 15 years ago, the resistance which they have shown to "bear drives" has done much to improve their prestige with brokers.

The treasurer of one of the larger motion picture companies, the securities of which are listed on the New York Stock Exchange, in discussing the September course of motion picture stocks in general said that for the next decade they probably would occupy a speculative position in the markets due only to the fact that they are "unseasoned."

"Seasoning merely means getting the investing public acquainted with the taste of a stock so that they will group it with those that they regard as standard," he explained. "The older generation has but little use for motion picture stocks. They regard them as something that is highly speculative and unstable, due to various reasons. The older generation can only see it as an industry made up of the class of people popularly supposed to seek the stage during the Victorean era, the 'not nice' women and the much 'un-nicer' men.

Present Generation Mainstay

"This means that the present generation is the mainstay of the motion picture stocks. They are not investing as heavily as the older persons and therefore the market for the stocks is far more limited than that for an industry that has passed through two or more generations as a recognized industry. This lack of support makes them more susceptible to technical manipulation and therefore changes in the price of motion picture stocks on the exchanges of the country do not indicate anything connected with the position of the company, whose stock is effected. The reverse is also true, that a development in connection with a company will be reflected by wider fluctuations due also to the concentrated sphere of trading.

"Railroads, then steel, and more lately the motor industry had to go through the seasoning process. The motor industry is just emerging from that stage. Motion pictures will have to continue the seasoning process until the present younger generation becomes the older generation and by that time the seasoning process will be completed and motion picture stocks will assume a stabilized position in the securities markets of the country."

Special System Of Bookkeeping For Film Houses

A special theatre ledger, an invoice record of film and a dating book comprise a new bookkeeping system designed exclusively for theatre use, and developed by Mrs. E. M. Eagleston, operating the Majestic at Seymour, Ind.

Mrs. Eagleston has been developing the system for the past six years and will market the plan, with books, for other owners. The invoice record of product provides a complete record of all films played, the date on which they are shown, receipts, expenses of the day, gross and net. The dating book gives data on all bookings, future and past, while the theatre ledger is a complete bookkeeping system in itself, being made up for a two-year period with two income tax records.

Britain Awaits Higher Rentals As Result of Gold Holiday

American companies operating at London are expected to join British distributors within six months in tilting rentals to English exhibitors, in line with drastic economic changes necessitated by the reduced buying power of the pound sterling, following Parliament's recent abandonment of the gold standard throughout the Kingdom.

Motion Picture Herald last week predicted higher rentals in England, in reporting an immediate loss of from 10 to 14% of gross rentals earned in England by American companies as a result of the gold holiday.

Orowitz Heads All RKO Vaudeville Exploitation

E. M. Orowitz has been placed in charge of all RKO vaudeville exploitation in a move which gives Jack Hess the entire handling of all picture advertising and publicity for RKO theatres.

Orowitz, who formerly handled picture exploitation, recently assumed charge of exploitation of certain phases of RKO vaudeville, and his success with these incidental assignments led to his being placed in charge of entire RKO vaudeville exploitation. Jay Blaufox, former assistant to Orowitz, has resigned.

Cohen Arrives on Coast

Emanuel Cohen, newsreel and short subjects chief of Paramount, arrived at the Hollywood plant on Wednesday, from New York, to study new production material.

Photoplay Group Gives Lunch

The American Association for the Better Photoplays gave its first luncheon of the season on Tuesday at the Hotel Astor, New York, in honor of Madge Bellamy.

Buddy Fisher, double for Benny Rubin, and free lance Coast player, arrived in New York this week from Hollywood to work for Paramount at the Astoria studio.

Your best guess is probably wrong!

Motion Picture Herald's statisticians are at work on the data which will elect the fifteen Box Office Champions, among the pictures of the 1930-31 season.

In an early issue of Motion Picture Herald the listing of this array of the best money making pictures from the point of view of the exhibitor's box office will be presented.

Let critics rave as they will, it is the grand old American public, with its dollar in its hand, that votes in this election.

The list may contain some surprises, but facts are facts and figures are figures. When pictures are to be evaluated by the show business it is money that talks, and nothing else says a word.

LABOR PROTESTS YATES ON RELIEF COMMITTEE

Branded as "Despot" by Local Union and as a "Simon Legree" by Publication of Amusement Crafts Organized labor in New York, through the mediums of Local 669, I.A.T.S.E., and the New York Labor World, official publication of amusement crafts affiliated with the American Federation of Labor, is up in arms over appointment of Herbert J. Yates to the motion picture industry's national committee for unemployment relief.

Yates, who is president of Consolidated Film Industries, Cinema Patents Corporation, Setay Corporation, and sundry other concerns, is branded as a "despot" by Local 669, and a "Simon Legree" by the labor journal.

Feel He "Doesn't Belong"

"Labor chieftains just feel that Mr. Yates doesn't belong," is the description of Yates' presence on the committee, given by Labor World, which, in its current edition, says that the laboratory chief "lacks the spirit, the social wisdom and they (the labor chiefs) further feel that his way of demonitizing human values around his plant so as to garner into his coffers more dollars makes him unfit to contact with committees organized to help the helpless.

"Despite President Hoover's call to employers to put aside wage cuts during the depression, Mr. Yates just went ahead and ignored the presidential request. But he managed to get his own salary raised."

Yates' removal from the committee is sought by Local 699 in a letter to Will H. Hays, committee chairman. The letter follows:

"Mr. Will Hays, Motion Picture Producers and Distributors, Inc., 28 West 44th street, New York City.

"Dear Sir:

"Recently the newspapers announced a committee that was formed by you to aid the jobless in the film industry. I note that one of your appointments was H. J. Yates, of the Consolidated Film Laboratories.

"When I read the other names on the committee representing the different ends of the motion picture business, I cannot help but think how wrong it is to associate such decent fellows as Sidney R. Kent, of Paramount Publix; Courtland Smith, of Pathe News, and yourself as the guiding hand, with H. J. Yates.

Cites Reduction of Force

"If he is allowed to remain on the committee, then I know nothing will be done to help the unemployed. His reputation for years has been to down labor at any cost so that he could make plenty himself.

"His most recent exploits against labor have been in his plant in Fort Lee, where he is every week reducing and forcing people to double up and triple up in their work and doing away with labor.

"Further than that, all the other laboratory plants have gone into an agreement with the local union I represent satisfactory to both parties, but Mr. Yates, as soon as he hears that any of his people have joined our organization, discharges them immediately.

"There are a number of things I could tell you about this man that possibly you do not know. You certainly could not know how he conducts his business in general, because if you did you would never have appointed him on such an important committee. He has become a wealthy man in the short space of about ten years, much of it at the expense of labor.

Charges He's "Despot"

"Now then, I ask you, can a man with such a background be sincere to help such a worthy cause as unemployment? To all those who are in the know, the name of H. J. Yates is the only black mark in the entire motion picture industry.

"Hoping to hear from you on the matter, I remain, sincerely yours,

(Signed) SAL J. SCOPPA,
Business Representative Local No. 669, I.A.T.S.E.
SJS:F.G.

"P. S.—If you can find the time to receive me at your office I should be very happy to go into details concerning this despot.

"Mayhap all the hates of all the fates
"Will help to give Mr. Yates the gates."

tion still is taking testimony in New York, although this week a postponement of one month was made to allow ex-governor Nathan L. Miller, the board chairman, to leave New York for a vacation. The postponement was pre-arranged and agreed to by both factions.

Sessions will continue on November 1, with Judge F. A. Hiscock, Syracuse, and Frank Hogan, Washington, again serving with Miller as arbitrators.

Reports that the Warner-Erpi tilt would definitely find its way into court are denied. The original Warner-Erpi sound agreement will not allow of court action unless both parties mutually agree to this method of reaching a settlement, and even then would develop only in case of disagreement in the present method of arbitrating, which is held unlikely.

British Insurance Co. Behind Buxton in Deal for Broadhead

Harry Buxton's bid of more than $1,000,000 for the string of Broadhead Manchester theatres in England is expected at London to outbid offers of British and American interests for the properties.

One of England's most important insurance corporations is backing Buxton, supplying all finances. Negotiations are held up temporarily pending disposition of the will of the late Alderman W. H. Broadhead.

Coast Managers' Unit Now Has 26 Members on Roll

Twelve hundred West Coast professionals—including players, writers and directors—are represented by the 26 members of the Artists' Managers Association, which Hollywood producers forced into being when it passed the early-Summer edict barring players' representatives and writer-director managers from Hollywood studios.

Following a series of unpleasant episodes which resulted in unfavorable publicity for important players, and which were promoted by small, unreliable managers, producers on the Coast decided to ban all managers from studio lots, where they transacted most of their business with player clients.

There followed a loud outcry in the managers' ranks and they banded together to break down the resistance to their cause which was built up by the disreputable type of representative. The Artists' Managers Association was then formed and reliable units were invited to join.

The roster now includes Phil Berg, Beyer, MacArthur & Co., Brenweber-Orsatti, W. O. Christensen, Collier & Flinn, Tom Conlon Corp., Frank & Dunlap, William S. Gill, Nat C. Goldstone, Gould-Price-Beers, Jacobs & O'Brien, Frank Joyce, Ltd., Joyce-Myron Selznick, Ltd., Ivan Kahn, John Lancaster, Arthur M. Landau, Lichtig & Englander, J. G. Mayer, Rebecca & Silton, Maurice Revnes, Fred Robinson, James Ryna, Lew Schreiber, Edward Small, Dave Thompson, Harry Wurtzel and S. George Ullman.

Representing the majority of important players, writers and directors, they have under contract, for management and general representation, 406 actors, 324 actresses, 306 writers, 171 directors, and seven orchestras used in picture and stage work.

Cole Offers Plan Of Jobless Relief

Colonel H. A. Cole, general manager of the Allied Theatre Owners of Texas, and recently named a member of the industry's National Committee on Unemployment Relief by Will H. Hays, has submitted to Hays a plan which is intended to be carried through in Texas.

The plan calls for the designation of a "prosperity week" throughout the state, and the utilization of theatres as meeting places for the instilling of optimistic messages into the minds of townspeople in each community. Merchants, under the scheme, would offer special bargains in all products during the week, and all employers in the community would be asked to publicly pledge that they will maintain all present employees for a period of six months at present salaries or better. Cole asks the use of sales forces of film companies to sell the idea in all communities throughout the state.

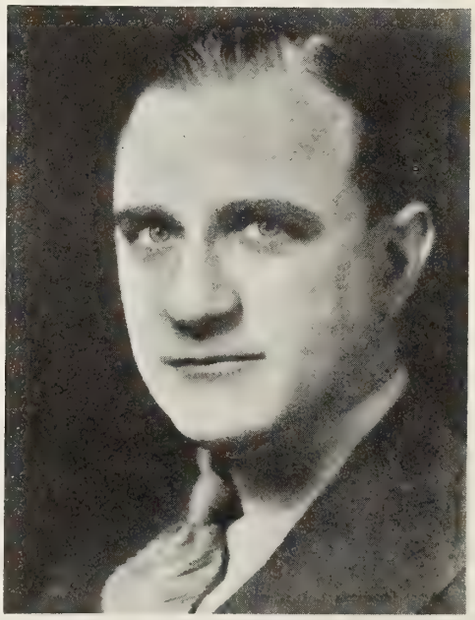
BIG ADVANCE IN DISC RECORDING

Revelations in Paper Read at SMPE Convention Challenge Sound-on-Film Supremacy

By GEORGE SCHUTZ

Completing almost four full days devoted to papers and reports offered in the advance of cinema science, the Society of Motion Picture Engineers closed its 31st convention at Swampscott, Mass., on Thursday, a meeting that celebrated the society's own fifteenth anniversary, elected a new administration and bestowed belated honor upon the motion pictures pioneers.

This convention, which with 150 members attending was even somewhat larger than the spring meeting in Hollywood, was also notable for the spirit of direct helpfulness to the industry at large that assumed the proportions of a new policy by which the society hopes to bring the laboratory much closer to the practical business of creating more appealing entertainment.



Reproduction Behind Recording

The very definite suggestions made at the banquet Wednesday night, in the valedictory address of retiring President J. I. Crabtree, were apparently deeply motivated by this spirit, and they were subsequently echoed by his newly-elected successor, Dr. Alfred N. Goldsmith, vice president and general engineer of RCA. Declaring that his visits to studios showed him that reproduction in the theatre had not kept pace with recording, Crabtree cited three reasons—deficiencies in the maintenance of equipment, imperfect release prints and imperfect projection. "It is the duty of projectionist organizations to establish corresponding seminars in key cities which projectionists from all theatres should be compelled to attend, substitutes being supplied to their own theatres during their absence," Crabtree asserted.

"The motion picture today," he continued, "is also too much of a machine. More atmosphere and glamour could be created by individuality in the technical presentation of the picture."

Suggesting color as the next major field of development for the motion picture, he also predicted the growth of the outdoor theatre, probably with rear projection to overcome adverse lighting factors.

Discussing the 16mm. film, to which this meeting gave considerable attention, Crabtree stated his belief that the narrow film in the home would never prove a serious competitor of the theatre as a means of entertainment.

DR. ALFRED N. GOLDSMITH, elected president of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers this week, has been closely associated with radio communication since the early days, and is now vice-president and general engineer of RCA. He has continued as a specialist in industrial utilization of electro-magnetic waves and in electro-acoustic devices.

Motion Picture Today Too Much Like Machine, Declares Crabtree, Urging Technical Individuality

In accepting the presidency, Dr. Goldsmith also pointed out lines along which his administration would direct the society toward the practical problems of the motion picture. There is to be a campaign to add greatly to membership through making eligible all studio workers at all associated with film technics, one of the purposes being to bring the practical worker in close association with the society's researches. Efforts in this direction have quite definitely begun, it was brought out at the last day's sessions, particularly in the reports of the screen and practical projection committees. It was revealed that the much mooted question of screen brightness, which has never received its due attention, has been almost definitely answered, it only remaining to determine upon a somewhat narrower range than the 7-to-13 foot-candles now revealed as close to a good standard.

Solving Screen Brightness

It was also brought out that both screen deterioration and the poor waxing of prints was destroying a large percentage of the original entertainment value of the picture, and it is expected to standardize practices in this field before the next convention.

What was one of the most striking revelations of the convention disclosed an extraordinary advance in disc recording that challenges the present ascendancy of sound-on-film and even suggests a return to the original sound method. H. A. Frederick of Bell Laboratories described the use of vertical recording, which Edison used in his phonograph records in the making of electrical transcriptions that boost the frequency range to 10,000 cycles.

President-Elect Tells of Plans to Open Membership to Studio Employees in Technical Work industry's debt to its early technical workers was given at the banquet Wednesday evening. Honorary memberships were bestowed upon Thomas Edison, Frederick Ives, Louis Lumiere, Charles Francis Jenkins, George Eastman, Jean Acme Leroy, and Eugene Augustin Lauste. Lauste and Ives were present to accept the honor personally. Also in tribute to their pioneering, invitations to the banquet had been sent to Thomas Armat, Donald Bell, George Melies, Oscar Messter, M. Sladanowsky, Robert Paul, W. K. L. Dickson, Charles Friese-Greene (son of William Friese-Greene), Mlle. Marie LePrince (daughter of L. A. A. LePrince), Edwin Porter and D. W. Griffith.

The significance of the work of Edison and Eastman to the motion picture was described by Terry Ramsaye, editor of MOTION PICTURE HERALD.

Sponable Is Vice President

Besides Dr. Goldsmith, president-elect, other officers chosen were: E. I. Sponable, vice-president; J. H. Kurlander, commercial engineer of Westinghouse, secretary, and H. T. Cowlic, Eastman Kodak, treasurer. Elected to the Board of Governors were the following: L. C. Porter, illumination engineer for General Electric, and O. M. Glunt, research engineer for Bell Laboratories.

Expansion of both scope and dissemination of the society's work was emphasized by Crabtree in his farewell address. Declaring plans now under way to carry the society's interest more deeply to the entire industry, he revealed one of them in a project to establish fellowships in motion picture engineering in cooperation with Massachusetts Tech and other universities. It is hoped also to make the society's journal more generally available, probably through reduction in price.

Some financial adjustments were hinted to make this extended usefulness possible, it being revealed that the society now is spending $5,000 annually beyond income, although there is $24,000 in the treasury. The important work now being done by the Academy indicated, said Crabtree, a need for close cooperation between these two technical groups. Because of the increased technical activities in Hollywood, the society should hold its convention there every two years, Crabtree stated.

Charges Studio Confusion

Hollywood also came in for striking reference of another kind in a welcoming address by Dr. Karl T. Compton, president of Massachusetts Tech, who recently studied producing organizations there. "What I noticed most," he said, "was that the operations of the studios seemed to be carried on with maximum confusion and disorganization." He added, however, that new importance of the engineer was introducing some order.

Delays prevented presentation of papers on developments in the 16-mm. field as scheduled, but members heard Glenn Griswold, vice-president of Fox, demonstrate work of his company in visual education. He declared Fox activity in education, in direct response to tests, showed great value in films in education and increasing pupil efficiency from 40 to 100 per cent. Griswold said Fox was developing an intensive educational film program for either standard or narrow film in cooperation with leading educators.

Relationship between bodily posture of the patron, the size and shape of the picture, and the architectural form of the theatre in all its details was discussed by Ben Schlanger. The present type of theatre floor was compared with the reverse type of floor which enables a greater number of seats to be placed within the desired seating areas than the present type.

Reproduction Has Not Kept Pace With Recording, Society Advised—Pioneers Honored at Swampscott

By F. H. RICHARDSON

Dr. K. T. Compton, president of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, welcomed the convention and directed our attention to the fact that the engineering forces of the motion picture industry now comprise optical engineers, mechanical engineers, electrical engineers, heating and ventilating, engineers, in fact, almost the entire field of engineering. The conventioners visited Massachusetts Tech Wednesday morning.

The report of the treasurer showed the present income of $28,000 a year, with expenses of about $32,000. It is expected the deficit soon will be made up. Publication of the Journal costs $1,000 a month. Membership dues bring in $12,000 a year, to which sustaining membership adds $7,000. The society now has a surplus of something like $24,000.

The address of President Crabtree was a remarkably able document. It filled 14 pages of typewritten matter. He stressed the importance of the New York and Chicago sections, commented on the good work they have accomplished. He also paid high tribute to the work of the various committees. He recommended a special drive be made for additional memberships and sustaining memberships.

He directed attention to the fact that the society has not been as aggressive as it ought to be in the standardization of products, in "such matters as the standardization of screen brightness, the density characteristics of projection positives, the size of camera and projector apertures, the desirable gammas in the processing of film, the measurement of light intensity in the studio so that when the negative is developed to a definite consistent gamma the print will give the artistic effect desired.

BRITISH POLITICIANS ACT SECRETLY TO BAR U.S. CONTROL OF MARKET

Consider Curb Along Lines Of Antitrust Laws

Importation Licenses or Reciprocity Plan Also Discussed—Action Awaits Election Results

By WM. H. MOORING, London

A great deal of secret negotiation has been going on for some time between political leaders of the various parties in Britain and British film and trade union interests, and I learn on the very best of authority that these have led to a definite "understanding" that whichever political party is returned to power following the general election next month, the whole question of British policy in regard to the growth of foreign interests in the development of the cinema, radio and television will be referred to a non-party committee of parliamentarians. This Committee will have power to take evidence concerning the American hold on the British market, and to submit to amendations as to steps that might be taken to prevent the subordination of British to foreign cultural influences.

It is admitted by politicians between themselves that mechanical and economic developments that have arisen since the passing of the Films Act (Quota), have nullified to a large extent any efficacy that the Act might have had.

Investigation Sought

It has been represented that America is planning to obtain control of the machinery through which, at no distant date, the British public may receive screen entertainment evolved through a combination of film, radio and television. And they have been concerned also at the position which would be created if America acquired by financial operation a pre-eminently powerful hold on British theatres.

I have known for some time of a move to obtain a thorough and official investigation with a view, if necessary, to introduce legislation on the lines of the American antitrust laws. And during the past week, significantly enough, several of the more important political leaders of the Labor and Conservative parties have been in touch with William Marston Seabury, former counsel general of the American Motion Picture Board of Trade and the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry.

Leading questions have I believe been put to Mr. Seabury concerning the possibilities of American domination in a new medium which may arrive, as well as the results accruing from complete and established domination by U. S. A. of the Canadian, Australian and other English speaking territories.

I understand that at the moment there is a feeling in state circles that the Quota law does not go far enough, since America, by stepping into the British production industry, as she has already done—can satisfy the quota requirements of her British distribution affiliates, and supply American owned theatres throughout the world with British films which will not bring one penny of capital into this country, but will on the contrary take a good deal of money out of it.

Import Regulation Asked

It is felt that some course could be devised which would have the effect of freeing British exhibitors from the responsibility of showing a certain footage of British films, but would regulate the amount of American footage imported, somewhat on the lines of importation licenses as in France. Other interests believe that the time is ripe to force, under threat of definitely adverse legislation, an American reciprocity scheme operated on a footage basis.

Already the fall of the pound is losing American producers huge sums of money in relation to British returns, and the feeling is that there will be no recovery for some time to come, if, indeed, the situation grows no worse.

Plus this, there is a distinctly unsympathetic spirit in high political circles toward American film interests generally; a heavy import duty on all American films was defeated only by Snowden, the ardent and unrepentant Free Trader, and he is going out of office.

Presumably after the election the committee will be appointed—and it is significant that the opposing parties are agreed on this point—when questions affecting both sides will, it is to be hoped, be considered.

Deubach and Maloney Take Up New Duties as Managers at Providence

Two theatre managers who are new to Providence, R. I., and have taken up their duties there are J. William Deubach at the RKO Albee and H. H. Maloney at Loew's State.

Deubach went to Providence from Milwaukee, where he was district manager and was connected with the Palace and Riverside theatres.

Maloney was in the western division for Loew's for five and a half years. He came East from Cleveland, where he had been stationed for the last two years.

Revenue Decline Is Seen from the European Market

Two dominant obstacles to the accumulation of revenues from foreign countries by American motion picture producers are first the language question and its subsidiary competition and second the restrictions, which in the form of contingents, subsidies and other forms of government protection in force to protect the home industry in various countries, are seen by C. J. North and N. D. Golden, chief and assistant chief, respectively of the Motion Picture Division of the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce at Washington, in a prepared paper which was read by Golden at the Society of Motion Picture Engineers' convention at Swampscott, Mass. this week.

"The financial destinies of most of our film companies—certainly all the leading ones—come unpleasantly close to depending on the state of our film revenues from abroad," said Golden, pointing out that Europe alone supplies nearly 70 per cent of that foreign revenue. He noted that whereas in the silent days from 30 to 40 per cent of the entire rentals of American companies came from abroad, today the figure, according to authorities, has dropped to under 20 per cent, particularly by reason of the introduction of sound, which caused an immediate drop to 25 per cent in 1930.

Golden reviewed the present status of film conditions in the various European countries, first discussing England. He sees England, previously by far America's best customer because of language, today "strongly entrenched as a competitive factor in its own field."

In continental Europe Golden counted the language barrier the greatest obstacle to American revenues. Great strides have been made in French production, according to the paper, with 107 sound and dialogue pictures due for production this year.

Week Off Monthly For Movietone Men

Beginning immediately, Fox Movietone News cameramen and assistants will take off one week each month, without pay, during the next six months, thereby reducing the unit's payroll 25 per cent weekly. The new move is said to have eliminated all speculation in the Movietone ranks, where it was felt in some quarters that News executives would fall in line with some other reels in drastically reducing personnel. This step preserves the personnel and is said to be well accepted by the staff.

MILLIONS ESTIMATED SAVED UNDER BUREAU

funded when the case was revealed by the Bureau's investigators.

Hurts Honest Exhibitor

Illustrating the injury which may be done an honest exhibitor by one making a practice of the common irregularities in exhibition was a case which was uncovered in a rural section of the Northwest. Exhibitor A, in competition with Exhibitor B in the same town, purchased a theatre in a town three miles distant on a connecting highway. Exhibitor A, by bicycling film between his two theatres, realized a large operating profit and within a year was able to outbuy Exhibitor B on all product. Exhibitor B suffered heavy losses and was soon forced to sell out to A at a poor price; whereupon A closed his theatres in the adjoining town to enjoy his monopoly in the better paying location. This case was revealed when Exhibitor B, made suspicious by the disposition of the second theatre, checked back on his competitor's operations, made his discovery of the dishonest practices and reported them to the Bureau.

The Bureau also points out that the honest exhibitor may be injured in many other ways by the dishonest one. Holding over of prints frequently results in the inability of the distributor to deliver a print to an honest exhibitor at the time contracted for. This not only leaves the distributor open to damage suits but it does material harm to the honest exhibitor who has advertised a certain picture and is then forced either to play a different one or close his theatre. If this happens frequently enough, the loss of goodwill to the exhibitor is incalculable and may even force him out of business.

Prosecute Habitual Offenders

The Bureau maintains further, in justification of its policy of invoking the Copyright statutes against offenders, that all prosecutions undertaken are against habitual offenders. No serious action is taken against an exhibitor who is found, after thorough investigation, to have committed a possibly excusable violation or an infrequent number of them. Because of this, it is contended that if the penalty recoverable under the contract were all that was possible, the habitual offenders might escape a series of malpractices with a nominal payment, immediately after which they would resume their operations, having experienced not a penalty but a nominal cut of the profits realized on the continuous irregularities. If such were the case, the Bureau contends, no progress would ever be made in stamping out or even reducing the common exhibition violations and the work of the Bureau would be rendered ineffectual.

Bicycling, the Bureau reports, is now on the wane, although it was the most common irregularity several years ago. It is easier to detect, more easily prosecuted and the penalties are greater than for any of the other common practices; all of which has contributed to its decline. The various forms of holdovers now comprise by far the majority of offenses investigated. Rural areas lead in number of violations.

In addition to its investigative work, the Copyright Protection Bureau recently undertook a campaign of educating exhibitors against the common violations. The drive already has evidenced results in many sections, and acts in others as a preventive.

Starts Educative Campaign

The educational work of the Bureau is confined for the most part to traveling lecturers who appear before exhibitor bodies throughout the country, educating them to their responsibilities in the matter of license agreements and trade practices and fully explaining the work and intent of the Bureau. Exhibitor leaders and distributor personnel also are lined up by these traveling educational units and enlisted in carrying on the work of further establishing understanding between exhibitors and distributors in matters in which the Copyright Protection Bureau is involved.

Despite the millions of dollars which it is estimated the Bureau has saved the industry in its few years of existence and the progress that has been made in educating irresponsible exhibitors away from the license malpractices, operating heads of the Bureau declare that there is no end to their work in sight.

"The mere existence of the Bureau," said one, "is as necessary as law and order. All we hope to do is reduce the number of the violations, the financial losses and the intangible injuries to the entire industry which result from them. This job will exist as long as the human race requires police departments."

Warner Circuit Books Entire Group of RKO Pathe Features

Warners theatre circuit has signed for the complete lineup of RKO Pathe feature product for the new season, negotiations having been completed between Dan Michalove, Warner circuit head and Ned E. Depinet, RKO Pathe general sales manager, this week.

Several Warner houses have already played the product in anticipation of the deal. RKO Pathe features, as a result of this booking, will have first-run showings throughout the country.

"U" Newsreel Now Has Representation In 84 Newspapers

Eighty-four newspapers, widely scattered throughout the country, now are tied in on Universal's "Newspaper Newsreel." Including the World-Telegram in New York, the Atlanta Journal, Baltimore Post, Cleveland Press, Los Angeles Times and Philadelphia Enquirer, the group has a combined daily circulation of 8,500,000 while the advertising linage which regularly boosts the local showing of the newsreel represents an advertising campaign averaging $500,000 yearly.

When Universal decided to re-enter the newsreel field on its own account rather than to release a reel made by someone else, it resolved upon a setup, under the editorship of Sam B. Jacobson, and to enlist the editorial and advertising prestige of the daily newspapers in the larger cities.

The Chicago Daily News was the first paper to enter this association. The News facilities now are supplying a considerable part of the actual negative used by the editors of Universal's reel.

Cooperative alliance between the local newspaper and the local theatre, with advertising for the paper on the screen of local theatres and news stories and advertisements for these theatres in the local daily papers, is said to have proven a bonanza both to the theatres and to the papers.

Each newspaper is protected in its assigned field so that all of the theatres in its territory advertise that particular newspaper on their screens, and in return receive representation in the advertising columns of the newspaper, which calls attention, at specified times, to the location of the theatres where the Universal newsreel is showing.

There is also a news tieup with a picture service. The World-Telegram makes a special "must" of this news story. The size of the newspaper "circuit" has now come to be a factor to be considered. The service is said by Universal to be a two-way proposition. Unless a paper can give as good as it gets, and vice versa, there is no basis for a tieup.

Universal Newspaper Newsreel will be released in Montreal, Quebec, Canada as a French newsreel, by a deal just completed. The Montreal La Presse, which is printed entirely in French, will sponsor the reel, being the eighty-fourth newspaper in the tieup.

The Graham McNamee description will be re-broadcast by a French announcer in French. The printed titles will be in both French and English. La Presse has a circulation of 190,000 in Quebec.

Mayer Will Present Olympic Invitation to Herbert Hoover

Louis B. Mayer, M-G-M vice president in charge of production, will personally deliver to President Hoover an invitation from Governor James Rolph, Jr., of California to attend the 1932 Olympic Games at Los Angeles.

Mayer, who will go from New York to Washington, is a personal friend of Hoover, and will extend the invitation on behalf of the Olympic committee.

A KIDDIE CLUB WITH 15,000 MEMBERS

The Saenger Booster Club Grows So Rapidly That It Has Branches Thruout City

By JOE M. ESTES

Many a theatre manager who has pondered over the problem of how to increase juvenile attendance, and at the same time present to the children motion picture fare suitable for them, will find a host of suggestions in this article on the Saenger Theatre Booster Club with its 15,000 members. Joe M. Estes, director of publicity of the Saenger Theatre at New Orleans, and writer of the article, sponsored the plan, with the standing maxim, "Keep the Faith."

New Orleans, "America's most interesting city," famed for its French cuisine, the Mardi Gras, its historical background and the direction in which the "Mississippi Rolls On" whenever a songwriter gets stuck for an idea, is also the home of the world's largest Kiddie Club.

We do not qualify that statement when we say that it is the world's largest kiddie club. It is every bit of that! And incidentally it has held this distinction for over a year.

The Club is now 18 months old and numbers well over 15,000 members. Every one of them is registered, has paid dues of five cents for a year, and wears the Booster button proudly. So successful has the Club been from an organizational standpoint that there are branch clubs scattered throughout the city. These "branches" meet in barns, spare rooms and vacant lots. The most pretentious one is located in the backyard of Ted Liuzza, radio editor of the Item-Tribune. It has a stage, curtains and an impersonator of "Uncle Joe," the Club's sponsor.

Special Show on Stage

The Saenger Theatre Booster Club meets every Saturday morning at the theatre. Members in good standing gain admittance to the theatre for ten cents (the regular price for non-members is fifteen cents). This Saturday morning meeting features a special show presented on the stage by members of the Club. It is conducted by the writer, who is known as "Uncle Joe." Valuable assistance is accorded him by "Herbie" Koch, featured organist of the theatre for over a year. "Herbie" performs at the organ, playing the musical score for the various "acts" as well as conducting a songfest, when time permits. These songfests are thrilling adventures for adults as well as the children. How they sing is nobody's business and with several thousand lusty young voices at top blast, it gives a genuine thrill to the hearer. Other features of the morning show include a serial. At present we are showing "Vanishing Legion," which will be followed by "The Galloping Ghost."

After the Kiddie Show is completed, the members may remain in to see the entire Saenger current program . . . and at the conclusion they are presented with a wholesome bar of chocolate candy. This candy is a special bar with a special wrapper labeled "Saenger Booster Bar," and is also on sale at all retailers who handle the Jacobs Candy Company line. Last year, when we put out this bar for the first time, the Jacobs company printed 1,000 display cards which were distributed around the city.

Parade 22 Blocks Long

The Saturday morning show forms only a small part of the activities of the Club. Each Fourth of July we stage a picnic at one of the parks or beaches in which manufacturers of soft drinks, and other "goodies" cooperate. These picnics generally start with a parade through the downtown streets. The first year it was 22 blocks long, and was the only Fourth of July Parade staged in the city. At the parks, games are played, lunch is served, motion pictures are taken for showing on the Saenger screen the following week, and the Boosters generally have a swell time. Adults are kept away as far as practicable. Boy Scouts have lent invaluable assistance at the outdoor affairs as well as at the Saturday morning matinees, in assisting in handling the crowds. Their assistance is not needed for the Boosters, because they can be controlled by a word . . . but it is for the adults, who insist on getting in or breaking through the lines.

In addition to the Saturday morning shows featuring youthful talent, a spectacular Kiddie Revue is staged at least twice a year, in which the production value is featured along with the talent. These Revues have been staged by Helena Strakova, (Mrs. Estes), a dancing teacher, in cooperation with the managing director and myself. The first year, the assistance of Charles Niggemeyer was available; and our last show in June profited by the production experience of Robert Blair, present managing director of the Saenger.

Profitable to Theatre

These Kiddie Revues have been profitable to the theatre. They are staged at Christmas time and in late spring or early summer. The Christmas show last year helped the box office during the week before Christmas, with the Christmas Eve day playing to capacity in the afternoon and early evening. Every Booster that attended the theatre the day before Christmas day received a gift. More than seven thousand gifts were presented. These were bought at clearance prices from a local store.

The Kiddie Revue, staged entirely by Boosters, this past summer was so successful that it shared in the holding over of "Daddy Long Legs" for a second week at the Saenger. It received more favorable comment that any stage show to play New Orleans in months.

We have developed some splendid talent with the Saturday morning shows, and the award to the best of them is to participate in the annual Kiddie shows. This is all the remuneration they receive. No salaries are paid the children for these shows.

Elect Mardi Gras Queen

During Mardi Gras, we staged a Mardi Gras ball and elected a queen by popular ballot. The vote results appeared on Sundays in the Item Tribune on the Junior Page. The girl winning the honor sat alongside Rudy Vallee (who was making a personal appearance at the Saenger), and her court attended her. The Connecticut Yankees played a special show for them and what a time they all had.

From time to time we stage parties and special shows. If we think a picture is not suitable for children, we present a special program and go to the expense of sending them a postcard advising them of the change in the routine for the week. A postscript is carried on the card for the attention of the parents, notifying them that the current picture fare is better suited for adults. Then we get a special picture such as "Huckleberry Finn" and stage the special show for the youngsters.

"Keep the Faith"

We attribute our success with this kiddie club to one principle; "Keep the Faith." In plainer words we always give them what we promise. If we say it's going to be a picnic, we leave the stone unturned to give them a real outing.

We have a tieup with the Item Tribune, and give the two papers credit for assisting in the success of the club to the extent of billing it as "The Saenger theatre-Item Tribune Booster Club." In return their columns are wide open to us for any and all occasions. As the sponsor of the club I conduct two columns, one on Friday as "The Booster Bulletin" and one on Sunday as "Uncle Joe Says." Pictures of members are used each Sunday in the Junior Item section.

Another important factor in the continued success of this club is the fact that each one has to pay a year's dues to get a button. This is only five cents but it pays for the cost of the buttons and other incidentals incident to the operation of such a club, where no budget is available in the regular theatre setup.

Report Card Contest

At present we are conducting a Boosters Good Report Card contest with a first prize of a bicycle for boys and a wrist watch for girls. These prizes have been donated by merchants. The Contest was started last year and proved interesting to the theatre, the paper and the school teachers. This year we have had some fine expressions of appreciation from school teachers and find that the Club is getting mentioned regularly in the school rooms, teachers in many instances urging the children to join the club so they may be eligible for the contest. It is obvious that this is creating much good will.

Takes Many Hours a Day

To keep a club alive and interesting is no few minutes work! It requires a good many hours each day. There are letters to be written, telephone calls to be answered courteously and with an understanding of a child's problems. A fellow doing this has to remember back a few years to the days when he was a small boy and try to look at it from that angle. Patience with children is important, but with mothers much more so. It is a mother's heritage to want her child to be pushed forward . . . to see that he or she gets a full share of the lunch . . . the candy . . . a ringside seat . . . a solo part in the show . . . and if she is any kind of a mother she will fight for that right. An understanding of this is necessary to keep ill will from slipping into the Club's activities. This sort of thing can do more to kill a Club than all the special shows and parties that an army could organize.

No Favorites

In my association with these Clubs, which has existed for a number of years, I have set one rule, and that is simply "Be fair and square." Do not favor one child more than the other regardless of whether the child lives on the Avenue or in an alley. Their money is all the same kind of money, their parents are the same kind of parents, and their hearts the same kind of hearts. Children notice this sort of thing and when they find that the sponsor of the club is fair and impartial in all dealings with them they will be sold 100 percent. And when they are sold, they will sell their parents.

I feel that this is one reason why we have had few complaints regarding our handling of the club's activities. The children themselves have confidence in all of us who have anything to do with them. "Herbie" is their idol now . . . but when we told them that Wesley Lord was leaving they set up a howl. Then "Herbie" came on and by getting right down and mixing with them he soon scored a complete hit.

While I have been instrumental in organizing and fighting for this club, occupy the spot of their "Uncle Joe," and am in charge of the Saturday meetings, I believe that any other executive or personality connected with the theatre could step in and do the job as well, provided he enjoyed doing it as much as I do.

Cermak Demands Close of Strike

Mayor Cermak of Chicago has called Tom Maloy and Aaron Saperstein into conference to arbitrate differences between independent theatre owners and the projectionists' union, following a request from Charles Lounsbury, assistant state's attorney.

Cermak notified both parties that they must name arbitrators to settle the dispute following breakdown of settlement negotiations. Hearing on the indictments against Maloy and others have been continued until October 19.

The imported projectionists who have been handling independent theatre booths have elected Holland Carter as union president. The local is Number 3 of the Brotherhood of Motion Picture Employees of North America. William Van and James Doctor are vice presidents and Henry Buffeti and M. G. Willets recording and financial secretaries, respectively.

Warner Shifts Personnel

Warner changes in metropolitan exchange personnel include J. C. Vergesslich, now Metropolitan manager. George Balsdon, Jr., remains sales manager. Vergesslich is succeeded in Chicago by Earl Silverman. Harry Decker has moved from Brooklyn to New York and Gus Solomon is now in Brooklyn.

U. S. Makes 16 German Films

Of 176 German-speaking films presented in Germany during the 1930-31 season, 124 were made in Germany, 19 in France, 16 in the United States, seven in Great Britain, five in Czechoslovakia, three in Austria and two in Italy.

Gaumont-British Shows Big Profit

Small theatre units in England are dismayed by the huge profits disclosed by Gaumont-British Corporation. Including the production, distribution and exhibiting interest of the corporation, profits for the year just past amount to £502,059 net, an increase of no less than £185,000 over the returns of the previous year. Reserves have been increased to £2,500,000, equaling the total capital. Six per cent is to be paid to shareholders.

The directors of Gaumont declare their intention of extending their theatre interests, and there is amazing growth at the company's studios in Shepherds Bush and Islington, London.—W. H. M.

SELECTIONS

Made by RITA C. McGOLDRICK

FROM exhibitors, schools, civic organizations — from all factors in public life interested in unbiased critical appreciation and selection of motion pictures according to suitability for family, the adult and the younger folk, comes an ever-increasing expression of appreciation of Rita C. McGoldrick's "selection of selections." In this issue she devotes considerable attention to the short product.

Family Suitability

SPIRIT OF NOTRE DAME EXCELLENT
Universal

In the "Spirit of Notre Dame," Universal has made the greatest of the sports pictures to have come to the screen. Dedicated to Rockne, it is the romance of great football and the thrilling story of the character-building of men. This is a college drama without sentimentality but with a strong bit of heart interest. It is conspicuously lacking in the cheap collegiate claptrap that has marked so many pictures. Its incidental high spots show the team of Notre Dame in conflict with Army, with Northwestern University and with Georgia Tech. This picture strikes a new note of fineness in screen entertainment and should be influential in bringing a new dignity and integrity to intercollegiate sports.

HARD HOMBRE, THE GOOD
Allied Pictures Corp.

Western—In this particular picture starring Hoot Gibson there is more of plot and more of comedy than in any of his others. In his role of a peaceful man forced to overcome the local bad-man he contributes the same degree of breezy out-of-door performance and fine riding that have made him a general favorite with all boys. (Stars: Hoot Gibson and Matilde Comont.)

I LIKE YOUR NERVE GOOD
First National

A lightly entertaining adventure story with Douglas Fairbanks, Jr., cast as a young American go-getter in a fictitious Central American republic. (Stars: Douglas Fairbanks, Jr., Loretta Young.)

RIDERS OF THE PURPLE SAGE
Fox VERY GOOD

Western—An adaptation from a story by Zane Grey, the theme of which has lent itself most graciously to the camera wizard's skill. The result has been a fast-moving story set against magnificent scenery, and its action, placed in Arizona in 1871, holds more than usual interest. (Stars: George O'Brien and Marguerite Churchill.)

ALICE IN WONDERLAND GOOD

PENROD AND SAM VERY GOOD
First National

This is another delightful juvenile picture of a boy's pal and a dog. Acted by engaging children, it catches the spirit of the Booth Tarkington story. It is a picture that every child can afford to see.

SIDEWALKS OF NEW YORK GOOD
MGM

Comedy—Purely slapstick, with little continuity and routine comedy lines, this picture will probably prove amusing only to those in the audience who are followers of the sombre-faced little star, Buster Keaton.

BATTLING WITH BUFFALO BILL VERY GOOD
Universal

This is a serial Western, made in episodes of two reels each. It recounts the adventures of Bill Cody with the Indians and bad men of the West in his time. Boys will cheer for this picture; adults will smile at it indulgently. It has excitement galore, raiding Indians, burned settlements and magnificent horses. This is a clean picture for juvenile entertainment, but probably too exciting for very young children.

GET-RICH-QUICK WALLINGFORD VERY GOOD
MGM

Although changed somewhat from the original story the screened Wallingford is the same smart schemer provoking many laughs. William Haines and Ernest Torrence give an excellent performance and an amusing bit of entertainment in this picture.

IN LINE OF DUTY GOOD
Monogram Pictures

This is a story of the Royal North West Mounted Police with plenty of action and good spirit,—a picture particularly suitable for boys. (Stars: Sue Carroll, Noah Beery, Francis McDonald and James Murray.)

RUN AROUND, THE GOOD
RKO

This is a lightly entertaining feature which attempts to prove that Right is Might. Glinting with humor and notable for its color work, this picture has as a strong cast Mary Brian, Geoffrey Kerr, Johnny Hines and Marie Prevost.

RANGE LAW GOOD
Tiffany

Ken Maynard, always popular with children, adds one more page to the volume of his Westerns. This one has nothing to distinguish it from the rest. There is planted money, free shooting, the stage coach holdup and the stage tumbling down a mountain side. It is clean entertainment with enough action to please children.

Adult Suitability

EAST OF BORNEO VERY GOOD
Warner

A thrilling jungle picture in the land of Marudu, located in the impenetrata reaches of Malay. It is the story of a young wife whose doctor husband, misunderstanding her, leaves her to bury his sorrow in the jungle. She follows him over the heart-breaking six thousand miles of the way, over infested rivers, poisonous undergrowth and dangerous islands. There are crocodiles, the giddy chatter of monkeys, the deep roar of the lions; the pulse and beat of native drums. There is an authentic thrill in an erupting volcano, its flames and plumes of smoke thrown against the strange landscape. A barbaric ruling prince of this strange land casts his eyes upon the heroic wife. This situation precludes it from programs for junior audiences. Adults will find it a thrilling document.

LASCA OF THE RIO GRANDE GOOD
Universal

Based on the poem "Lasca," this tragic romance tells the story of a fiery Mexican girl, a creature of impulse, who flirts with, hates, and finally sacrifices her life for a man she really loves. A colorful background and unusual photography add to the interest and entertainment value. (Stars: Leo Carillo, John Mack Brown, Dorothy Burgess, Slim Summerville.)

SKYLINE GOOD
Fox

This is the story of a boy who is spurred on by an ambition to leave the river docks and realize his dream of building skyscrapers in the city. Portrayed by an able cast, this human drama, with its melodramatic touches, will prove of interest to the average audience. (Stars: Thomas Meighan, Maureen O'Sullivan.)

THE SPIDER VERY GOOD
Fox

In "The Spider," taken from the play of the same name, a magician succeeds in solving a mysterious murder, and reuniting a brother and sister. The entire action takes place in the theatre and the mystery is solved in the presence of the audience. An absorbing and thrilling picture, well cast, acted and directed. Also suitable for older children.

WILD HORSE GOOD
Allied

A Western full of the usual hard riding, excitement. There is a bank bandit and a murderer captured, as well as a wild horse. There is trick rodeo riding and thrilling scenes with trained horses. (Star: Hoot Gibson.)

EIN BURSCHENLIED AUS HEIDELBERG (A Student Song of Heidelberg)
Ufa EXCELLENT

This is the first musical feature photographed in the city of old Heidelberg. A New York girl of German parentage goes to the university to complete her education. Two students fall in love with her. There is a harmless duel and the right man wins. The story can be followed without a knowledge of German as the heroine has to learn to speak that language. Good acting and lively music result in pleasant entertainment. (Stars: Betty Bird, Willy Forst, Hans Bransewetter.)

SELECTION OF SELECTIONS IN PICTURES

THE PASSION OF JOAN OF ARC
VERY GOOD

Societe Generale des Films of Paris

The last six hours of life of the peasant girl who led her King's armies to victory are filmed with vivid and startling realism in this picture. The direction is unexcelled and Mlle. Falconetti as Joan gives a flawless performance.

SHORT SUBJECTS

BIG HOUSE PARTY, THE — GOOD
Vitaphone

The prison band practices for the Christmas show. Some of the music is enjoyable.

BIRDS OF THE SEA — EXCELLENT
Fox

Very interesting and scenically lovely.

BLUE RHYTHM — EXCELLENT
Columbia

Here is another Walt Disney cartoon in which Mickey Mouse conducts the animal orchestra for the amusement of all.

CALL A COP — GOOD
MGM

Hal Roach's Boy Friends see a holdup and try to catch the burglar. There is a mixup with the police, but the friends do their best to be helpful. Very amusing.

CASTILIAN MEMOIRS — VERY GOOD
Imperial

Mr. Dickason in a fine talk emphasizes the beauties and interest of Maila.

CAT'S NIGHTMARE — GOOD
Columbia

Another delightful "Silly Symphony" wherein the prowling cat loses eight of his nine lives.

CLOCK SHOP — VERY GOOD
Columbia

A delightful melodious cartoon in which the various time-pieces in the clock shop caper for amusement. Mr. Disney has given us a musically pleasing bit of fantasy.

CLYDE MYSTERY, THE — GOOD
Warner

The solution of the mysterious death of Mr. Clyde by the famous psychologist—Dr. Crabtree (Donald Meek). Interesting.

DANGEROUS TRAILS — EXCELLENT
Warner

This is the ninth episode of the adventures in Africa of Wynant Hubbard, lecturer and scholarly adventurer. It is an extraordinary study of wild animals as they roam through the jungle and cross the paths of the man with the cameras. (Accompanying lecture.)

DECEPTIVE PLAYS — VERY GOOD
Educational

Demonstrating how some of the big games in football have been won through use of power or deceptive moves.

DUTCH TREAT — EXCELLENT
Talking Picture Epics

A good educational picture of Holland, the land of windmills and canals.

EGYPTIAN MELODIES — EXCELLENT
Columbia

A very amusing cartoon depicting the experiences of a spider in an Egyptian tomb.

FISHIN' FUN — VERY GOOD
Columbia

A Mickey Mouse cartoon in which Mickey and the pup go fishing. The fish that are not caught do some delightful tap dancing and a classical musical score becomes infectious with merriment.

FLOATING FUN — GOOD
RKO Pathe

A Grantland Rice Sportlight showing a class of seafaring children at Nantucket, being taught to sail boats; the second half of the film gives an idea of the amusements on one of the week-end cruises out of New York.

FLY-HI — GOOD
RKO Pathe

Cartoon—An Aesop Fable concerning two young flies who were nearly caught in the spider's web. (Synchronized.)

FORWARD PASS — VERY GOOD
Educational

GYPSY CARAVAN — EXCELLENT
Vitaphone

Giovanni Martinelli, as a gypsy caravan driver, sings with his unusual, beautiful effect. This is a happy opportunity to hear this Metropolitan opera star.

HIGHLIGHTS OF TRAVEL
Tiffany — VERY GOOD

A Lyman H. Howe "Hodge Podge" picture showing fascinating glimpses of strange countries and cities. (Accompanying lecture.)

I SURRENDER, DEAR — GOOD
Educational

Bing Crosby, the famous radio crooner, has a chance to prove he is personable, can act sufficiently to put over his songs and has a really beautiful voice. The story is an innocuous romance. This is a Mack Sennett production.

INSIDE BASEBALL — VERY GOOD
Educational

Scenes from real baseball games and some staged "shots" to demonstrate certain plays, make up this sports review by Bill Cunningham. The running comment is humorous and interesting.

INSIDE LOOKING OUT — VERY GOOD
Fox

Inside views of some of the prisons of the world. Men at work and at play in Cuba. A women's prison in Mexico. Sing Sing in New York, the first to abolish convict uniforms. Very informative.

ISLE OF ISOLATION — EXCELLENT
Imperial

A very entertaining talk accompanies these pictures of the Island of Bali. Mr. Dickason calls it one of the most enchanted islands of the globe.

JERUSALEM, THE HOLY CITY
Ideal Pictures — EXCELLENT

An interesting scenic, accompanied by an instructive talk. It depicts the historic background and the lives of the various races that dwell in the Holy City.

KENTUCKY BELLES — GOOD
Universal

Oswald the Rabbit and his amusing horse race the other animals and win by a neck.

LAST OF THE MOE HIGGINS, THE Columbia — GOOD

Eddie Buzzell broadcasts in his usual amusing way the story of an old Kentucky mountain feud.

LOST VALLEY — VERY GOOD
Educational

In which a group of Scouts have a high adventure in the western mountains, where they encounter an old prospector who has been injured and to whom they give aid. Incidentally, they rescue an Indian maiden and capture a villain. This is a fine, spirited picture for boys.

LOVE IN A POND — VERY GOOD
Pathe

An Aesop's Fable. A rhythmic romance of two frogs in a water-lily pond. Good music.

MICKEY STEPS OUT — GOOD
Columbia

Mickey Mouse and Minnie once more amuse us with their comical antics in which Pluto, the dog, and a cat figure.

MUSICAL MYSTERY — GOOD
Warner

Characters in modern books coming to life. Very good dancing.

OLD LACE — VERY GOOD
Vitaphone

Ruth Etting, famous Broadway singer, in the fashion of another generation croons her effective songs. Good entertainment.

OLYMPIC TALENTS — EXCELLENT
RKO Pathe

This Grantland Rice Sportlight is one of an instructive and interesting series of views of various athletes in training for different sports for the coming Olympic Games of 1932. A lively and humorous talk adds to the interest.

OPPORTUNITY NIGHT — GOOD
Vitaphone

Vaudeville performers are given an opportunity to see what each can do and what the audience thinks of it. Amusing.

PARIS NIGHTS — GOOD
Fox

Night life in the French capital.

HUMAN

"'Sob Sister' has scratched the newspaper man and found a human being. Without losing the glamor, the hard surface brilliance and the healthy wit that the world associates with the men and women who write its news, Mr. Santell has gone deeper and drawn his characters with tenderness and sympathy. The reporter has seldom been caught so accurately or so humanly. The writing is swift, amusing and authentic. Its two leading parts are splendid . . . Hold their audiences with the same sort of honest and extraordinarily effective playing that characterized 'Bad Girl'... An original and entertaining film." —N. Y. Times

HIGHLY ENTERTAINING

"Excellently directed, cleverly acted, smartly dialogued ... Story carries its newspaper characters into wild excitement ... Loaded with villainy, action, plot. A good movie, thoroughly entertaining."

—N. Y. Daily Mirror

THRILLS AND ROMANCE

"Exciting melodrama, quite certain to be voted good entertainment by the fans. Speeds along through thrills and romance to its happy ending ... There's no denying that James Dunn has personality and screen magnetism ... Linda Watkins promising."

PACKED WITH EXCITEMENT

"James Dunn, who scored such a hit in 'Bad Girl' does a good job. Melodramatic yarn, packed with excitement, which should give the customers their money's worth." —N. Y. Evening Graphic

EXCEEDINGLY GOOD PRODUCTION

"Exceedingly well produced talkie. Good acting, first rate camera work . . . Freshness of dialogue. Genuine atmosphere . . . Linda Watkins, well known on New York stages, makes her screen debut. The stage scores again. She can read lines, she photographs well, and should be an asset to the movies. James Dunn has a personality and he helps to make 'Sob Sister' as good as it is." —N. Y. Sun

ABUNDANT IN ENTERTAINMENT

"An agreeably diversified melodrama of newspaper life and it succeeds in filling out with quick electric turns of plot and motivation a film hour worth seeing . . . Abundant in entertainment. PATHE AUDIO REVIEW VERY GOOD
Pathe

Several interesting events are combined—Fountains of Rome; This Amazing Age; Not So Dumb; Tuna Fishing in Sicily; A Barnyard Scandal; Unlocking the Treasure House of Music (with Walter Damrosch); Twenty-One Years Ago. All are good.

PATHE REVIEW NO. 3 EXCELLENT
Pathe

Scenes of beautiful homes, old English and Colonial throughout New England, pretty and quaint; This Wonderful Age; How the Autogiro Works. Very interesting.

PIGSKIN PROGRESS GOOD
RKO Pathe

The first game of football, played in 1869, is re-enacted in this Grantland Rice Sportlight by Rutgers students; then a Yale-Harvard game played in 1914 is seen and contrasted with the technique of modern play. (Accompanying lecture.)

POLAR BEAR GOOD
RKO Radio

A Tom and Jerry cartoon with synchronized music. The two are shipwrecked, find a raft, and reach the Arctic Circle where they have adventures. Very clever.

POMPEII EXCELLENT
Talking Picture Epics

Very remarkable views of this ancient city that is slowly being brought out of the grave where Vesuvius buried it. There is an interesting and instructive talk about this most precious storehouse of ancient knowledge the world possesses.

RHYTHMS OF A BIG CITY
Warner VERY GOOD

One day's activity—the lives of the working girl and boy in New York City from the time of awakening until bed time.

SOUND NEWS REEL GOOD

Showing the Empire State Building acting as a mooring mast for large blimp; ruin of city of Belize after hurricane; Aimee Semple McPherson and husband; parade of gorgeous floats in Los Angeles celebrating 150th anniversary.

S.S. MALARIA, THE GOOD
Paramount

Smith and Dale as two Jewish partners leave on vacations because one has rheumatism. Their troubles in the passport office are amusing.

SNAKES ALIVE VERY GOOD
Warner

Two youngsters—Penrod and Sam—have heard that hair pulled from a horse's tail and placed in water will eventually turn into a snake. The convolutions of the hair in the water, and the boys' excitement and amusing dialogue, make for very good juvenile entertainment. (2 reels.)

SUPREME THRILLS: "TURN OF THE TIDE" EXCELLENT
Van Beuren

"Turn of the Tide" is one of a series of thirteen true stories of the Great War picturized and verbally described by Floyd Gibbons. This one tells the story of the early morning hours of July 18, 1918, when three hundred thousand American boys, who had been hurriedly mobilized and rushed into action, delivered the first decisive offensive blow of the Allied troops in the World War. Turning the tide of defeat into the promise of victory. This is an electrifying and vivid presentation, excellently photographed and with an accompanying musical score. These authentic thrills of the screen are among the best short features of the year.

TAMALE VENDOR, THE GOOD

One of the most interesting of the excellent sports shorts by Mack Sennett, depicting actual fishing scenes with the giant ray and the swordfish as the victims. Wonderful action in the pictures.

Stanley-Warner Makes Shifts Of Managers In East Cities

The Stanley-Warner Company has made a number of changes with the shifting of managers in both the theatres and districts in Wilmington, Del.; Chester, Pa.; Philadelphia and Atlantic City.

Among the changes was the moving of Paul Costello from manager of the State and Washington in Chester to district manager of the circuit's houses in Wilmington.

Reynolds, Houston Join Pomeroy

Harry F. Reynolds, responsible for the technical work on "Hell's Angels," and H. Houston, inventor and mechanical engineer, have joined Roy J. Pomeroy as associates in the newly formed Motion Picture Technical Institute, Hollywood. Until recently, both have been connected with Howard Hughes. The Institute was recently established by Pomeroy to serve studios in solving technical problems.

Sol Lesser, whose resignation as executive assistant to Carl Laemmle is effective this week, is reported joining Hobart Henley in the production of independent features.

Technicolor Wins Big Patent Victory

Dr. Herbert T. Kalmus, president of Technicolor Motion Picture Corporation, has expressed the opinion that the company will have control over most, if not all the various methods of manufacturing color film used by other companies, as the result of a patent, embracing 234 claims, just issued to Dr. Leonard T. Troland of Technicolor. This is the expected culmination of a situation which has been hanging fire for months.

The claims cover the production of pictures in color, and the patent includes rights claimed by many contestants since 1921, it is declared. The 234 claims are believed to be the largest number ever issued on a single patent by the United States Patent Office. Application for the patent was made in 1921 and numerous interference proceedings since then have augmented the original Technicolor claims. The patent includes sole rights on the making of both positive and negative color prints.

Exhibitor Gives Benefit Show For Fraternity After Fire

When fire attacked the Sigma Chi fraternity house on the Dartmouth College campus at Hanover, N. H., the flames spread so quickly through the frame structure that the occupants were unable to salvage any of their possessions. Two were injured jumping out of windows. A. C. Barwood, manager of the Nugget theatre, came to the assistance of the fraternity and put on afternoon and evening benefit performances of "The Black Camel," the entire profits being devoted to replacing the wardrobes and other possessions of the students.

Radio Playing 4 Films On Broadway; None At Mayfair

Radio will have four first runs on Broadway this month, but it appears at the moment that all will play outside the company's own outlet, the Mayfair.

Jerry Safron has closed another deal by which "The Woman Between" will play the New York and Brooklyn Paramounts week of October 23. On the same day, "Friends and Lovers" goes into the Roxy, which will also play "Smart Woman" this week. "Gay Diplomat" opens at the Warner this week also.

$120,152 Fox Net for First Six Months; General Theatres Net Reaches $883,353

Fox Film Corporation and its wholly owned subsidiary, controlled and affiliated companies report net profit, after all charges except Federal income taxes, of $120,152 for the first six months of 1931. This compares with $6,785,897 for the same period in 1930. Total gross income for the period equalled $47,870,373, which compares with $52,848,975 for the first half of 1930.

The decline is stated as "largely due to a reduction in theatre receipts and film rentals," which sources showed income of $45,749,867 and compared to $50,937,848 for the first six months of 1930. The statement indicates that Fox received $495,675 in dividends from its ownership of 660,000 shares of Loew's Inc. stock.

The consolidated statement of income and expense for the half year ended June 27, 1931, as compared to the period ended June 28, 1930, follows:

Income:	1931	1930
Gross income from sales and rentals of films and literature and theatre receipts	$45,749,867.88	$50,937,848,85
Income from rental of stores and offices	1,059,884.65	1,041,336.77
Dividends from investments—Loew's, Inc.	495,675.00	495,675.00
Other incomes	564,946.00	374,114.62
Total income from all sources	$47,870,373.53	$52,848,975.24
Expenses:
Operating expenses of theatres and exchanges, head office and administration expenses, etc.	$28,058,113.99	$27,264,247.61
Amortization of production costs, including participations	14,532,825.68	14,552,354.84
Depreciation	2,047,366.37	1,969,466.53
Interest	1,035,938.16	675,341.66
Minority interests' share of theatre subsidiaries' profit	107,003.87	636,235.42
	$45,781,248.07	$45,097,646.06
Income available for interest requirements of parent company and federal taxes	$2,089,125.46	$7,751,329.18
Interest requirement on:
One year six per cent. gold notes: Interest	$982,250.00	$639,250.00
Amortization of discount and expenses	482,455.28	326,181.82
Five year six per cent. gold debentures: Interest	367,707.50	.....
Amortization of discount and expenses	136,560,00	.....
Net profit for half year (26 weeks) before federal income taxes	$120,152.68	$6,785,897.36

General Theatres Equipment, Inc. and subsidiaries report a net of $883,353.70 for the six months ended June 30, 1931, exclusive of its equity in undistributed earnings of non-consolidated controlled companies.

The consolidated and condensed statement of profit and loss for the period shows net sales and income of $6,235,149. After cost of sales, general and administrative expense, depreciation, etc., there remained net income of subsidiary companies amounting to $253,720. Income from dividends of Fox Film Corporation Class A and B stock amounted to $2,193,672 in the half year. Net income applicable to preferred and common stocks of General Theatres Equipment, Inc., after all charges, was $883,353.70.

No comparison with the six months ended June 30, 1930, is made because of acquisitions in 1930. The profit and loss statement for the six months ended June 30, 1931, follows:

Net sales and other revenue	$6,235,149.85
Less:
Cost of sales, general and administrative expenses, depreciation, etc.	5,981,429.38
Net income of subsidiary companies	$253,720.47
Income from dividends on Fox Film Corporation Class "A" and "B" stocks	2,193,672.87
Total income of G. T. E., Inc., exclusive of its equity in undistributed earnings of non-consolidated controlled companies	$2,447,393.34
Less:
Interest charges and amortization of debt discount and expense	1,564,039.64
Net income applicable to preferred and common stocks of G. T. E., Inc., exclusive of its equity in undistributed earnings of non-consolidated controlled companies	$883,353.70

Comerford-Publix Adds Four Theatres in New York State

Comerford-Publix has taken over four New York state theatres, which are to be added to the Northeastern Pennsylvania circuit under George C. Walsh, with headquarters in Scranton.

This will give Walsh supervision over 71 houses. The acquisitions are located at Yonkers, Newburgh, Poughkeepsie and Middletown. Picture policies are to be maintained at all four.

Neufeld in Split With Tiffany-Educational on Chimp Shorts

Tiffany-Educational will not release the Chimp two-reel comedies in future. "Gland Hotel," current release, is the last. Sig Neufeld, trainer and producer of the monkey shorts, now is looking for another producer to handle a new series of one-reelers which he contemplates for immediate production.

Tiffany, it is understood, feels that the shorts have lost their novelty, and Neufeld is said to be in favor of other distribution.

Lewis Machat, owner of the Cinema Art Theatre, is confined to the American Hospital recovering from injuries sustained in an automobile accident. Accompanied by his daughter Fay, Machat was making an automobile trip to New York accompanied by William Kline when their machine missed a bend in the road near Towanda, Pa., and turned over several times. While the others escaped with minor injuries, Machat suffered a broken hip. He spent a week in the Robert Packard Hospital at Sayre, Pa., and it will be several more weeks before he is able to leave the American Hospital on Irving Park boulevard. Mrs. Machat is carrying on the work at the Cinema Art while from his hospital bed the owner is winding up details for the building of a chain of unusual playhouses in the Midwest which will be devoted entirely to showing the best of German talking pictures produced by Ufa.

The baffling mystery which Film Row's master minds are unable to explain is the recent stench bombing of theatres like the McVickers, Granada, Sheridan and Terminal. PASSING IN REVIEW

The department endeavors to set forth two lines of material of service to the exhibitor—first a showman's evaluations of the outstanding pictures—second, reviews of information

"STREET SCENE" is going to be delivered to you with the usual stuff about "box office smash," "audiences waiting and crying for it," and other hackneyed phrases, all too familiar to the showmen of today. And we'll venture a bit more and say that you stand a chance of busting a couple of nice little records, BUT, you'll have to go out and sell this like you've never sold before. And I'll tell you why:

Being a prize play to Times Square, the Loop—and a couple of other key cities—will mean nothing at all to those thousands of Muscatines, Norwichs, Portlands and what have you. Being a page torn from the life of a group of families in a city tenement, will mean even less to those many towns where tenements are something that film producers play around with.

We predict that wherever this picture is left to shift for itself, it will end up in disappointing grosses. Of course, there are the exceptions, but they will be found mostly in the larger communities. But, backed by sensible merchandising, a newspaper campaign designed to create and build up interest, exploitation of the variety which makes a theatregoer stop, look and then buy a ticket; this picture should prove a mighty satisfying addition to your season's product.

From the box office point of view, what we've just told you is the answer. Don't depend too much on its title or reputation to bring them out by the thousands. From the "audience" slant? Ah, that's an entirely different story. It IS an "audience" picture and it will give the customers every penny worth of entertainment that they paid for—and then some. Word-of-mouth advertising, too, will help the b. o. intake.

There are many fine angles for merchandising this production and the alert manager will not lack a campaign if he wants to go out and work a bit. True, you may have to pay a lot of dough for it, but then, if you take in a juicy increase over your average receipts you'll have no kick about that. But, if you were to ask me, don't ride along without any build-up and then wonder why the receipts are not what you expected. Plug this one and profit.

"THE ROAD TO SINGAPORE," wherever Powell is popular, will be a sure-fire business getter; not because it is a marvelous picture—it isn't—but because it has Powell plus a lot of feminine interest, both in story and acting.

We expected a whole lot more from this first Warner-Powell vehicle and were disappointed when we found it just ordinary entertainment. The title possesses "box office" appeal; the story will be satisfactory as we said before, providing they are great followers of the star, and with any sort of a worthwhile campaign to create and build up interest, there is no reason why you should not get some healthy returns at the box office.

When caught at the Strand here in New York, the Powell "strut," or better known as his "nonchalant" walk, drew a few snickers and giggles from the matinee audience. We had a tough time trying to keep a straight face ourselves, but, apparently, the director was told that this was one of Bill's assets and he used it as often as possible.

To get back to the possibilities of this picture at your box office; we mentioned previously that it had a lot of feminine appeal. That's the slant that you must not lose sight of for one moment in laying out or starting your campaign off on the right foot. Dozens of good ad lines, directed at the ladies, will command their attention and probably get them to the box office as soon as they can. The men-folk will probably be bored at the whole proceedings, but if you've got a good Mickey Mouse on the same bill, they won't kick because they came along with the ladies.

Stressing the tropical background in your lobby or marquee displays will help convey the impression that the title implies, but overemphasizing it would be poor judgment because its entire story could have been set in any other spot on the globe. You ought to do some nice business with "The Road to Singapore" despite the handicaps.

"TWENTY-FOUR HOURS," you are going to be told by lots of reviewers on the big city papers, is not so good. I disagree. I think it's fine entertainment; and, helped along via a good selling campaign, ought to gross plenty above par in receipts.

The title is not "box office" except where the author's name and book mean something. But you can make it "box office" by reason of the way you sell it to your patrons and community. Surely, there are plenty of fine angles connected with a title like that. Make the most of them and you will succeed in getting customers into the theatre. Once you've started them coming, you need not have any fears over the results. They'll like the picture and tell their friends and neighbors about it, too.

About the only weak portion of the entire thing is the exaggerated luxury in some of the scenes. Toned down a bit closer to normal, both in settings and dialogue, this would approach, for the average town and city, an almost perfect picture rating. As it stands, it's acceptable entertainment which should please the most discriminating audience and send them home quite satisfied that they have been treated to an evening of genuine pleasure.

Selling slants are not lacking for a picture like this. The title, the type of story, the cast—all these lend themselves admirably to assist the alert showman who knows where the best slant lies for his community and then cashes in on it for all it's worth. So don't be influenced too much by key city newspaper reviewers who have become hardened to the point where they can only find fault. We believe "Twenty-four Hours" will do business for any showman who gets behind it right.

"SOB SISTER," as a title, won't mean much until your selling campaign gives them some idea of what it is . . . and you should not lack for exploitation slants to get this one across to the customers so that they will come out a-plenty to see it . . . and after coming out you can sit back . . . firm in your knowledge that here is an "audience" picture in every sense of the word. . . .

Coming close on the heels of "Bad Girl" and James Dunn's remarkable performance . . . this one should boost his popularity another couple of hundred notches. . . . He's fine as the opposite to another newcomer for the box office . . . Linda Watkins, and she'll roll up a neat little score of her own when it comes to popularity. . . .

"Sob Sister," being a yarn about a feminine reporter, lends itself to some fine newspaper tie-ups that ought to count for something in most spots . . . and the fine acting of the two stars . . . plus the bit handled by Minna Gombell . . . makes it more than desirable entertainment of the finest variety. . . .

The customers want to go to the movies. . . . With any sort of an inducement at all they will pack your house. . . . Pictures like this will soon start the long lines forming again at the box office . . . but don't let it shift too much for itself. . . . Emphasize Dunn . . . Linda Watkins . . . the title . . . what that title means . . . and with the aid of some grand word-of-mouth advertising you're going to make some real money.

Incidentally, this gives Fox a nice average for hits on the new season's product. Maybe Santa Claus is on the board of directors and the exhibitors will keep getting them right along. Hi-Ho. Maybe only a dream, but ain't it grand????

"THE SPIRIT OF NOTRE DAME" is not just a "timely" picture . . . it's a real smash attraction because it is "box office" in title and a hundred per cent "audience" in entertainment . . . and that's a combination you'll have to go far to beat. . . . BUT . . . the question is: will those thousands of subsequent runs get it while football is still the topic of the day? That's the rub. It's all very well for the first runs to get their hooks into the cream while it's still sweet . . . but all too often the second and third runs just get the sour leavings, and for a picture with football as its theme, it stands to reason that you'll have to get it while the cash customers are hot for the sport. . . . After the season ends you will only have its entertainment value as a picture to help you make some money with it.

Telling you lot about "The Spirit of Notre Dame" is hardly necessary. . . . Your biggest problem is to get hold of it as soon as you can and then sell it for all it's worth. Be careful not to get this picture mixed up in the minds of your patrons with any of the shorts being released this season about football. . . . Sell it as a full-length feature along the lines of your best merchandising methods. . . .

We've told you it's "box office" and we've also raved about its "audience" value . . . so don't leave a stone unturned to let every living soul, within the area you draw your patrons from, know what you've got and why they must not miss seeing it. . . .

You know, fellows, it's a genuine pleasure to note how fine this year's product is coming through, and "The Spirit of Notre Dame" is among the leaders of the parade. Play it and cash in.

"MURDER AT MIDNIGHT" is every bit as good a mystery yarn as the screen has offered in the last year or so . . . and being a good mystery yarn you need have no fear about selling it as such. . . . Incidentally, when Red Kann reviewed it he admitted he was a bum predicter by guessing wrong about the murderer . . . so we're feeling rather cocky because we took a guess ourself . . . and whadda ya think . . . we guessed right. . . . So now . . . get your local police . . . prosecutor . . . newspaper editors and other civic officials together and pull a little preview for their special benefit. . . . Stop the show at some point along about the middle and ask them to write on a piece of paper their guess as to who is the villain. . . . Not new . . . we admit . . . but timely . . . and productive of some good newspaper copy for your campaign. . . .

Aside from the detective (Robert Elliott) and Montrose (Hale Hamilton), the others in the cast don't do enough to warrant too much billing . . . so take it easy on some of the names. . . . Otherwise your audience may expect outstanding performances that won't materialize.

Since most any mystery title is good "box office," you have that advantage to start off with, and, besides, this is a good "audience" picture because the story more than holds the interest right through, so none of your patrons will have cause for complaint that they did not get their money's worth. . . .

This picture is one of a series of contradictions that only the big producers can turn out good, money-getting stuff. . . . It measures up to any standard ever set by any outfit and will deliver for you in receipts. . . . But, of course, it is to be expected that you will get it going with a real campaign of the sort that generally makes the customers want to come out and solve the mystery for themselves. . . . So . . . our advice is: go out after it just as big as your purse and budget will permit and we're reasonably certain that you won't be disappointed. . . .

"ALEXANDER HAMILTON" is a distinct credit to the industry. . . . It's more than that . . . it's really a marvelous piece of entertainment of the sort that most communities will accept . . . but we're sorry for those spots where action pictures are essential, because . . . like "Disraeli" and "Old English," they won't take any too kindly to another costume picture . . . even though that picture is "Alexander Hamilton." . . .

It is hardly necessary for us to dwell to any great length on the exploitation possibilities of a picture with such an historical background as this one. . . . It stands to reason that wherever a theatre is respected by the local education authorities, they would gladly cooperate to the limit of their power to bring the picture to the attention of the school children. . . .

As for the newspapers, there are numberless angles for cooperative contests of various kinds . . . all aimed towards bringing about a most satisfactory return at the box office. . . .

Special shows for the grammar and high-school graduates ought to be productive of some fine extra revenue plus some valuable word-of-mouth advertising that should react nicely with the grownups. . . . Invitations to institutions to witness this picture will also help your campaign along by reason of the pictures' appeal to such institutions where the inmates rarely get a chance to see entertainment of this sort. . . .

Where this sort of stuff goes . . . it will be "box office" from scratch . . . for any patronage . . . except, possibly, the communities where Westerns are the chief diet . . . it will most certainly be an "audience" attraction. . . .

So, if your theatre likes George Arliss . . . has a weakness for pictures of this kind . . . or can be sold on the idea that they ought to like this form of entertainment . . . go out and plug it from every possible slant until you have built up sufficient interest to make them buy a ticket and enjoy one of the swellest shows they could ever want to see. . . .

Secret Service

Civil War Drama

Thrilling days when Grant took Richmond provide background for the latest Radio-Richard Dix opus, "Secret Service," cinematizing one of the popular plays of William Gillette.

Dix is summoned before General Grant in an impressive opening scene and ordered to go behind the Confederate lines on secret service duty. During an attack in which he is wounded, Dix manages the hazardous job of crossing no man's land and then, disguised as a Confederate captain, proceeds upon his mission.

Being wounded, he is entertained with true Southern hospitality in the home of a Confederate general, whose young son he saved during the attack which brought Dix through the lines. There is a beautiful daughter, played gracefully by Shirley Grey. Naturally she falls in love with the handsome Richard, and there he is—twixt love and duty!

Dix, however, is soldier first, lover afterward. But in proceeding with his duty of securing information and sending it across the lines on tapped wires, he comes within an inch of a firing squad. The girl saves him long enough for Grant and his legions to win the war, whereupon it is assumed that Dix and Shirley were among the first to begin healing the breach between North and South.

Production is well directed by J. Walter Ruben, and attractively mounted by Max Ree. Ed Cronjager provides some beautiful photographic effects. Dix is in the sort of role his public seems to prefer from him and is a manly, handsome figure in the uniforms of the Civil War. He receives adequate and interesting support from a group of competent artists.

Produced and distributed by Radio. Directed by J. Walter Ruben. Supervised by Lou Sarecky. Screen play by Gerrit J. Lloyd. From the stage play by William Gillette. Adaptation and dialogue by Bernard Schubert. Photographer, Edward Cronjager. Recording, George Ellis.

In Line of Duty

(Monogram)

Northwest Mounted

The Mounties come in for a good share of attention in this Monogram effort, which was greeted heartily by an audience at the Capitol theatre in Glendale, on the Coast. The producers took full advantage of the opportunity for picturing the ways of the Mounted and their dangerous work, as well as the colorful geographical atmosphere in which they work. Particularly lavish praise was bestowed by the patrons upon the many splendid animal scenes, which formed an excellent part of the background.

The featured members of the cast, Noah Beery, Sue Carrol, James Murray and Francis McDonald, were all noted as especially suited to their roles, and they are all old favorites and popular.

The yarn is typical of Northwest Mounted tales, concerning Beery, a trapper of the far country and his daughter, a role handled competently by Sue Carrol. Beery has murdered a man who he believed had wronged him, but kept the knowledge of the deed from his daughter. Murray, one of the Mounted, is dispatched to bring in Beery. Traveling through the difficult country, however, he falls from a cliff and breaks his leg. Beery finds him helpless, sets the broken limb, and sends Murray on his way. After much aimless wandering, the Mountie reaches the Beery cottage, where Sue meets him, with the more or less anticipated result, they fall in love with one another.

Murray finally discovers that Beery is the goal of his manhunt, and the trapper, rather than bring to his daughter the knowledge that her father is a murderer, goes out to fight with Francis McDonald. Deliberately, his gun is empty and he is killed.

Heartbreak

(Fox)

Drama

Too much talk, insufficient action and a cast which detracts from, rather than builds up the star, mitigate against the latest Fox production, "Heartbreak," at the Alexander in Glendale, on the Coast.

To get the "heartbreaks" which the story called for, required the delicate notes of a violin. It is as though the chords were struck upon a grand piano. Once again it is the story of a boy and a girl separated by the battle lines of the World War. Charlie Farrell, not so happily cast in his role, is the boy. Madge Evans, charming, svelte, graceful to an unusual degree, though not as deeply emotional as one might believe she could have been, is the girl. A strikingly tragic note is introduced when Charlie, as an allied flyer, unwittingly kills in sky combat the twin brother of his sweetheart, fighting under the Austrian flag. And it should be said that this twist of the plot was made particularly poignant by the splendid performance of Hardie Albright as the twin brother.

Before America's entrance into the war, Farrell, an attache of the embassy in Vienna, falls in love with Madge Evans, in the role of a lovely Austrian gentlewoman. He has been an aviator, so when Uncle Sam enters the fray he takes to the forces of the sky. Ultimately, he is transferred to the Italian front. Here he meets in mortal combat the brother of the girl he left in Vienna. Crazed by the knowledge that he has killed his sweetheart's twin brother, he flies to Vienna to apologize and explain to the girl that he did not know whom he was killing. In a not highly patriotic speech he declares to her that he would have killed himself first, had he known. When he returns to his own lines he is court-martialed, sentenced to military prison for the duration of the war. After the armistice, well, he returns to Vienna and the girl.

In addition to Albright, excellent support is given by John Sainpolis, Albert Conti, Paul Cavanagh and Claude King.

Up for The Cup

(British and Dominions-Gaumont)

Amusing Stellar Comedy

Chief interest in this one lies in its clever exploitation of Sydney Howard, most popular of present-day comedians. Built as farce, it has no weight as a story, but provides Howard with plenty of gags, and shows on the British screen for the first time in a feature film, the most famous of our "low brow" sports meetings—The Football Cup Final.

John Willie Entwhistle (Howard) is a Lancashire sap, with inventive turn of mind. He schemes a new cotton loom, but everybody laughs at him. Any way, he takes his "girl" up to London for the Cup Final. His arrival starts a constant round of funny complications. Of course, he gets relieved of his wallet, losing money and tickets to the game. He also loses his girl, who leaves with the boss's son, and all but loses himself.

His ingenious attempts to get into the game without his ticket—first as press reporter to "Old Moore's Almanac," and later as a "faint" case, nearly land him in the hospital, but after about 50 minutes of laughs, he traces his girl, rescuing her (in the nick of time) from her would-be seducer, and with his last penny—earned in singing to the theatre queue—buys a paper, only to learn that his invention has gone big, and that he is rich—rich enough to start walking home along the rail track. This is rather delightful fooling, without any pretence or claim to super rank.

Interest depends largely upon local characteristics, but for all that, the gags should be comprehensible and quite funny to the average American audience. Jack Raymond, director, has made the most of his material, though the story was on the light side for such length. The film was given its British premiere aboard the White Star liner Homeric, as she lay in dock for the Schneider Air Trophy race, got by wonderfully with a critical audience of more or less sedate type. Owing to exterior ill luck, this film ran into upwards of £30,000 production costs, which, though excessive, ought to come back on sales to the tougher fans.

Karamazov

(Tobis)

Drama

The solemn note that is Russia in its art, music and literature sounds throughout the Terra production, "Karamazov," which opened the Vanderbilt theatre of Tobis in New York two weeks ago and closes this week. The Vanderbilt, "dedicated as a home for the presentation of the finest examples of cinematic entertainment of Continental Europe, is Tobis' showroom for picture distribution in America and follows to some extent the intimate theatre idea.

True also to German producing principles, a high standard of music is interpolated to augment the moods of the picture. In this production the director, Fedor Ozep, reflects the theme with frequent shots of nature at its gloomiest, and with deliberate action. And the gay music of the cafe is used to intensify the contrast between the sorrow that is and the happiness that might have been.

The theme of the picture, which is founded on Dostoyevsky's novel, "The Brothers Karamazov," is one of betrayed love—and murder. Dmitri (played by Fritz Korner) leaves his fiancee Katja (Hanna Waag) to go to his father for the money due him from his mother's estate. The tottering old man is infatuated by Gruschenka (Anna Sten) and Dmitri, attempting to break up the affair, succumbs to her lures as well. An epileptic, plotting to murder the wealthy old man, frames an alibi that involves Dmitri, and Dmitri and Gruschenka, at the moment that they learn of their true love, are interrupted by the police. Dmitri is sent to Siberia for 10 years and the last shot shows Gruschenka on the rear platform of the departing convict train.

The Cisco Kid

(Fox)

Western

An audience at Long Beach theatre on the Coast seemed pleased with this offering, more than a little reminiscent of the "In Old Arizona" of an earlier date. Warner Baxter and Edmund Lowe, in the leads, met with real favor from the attendant patrons.

Irving Cummings, director, was accorded praise for the manner in which he kept the pace of the film moving rapidly and with his general handling of the picture, from start to finish.

Baxter, Lowe and Conchita Montenegro, feminine romantic interest, were applauded for their performance. Marilyn Knowlden, a five-year-old, took the audience, and the balance of the cast, including Nora Lane, Willard Robertson, James Bradbury, Jr., and Frederick Burt, were rated satisfactory.

Lowe is sent to pursue his old enemy, the Cisco Kid. His hunt and his affair with Miss Montenegro alike end unsuccessfully, though the dancer loves Lowe. When Nora Lane and her children are about to be ousted from their home, Baxter steals $5,000 from the bank and pays off the mortgage.

Lowe discovers Baxter at the Lane home, to which he had returned to help little Marilyn, hurt in aiding his escape. Lowe, realizing that Baxter had risked his life to protect the child, pretends he does not know Baxter is the Kid, and permits him to escape.

Al Cohn's dialogue is replete with lines which "took" with the audience. Some specimens of beautiful photography by Barney McGill do their part in making the picture effective as a whole, comment indicated.

Produced and distributed by Fox Film Corp. From the story, "The Romantic Rogue," by O. Henry. Screen play and adaptation by Al Cohn. Directed by Irving Cummings. Photographed by Barney McGill. Release date, November 1, 1931.

Hindle Wakes

(Gaumont-Gainsborough)

Romantic Drama

This is not a sequel to "The Sleeping Beauty." The word "Wakes" describes the annual holidays, taken en masse, by the workers in the British cotton centres of Lancashire. It is a real British talker (at last), setting out to tell a straight-forward tale of life among the British working classes, without sermons or flag-wagging. And it will not only send up the prestige of the Gainsborough-Gaumont production unit, but will do a bit towards breaking down public prejudice created by less worthy British efforts.

Here is a simple story (Stanley Houghton's play) which has already been twice made as a silent subject, but which now comes to life on the screen in a most amazing manner. The brogue and the idiom of the cotton workers—musical and amusing—is fortunately not exaggerated, and will therefore be followed with ease by American audiences. The picture throws up an entirely new British star in Belle Chrystall, who plays the Lancashire girl, (Jenny Hawthorne.) The girl with a feminine friend goes to Blackpool sea-beach for the "Wakes." While there she meets the young son of her "boss," and in the thrall of the holiday spirit decides that she might as well accept his invitation to slip off to some other place for the "Wakes" week. The old folks at home won't know: she'd better have a good time while she can. What is the girl friend for anyway, unless to post an "alibi" postcard some time during the week? So she goes off for her fun, leaving the girl friend, and the postcard.

Girl friend gets killed in a motorcoach smash, and the escapade is exposed, though our Lancashire girl only discovers this when, on her return home, her parents confront her with the facts. Her attempts to bluff and lie provide one of the most natural pieces of acting ever seen in any film. The secret out, parents begin to force the issue towards marriage, though the fellow is already spoken for elsewhere. There are family committee meetings; long sermons on morals and the duty of the young towards the old; all the old fashioned cant and hypocrisy. When arguments have matured concerning the kind of wedding that is to be, the "bride-elect" awakens the proceedings with a reminder that everything seems to have been arranged except the proposal of marriage. No one seems to be have thought of asking her whether she wanted to marry the young prig who "being a man just took her off for fun." From that moment the girl betrays the strong independence characteristic of the womenfolk of her craft and class. She isn't to be bought or given away like a present with a pound of tea. So after more gripping and heart-touching drama, she just walks out on the whole lot, and goes off to find work and happiness in some other cotton mill.

This film confirms the status of Victor Saville as one of the most sympathetic and imaginative of British directors—one of very few. His casting is practically faultless, and he has, by employing vivid characterizations and realistic industrial and carnival settings, caught the true atmosphere of this romantic bit of prosaic Britain that is called Lancashire. Outstandingly good character work comes from Sybil Thorndike and Edmund Gwenn, as the parents of the defiant Jenny Hawthorne, and Norman McKinnel as the millowner whose son starts all the trouble, all of whom look and live, rather than act the paragon of parental rectitude. John Stuart labors under the difficulties of an entirely unsympathetic part; he is, one feels, unnecessarily caddish. After all, quite nice people take holidays. Fault finding dwells on minor points with this picture, however, and I shall expect it to remain outstanding among British films for quite a time.

Produced by Gainsborough Pictures. Distributed by Gaumont-British. Directed by Victor Saville. Scenario by Angus McPhail. Edited by R. E. Dearing. Photography by Mutz Greenbaum. Running time, 79 minutes. Recorded on British Acoustics.

The Ghost Train

(Gainsborough-Gaumont)

Tip-Top Crook Thriller

Arnold Ridley's story, in the hands of Walter Forde, another young British director with a future, makes one of the best thrillers in quite some time. Story introduces splendid comedy material for Jack Hulbert and Cecily Courtneidge, both well known stage stars, and how they build on it!

Hulbert acts the "silly ass" of a party of rail travelers stranded on a dark wet night in the waiting room of a lonely country railroad station. They are warned by the station-master-porter that the station is haunted; that sometimes at midnight "the ghost train" runs through, and that the only men who ever dared to look upon it "were struck dead." The party includes a fussy old spinster (Cecily Courtneidge), a honeymoon couple, a couple of salesmen, a doctor and so on—a motley set. But when the stationmaster is "struck dead" and a half-demented woman arrives on the scene, nerves get a trifle frayed. The ghost train will run, she says, but for heaven's sake none of them look out at the thundering phantom or they'll surely die. The ghost train whistles through the station, and the "silly ass," really (of course) a detective in disguise, just tunes in on a radio receiver and awaits instructions concerning the train's return. He knows that the train is no ghost, but a gun-runner, and that the stories and the acting of the stationmaster and the strange woman are all the bluff of the game. Unexpected visitors at night present no problem to the gun crooks, provided they are not too inquisitive. Hulbert finally gets word of the return of the train, and lifting a drawbridge, sends the whole lot with its illicit cargo into the river below. This is a splendidly worked climax, and one of the strongest points of the whole job is its speed. Clean, sharp and with feasible development of story, it rep-

Murder At Midnight

(Tiffany)

Mystery

Tiffany offers a murder mystery, which is the second feature attraction at the new Moss Broadway on that street. It has at least the one particularly necessary element of a murder mystery, the perpetrator of the crime, or crimes, since four people are rather neatly dispatched, is cleverly and carefully hidden from the audience sleuthing until near the closing sequence.

A deliberate shooting in the course of a playlet, made to look like murder by the man who really conceived it, a second murder made to look like suicide and a poison-tainted needle, enclosed in a telephone receiver, all are used as murderous methods, with effective surrounding mystery. However, the manner in which the detective on the case, played by Robert Elliot, unearths the real culprit, after being on the wrong track, is too sudden and hardly happens with sufficient justification. At least that is apt to be the thought of the true mystery fan, while others, overlooking that, will doubtless enjoy the film. At any rate, the patrons at the Broadway gave the picture ample attention and appeared satisfactorily mystified.

Aileen Pringle, as the wife of the murdered man, Hale Hamilton as the criminologist who becomes rather involved in the situation, and Robert Elliott were all considered to have given satisfactory performances. Alice White appears well as the maid who learns the truth and is murdered for her knowledge, and Brandon Hurst is the butler who meets the same fate when he learns too much. Both were possibly guilty of the crime, and their murder complicates the situation and narrows the field in an effective manner. The balance of the cast handle their respective roles adequately.

Produced and distributed by Tiffany. Directed by Frank Strayer. Story by Frank Strayer and W. Scott Darling. Dialogue by W. Scott Darling. Photographed by William Rees. Release date, September 1, 1931. Running time, 69 minutes.

Good Fun

Jimmy Gleason again, in another of his series as manager of Ham Hand, done by Harry Gribbon, as the dumb fighter of Rufftown. The yarn is amusing and Gleason, in his inimitable style, puts it across in great shape. This time Stale Annie stands in the way of Ham Hand's success, so the mayor and Jimmy try a kidnaping stunt before the big fight. But Annie will not stay kidnaped, and comes back in time to see her "boy" knocked out and do a little knocking on her own account.—Running time, 20 minutes.

A Few Laughs

Frank McHugh plays the lead in this comedy, as the newspaper reporter who tries to save his job by discovering the murderer in a recent case. He frames a confession with and by his brother-in-law, and the latter is nearly electrocuted when McHugh, very drunk, arrives at the jail with the murdered man, whom he had met in a speakeasy. His trip to the jail in the patrol wagon with the supposed murdered man, is good for a few laughs.—Running time, 18 minutes.

Chris-Crossed

(Columbia)

Entertaining

An Eddie Buzzell radio bedtime story, which is clever, amusing and highly entertaining. Buzzell tells the story of the voyage of Columbus and the discovery of America. This is a good laugh short on any program.

Take 'Em and Shake 'Em

(RKO Pathe)

Fair

A comedy effort which contains a good bit of slapstick and is only fair with regard to cleverness of dialogue, theme and performance. One of the Gay Girls numbers, it concerns the three girls who have borrowed a gentleman's apartment in his absence, an attempt to prolong the stay through supposed wily ways, when he unexpectedly returns. One is supposed to be sick, which gives opportunity for slapstick in an operating room. The last laugh is on the girls.—Running time, 18 minutes.

The Forward Pass

Good

Howard Jones, Southern California coach, takes the leading voice in this number of the "Football for the Fan" series, heightened in interest by reason of timeliness. Jones reviews the evolution of the pass, as a weapon in the modern American football game, with various coaches of note explaining the plays, and their teams running through the execution. Real fan interest lies in seeing and hearing several well known coaches, among them Benny Friedman, great passer.—Running time, 9 minutes.

The Family Shoe

(RKO Pathe)

Clever

A clever and amusing Aesop Fable animated number, in which is enacted the story of the old woman in the shoe and Jack and the bean-stalk and the golden goose. Animation is good and idea unusually original, two things necessary in good cartoons.—Running time, 7 minutes.

Pigskin Progress

(RKO Pathe)

Fine

Interesting and timely is this sketch by Grantland Rice himself of the modern American game of football. He explains the progress of the game from the first, in 1869, to the present big stadium event of today, the while are pictured shots from the various games. Most interesting: Shots of the 1914 game, when Harvard played and beat Yale in the then new Yale Bowl. Walter Camp is seen and Charlie Brickley, great drop-kicker, to heighten fan interest.

Hot Feet

(Universal)

Fine

This rates as one of the most amusing of the Oswald animated cartoon numbers, filled with laughs throughout. Originality in idea and cleverness in execution keep things moving nicely, and humorously.—Running time, 6 minutes.

Fly Hi

(RKO Pathe)

Good

An Aesop Fable, recounting in animation the yarn of the spider and the fly, except that two loving flies are enticed into the spider's parlor where he plays the piano for them. The flies escape, to music, and the pursuing spider lands on the fly-paper. Good for a light spot on any bill.

Germany in 15 Minutes

(Tobis)

Splendid

Novel treatment of a travel theme is presented throughout, beginning with impressionistic circles and arcs. Then come rapidly shifting shots, with fadeins and fadeouts, unusual camera angles, and atmospheric music. There are glimpses of Berlin, a jump to Bavaria, then Stuttgart, Frankfort, Cologne and the Rhine, Hamburg and the Hagenbeck animal farm.

Isle of Isolation

(Imperial Pictures)

Interesting

An interesting and entertaining number on the island of Bali. Deane H. Dickason, who renders the lively description, calls it the most enchanting isle in the world, and we are led to agree. The women are unusually attractive. Wide appeal and of general interest.—Running time, 9 minutes.

Via Express

(Paramount)

Funny

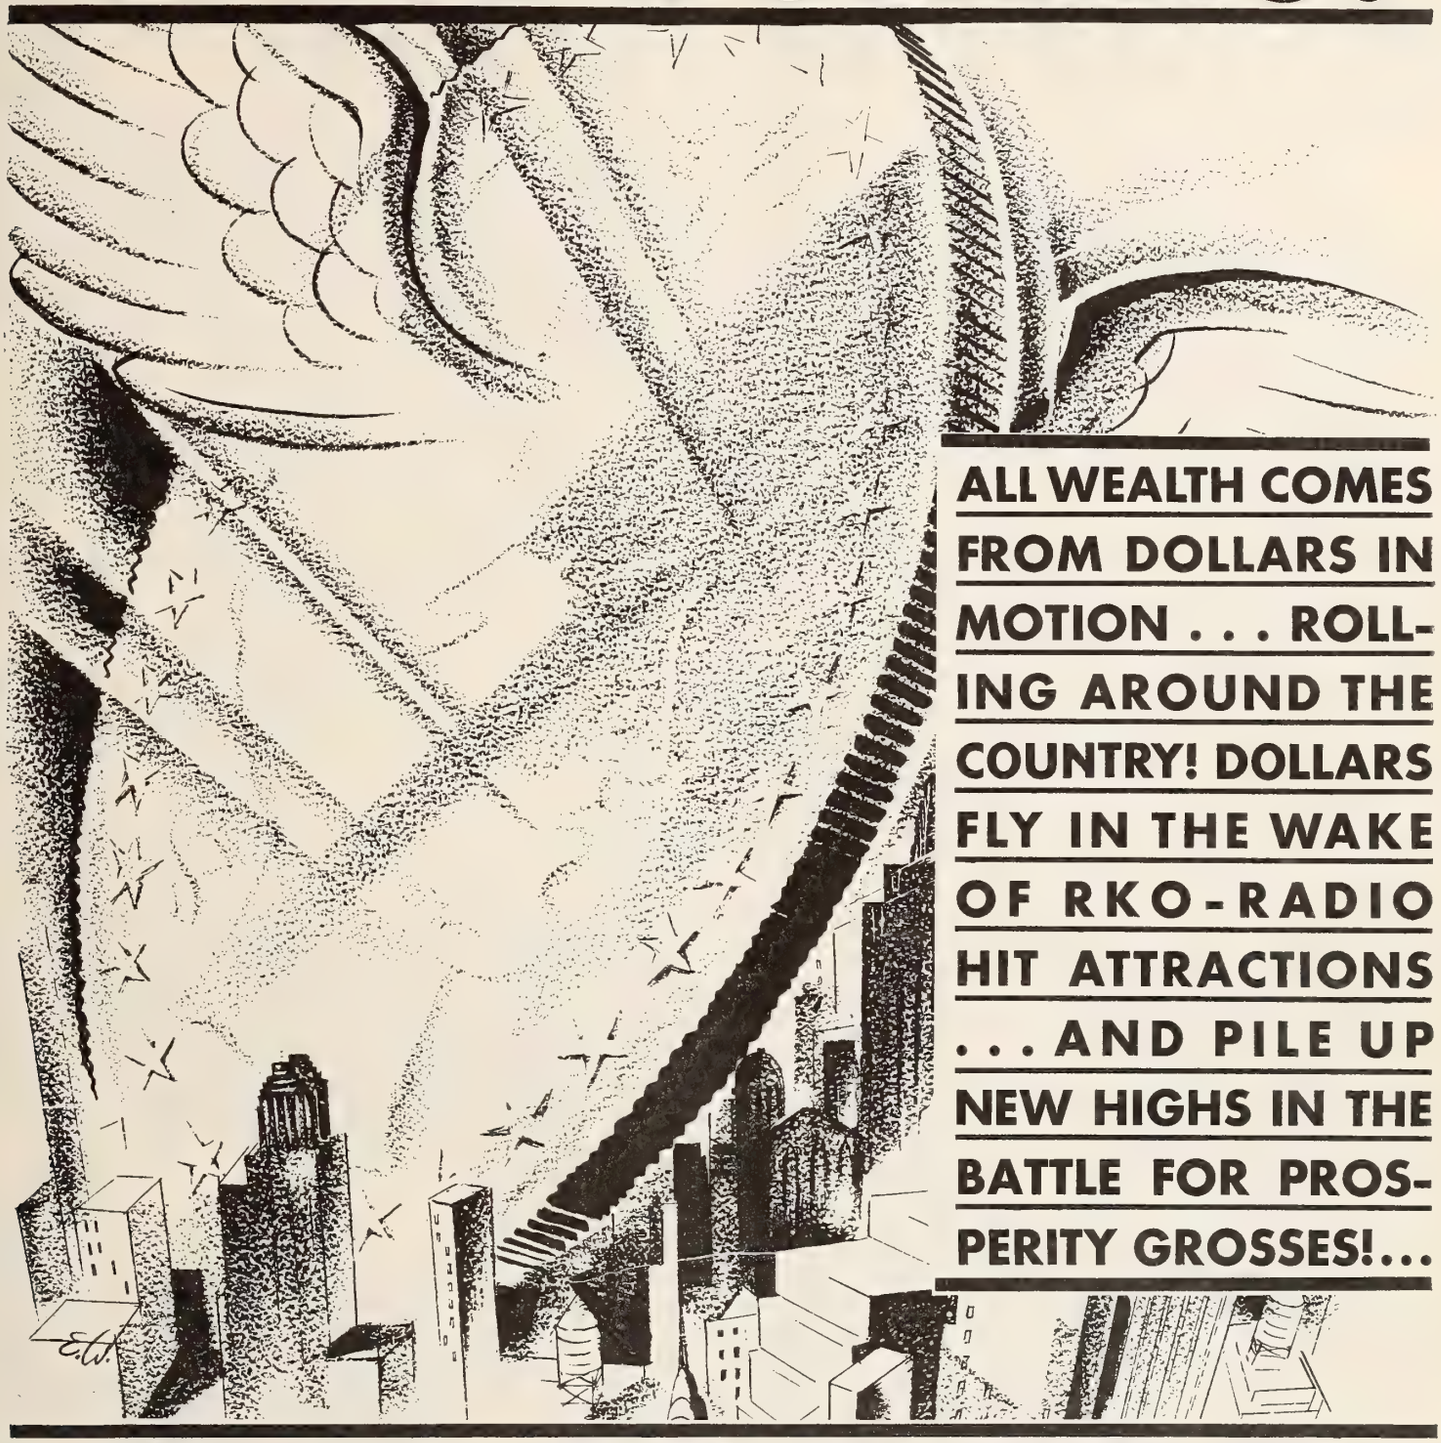
Tom Howard is amusing and the audience at the New York Paramount seemed to enjoy his inimitable style of comedy delivery. Short concerns shipping via express of a $20,000 vase. Of course, the invaluable antique meets with the fate one would expect.—Running time, 10 minutes.

Strange As It Seems

(Universal)

Interesting

Number 13 of this color series of oddities in the news, conducted by John Hix. Here again, the usual high standard of the group is maintained. Subjects include champion horseshoe thrower who is equally adept with hands or feet and a man, 80 years old, "who has never slept a wink in his life." An interesting and entertaining number.—Running time, 9 minutes.



The Hunter

(Universal)

Good

A clever and amusing animated cartoon number, with Oswald the rabbit and his pals and enemies having a real time of it, with more than a few laughs for the audience.—Running time, 6 minutes.

THEATRE RECEIPTS

Theatre receipts from 29 key cities of the country for the current week indicated a slight break from the regular increases in grosses which have characterized these compilations for some weeks past. The total for the seven day period reached $2,366, 826, which compared with the last week total gross figure of $2,392,313, indicated a drop in receipts of $25,487. There were no new high figures reported for the current week, while five new low grosses were noted. Last week, there were reported only two new lows and an equal number of new high figures.

4 times around the earth every week

110,000 miles travelled by ERPI Engineers so that the show can go on . . . . .

This amazing weekly mileage is just one indication of ERPI's constant efforts to maintain every Western Electric Sound System at peak performance. . . . Down have come the number of emergency calls every month. In one year they have been reduced 28 per cent because regular service calls have eliminated the emergencies — a preventive service. . . . When emergencies do arise, records show that ERPI Engineers are reducing the time to clear trouble. In August, 1930, average time to clear trouble was 131 minutes. In August, 1931, time to clear trouble had been reduced to 35 minutes. . . . "Peak Performance for the life of your contract"—the ERPI Service Engineer's guarantee.

"I'll see it through if you will!"

"THEY tell me there's five or six million of us—out of jobs.

"I know that's not your fault, any more than it is mine.

"But that doesn't change the fact that some of us right now are in a pretty tough spot—with families to worry about—and a workless winter ahead.

"Understand, we're not begging. We'd rather have a job than anything else you can give us.

"We're not scared, either. If you think the good old U. S. A. is in a bad way more than temporarily, just try to figure out some other place you'd rather be.

"But, until times do loosen up, we've got to have a little help.

"So I'm asking you to give us a lift, just as I would give one to you if I stood in your shoes and you in mine.

"Now don't send me any money—that isn't the idea. Don't even send any to the Committee which signs this appeal.

"The best way to help us is to give as generously as you can to your local welfare and charity organizations, your community chest or your emergency relief committee if you have one.

"That's my story; the rest is up to you.

"I'll see it through—if you will!"

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

CHARLES E. "CHICK" LEWIS
Chairman and Editor

An International Association of Showmen Meeting in MOTION PICTURE HERALD
Every Week—for Mutual Benefit and Progress

CONDUCTED BY AN EXHIBITOR FOR EXHIBITORS

Lend Me Your Ears!

WITH everyone else crying and moaning, theatres can lead the entire parade back to the so-called good times by setting an example in advertising and show-selling. . . . Joining the rest of the world in its wailing can hardly help an already aggravated situation. . . .

Under the guise of economy many circuit houses have cut and slashed the advertising and merchandising budgets of their theatres. . . . Bad judgment for many reasons. . . . It won't help business . . . it emphasizes "bad times" in all of those thousands of towns and cities where they ought to be stressing "back to prosperity" or other worth-while propaganda.

If ever the industry needed leadership in a campaign to boost business, it's right now. . . . Product is coming through most encouragingly . . . and there is every reason to feel that with a little added effort the immediate future is not so black. . . . But that added effort should be advertising . . . and more of it . . . along real showmanship lines. . . Don't lie down.

It is not always the house manager's fault if a picture is sold along "dirt" or suggestive lines when there are plenty of other worth-while slants to make it a box office success. . . . While it's true that the material sent out on "Bad Girl" was in poor taste, it should be noted that this mistake had been made time and again before "Bad Girl" was released. . . .

Few managers get a chance to preview every picture they run. . . . In most every case they must depend on what is conveyed to them about a picture when they start to frame their individual campaigns. . . . Yet, the industry is all ready to fly at the throat of the first offender who dares to take a picture and sell it along "suggestive" lines.

The fact that most spots where the "dirt" angle was stressed returned poor receipts merely emphasizes the mistake of sending out rotten material for the house manager to work on. Give him the right stuff . . . make sensible suggestions for the merchandising of the picture . . . and nine hundred and ninety-nine times out of a hundred . . . it will be sold properly and bring home the bacon. . . .

The evil of broadcasting poor advice to exhibitors is far from new. . . . It has been going on for as long as press books and poster material came out of the sausage machine system. . . . Correct that method and you eliminate much of the chance for such mistakes. . . .

And while on the subject of press books . . . we enjoyed lunch the other day with the advertising manager of one of the major companies and let him draw us into a discussion about this much-discussed aid (?) to exhibitors. . . .

The majority of suggestions contained in the press book of today is not only ridiculous but absolutely impractical . . . devoting page after page to a discussion about exploitation that is mostly worthless and rarely commands the slightest bit of respect from the man it was made for . . . the manager . . . yet . . . like the continued story . . . it goes on . . . and on . . . and on . . . except that the continued story ends some time or other . . . press books don't. . . .

What should a press book contain to be really helpful to the manager? Well . . . understand . . . we're merely expressing our own opinion . . . (so if you have some of your own tell us about it.) . . .

First, it should convey all the information essential for the manager of any kind of a house to know . . . such as cast . . . credit notes . . . story connection . . . some reader-interest short bits which can be blown up to any sized story a showman may require . . . footage . . . running time . . . short and sensible advertising lines for ad purposes. . . .

Then . . . a complete layout of the posters for the benefit of those men who use them . . . ditto the eleven by fourteen lobby pictures . . . the herald . . . etc. . . . And then . . . most important of all for the majority of managers . . . a wide assortment of all size newspaper ads . . . but designed through the eye of a showman . . . not a butcher . . . stuff that can be used, either as is, or broken up to fit the needs of the men who must frame their own newspaper advertising . . . and they run far into the majority as compared to the boys who are fortunate enough to be able to support an ad writer or artist.

If there happens to be one or two honest-to-goodness exploitation slants to the picture, devote more time to telling how they can be put across . . . step by step . . . so that an exhibitor stands a chance of really using them.

There has been a lot said . . . for and against the press book . . . but those who had anything to do with their make-up always resented constructive criticism and therefore kept right on grinding out the sausages. . . . That's O.K. with us if the distributors want to throw their money into the sewer . . . but with all this talk about spending money sensibly . . . they ought to make up their minds as to what a press book should contain and then concentrate on a few angles instead of trying to cover the whole sheet with junk. . . .

Now . . . I've had my say . . . I'll gladly lend my ears to hear what you other fellows have to say about them.

Keeping Up With The Times!

LET THE POLICE IN ON THIS!

Classified Page Tie Won Generous Space For Fulton

A classified ad tie-up with his local newspaper netted R. K. Fulton, manager of the Strand Theatre, Waterloo, Iowa, 196½ inches of free space over a period of three days for "Black Camel." This space was obtained through a scheme which provided a guest ticket to be given each person who placed a "paid in advance" ad in the newspaper on Thursday and Friday before opening of picture. Eighty-six of these tickets were honored at the box office, representing an expense item of $21.50. In return for this, the theatre received advertising space valued at slightly more than $225.

All of which represented a profit of over $200 to Fulton—a deal not to be laughed off these days—and it greatly helped him put over this picture. The classified ad manager also was thoroughly satisfied with the results he achieved. Good work, R. K., and do not forget to let your fellow members in on some other stunts.

Brown's Birthday Club 2,000 Strong And Growing Larger

Just about a year ago cards were distributed among the patrons of the Brown Theatrical Company, Zanesville, Ohio, by General Manager Caldwell H. Brown, advising them of the inauguration of a Birthday Club and inviting all to join and receive guest tickets on the occasion, good at any Brown house in the city.

The first anniversary of the Birthday Club was recently observed and it was announced that the club had grown to more than 2,000 members and increasing day by day. Membership is open to every one and the only necessary requirement is signing the name, residence, month and day of birth, leaving the card at one of the local theatre box offices or mailing same to Miss Wanda Salsbury, secretary of the club. Much of the success of the club is due to the efforts of Miss Salsbury for reason that she has taken keen interest in the organization from its inception.

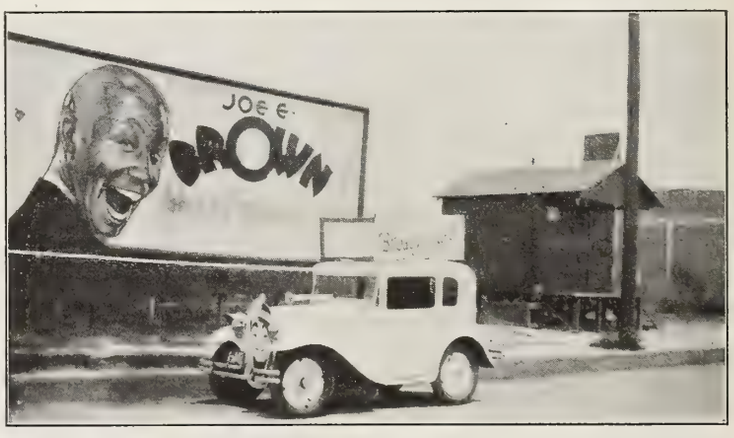
That's going some for a year-old baby, we'll say, and every one connected with the movement is to be congratulated on having achieved such handsome results. In addition to the creation of good will, it is an excellent means for obtaining an extremely live mailing list. While there are any number of such clubs in existence among theatres, we are calling your attention to this one because of its pronounced success within the period of just one year.

Janecky Is Busy Selling Shows At New Warner House

What with organizing extensive kiddie clubs and the general routine of running a large theatre, Round Tabler Harold Janecky, manager of the New Warner Theatre, Milwaukee, Wis., is a busy showman these days but now and then we get a line on a few of his activities and they're always good ones.

For instance, he's issuing a pip of a program-newsette which consists of an attractive front cover with large photo of a star in a coming picture; a "Theatorial" dedicated to public comfort; production notes and chatter interesting to fans; the week's program, and other notes on show business. It's a neat little piece of work, cover to cover.

Two other little gags he recently put over helped business along on "Star Witness" and "Bought." For the former he took a review from a local newspaper and had it reprinted in the form of a herald for city-wide distribution. On the latter he made a tie-up with the Postal for reprint on a miniature telegraph form of a message from Archie Mayo to the Warner Theatre, the text commenting on highlights of the flm.



Janecky is always doing some interesting work wherever he may be located and we look for him to obtain some fine results at the New Warner, a post which he has held for but a short time. Just as soon as he can find time, we hope he'll knock off an article dealing with some recent stunts he has put over so that other members may get a line on his work.

Clyde Pratt Used Baby Auto As Bally For Brown Picture

One of our lately joined Club members, Clyde M. Pratt, manager of the Rialto Theatre, Alice, Texas, sends along a few words to express his pleasure on becoming a Round Tabler, and a couple of recently taken snapshots of the theatre front and an auto bally on "Broadminded."

The snap of the theatre front is a little too weak to reproduce well but we can state that a large cut-out of Joe Brown was used in center of entrance to the lobby and at either side of entrance were two large caricature posters of the star.

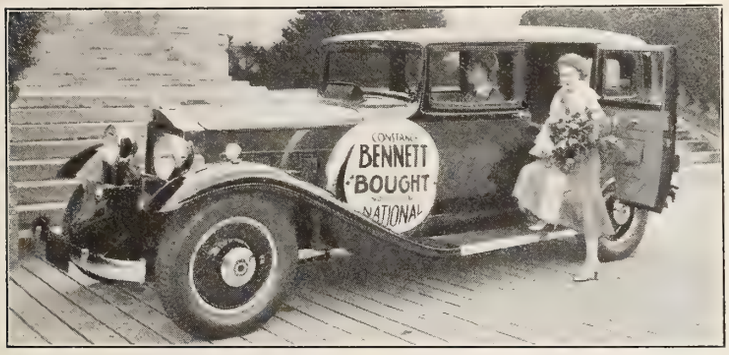
Regarding the little Austin car used as the bally, Pratt tells us it took some salesmanship to pry his local dealer loose from the idea that the car would be ruined as a result of the tie-up. It seemed that this dealer had been tie-up with once before with exploitation of another picture and was all set to write a book on "frenzied showmanship"; in other words, the exploiteer hadn't done right by our Nell. However, Pratt did end up by getting one, as you will note from the photo, but he had to rent it. A few more calls, and he hopes to convince the auto dealer that he's a square shooter.

And that's about the text of this little yarn, men. In this instance, some unscrupulous exploiteer or manager stirred up a lot of bad feeling on the part of the auto dealer by abusing a tie-up privilege. Then along comes a man who is on the level and in order to get any kind of a concession has to do some smart sales work to even rent one of the cars. We'll gamble though that before Pratt gets through he will have won the dealer over for his friend.

Notice to Members

PLEASE be sure to notify the Chairman of any change of address.

—THANK YOU.



Warren Slee Had Flashy Turn-Out To Exploit Film

As per usual, live-wire showman Warren A. Slee, manager of the National Theatre, Richmond, Va., is on the job when it comes to telling his public what's playing at his theatre and in this instance he got away with a nice little piece of advertising and publicity that cost but little.

The accompanying photos of ad and auto really tell the story at a glance but we want to do our share for the unemployed printers and will therefore hang a little type around them. First of all, he sold the auto dealer the idea to run the co-op on the basis of a fifty-fifty split and the loan of a model that retails for five grand. Then he promoted a good looking girl to be the occupant of the car as it was driven through town by a uniformed chauffeur over a two day period. You will note that the side tire carried the ad of picture, theatre and playdate and the tire on the opposite side carried an ad for the auto dealer. Another theatre ad was attached to the trunk rack in the rear.

We think that the co-op ad is very nicely gotten up and for your further information to use his own words, it was written, designed, laid out, copyrighted, censored, revised and approved by Warren himself. The stunt earned him some fine publicity and he has brought it to our attention with the idea that some other Round Tabler may also be able to cash in with a similar move. Nice work, Warren, and let us know what you've done since pulling this one.

Medd Loaned House To Nurses' School As Good Will Stunt

It's a little late in the season to pass along tips on how a theatre can be promoted through school graduation exercises but this one from E. R. Medd, manager of the Carolina Theatre, Lumberton, N. C., happens to have been pulled with a nursing college and if it can't be used now it can be filed away for future reference.

Briefly, Medd gave this hospital school of nursing his theatre in which to hold graduation day exercises and thereby gained a lot of publicity and good will from both school and public. The stunt didn't cost him a cent as it was scheduled at eleven o'clock on a week day morning. All notices and invitations carried the name of the theatre.

As usual, this Round Tabler continues to construct attractive foyer and lobby displays and if the snap-shot of one we have at hand would reproduce well, you'd see it along with this article. However, next time he sends along one sharp enough to show detail of construction it will be a pleasure to present it to his brother showmen. In the meantime, we'd like to hear something about his plans for the coming season.

Fire Chief Aided Lawler With Novel Stunt On Picture

A tie-in made with the local fire department resulted in some valuable publicity for "Third Alarm" when this picture was played by C. J. Lawler, manager of the Lawler Theatre, Greenfield, Mass.

Through the sanction of the fire chief, a large sign was put on the main floor of the Central Fire station, the sign reading, "Nobody at home today—We can be located at The Third Alarm at the Lawler Theatre." The sign created a great deal of comment and was excellent publicity for the picture.

The chief was most enthusiastic and personally endorsed the picture; in fact, he saw it twice—this being the first time in years that he has been in any local theatre.

Lawler also secured an old fire apparatus and parked it in front of the theatre; the apparatus carrying a sign, "This is what Greenfield would have to answer a Third Alarm with—it's time to think of a new fire station and new equipment." This tied in with newspaper and other agitation in favor of new equipment and a reorganized fire department.

That was a smart little stunt, C. J., and we can imagine citizens' reaction to a sign stating that the whole fire department had declared a holiday. What else has happened over your way of late? Don't forget to keep your fellow Round Tablers posted.

POSTER ART FOR THE THEATRE!

In presenting this, the first of a series, we are making good a promise of a short time ago to assist the progressive theatre artist who wants to improve his work in the theatre he is taking care of.

Benton L. James, in charge of the art work for the Missouri Theatre in St. Joseph, Mo., furnished us with this, as well as other miniatures for use in the Club section. Other artists who would like to contribute to the series are invited to do so. Color schemes must accompany all material submitted as well as any other suggestions for the improvement of this type of work. "Chick"

This fine head of William Powell can be used time and again by merely adding the title in the space to the right of the head or below, if the proportions work out that way. Highlight art work has always been effective especially for theatre use, but the shadings must be arranged so as to give it the most attractive appearance. The colors used on the original by Mr. James could not be secured in time for publication with this poster but we doubt whether any good artist will have trouble in making it up as a beautiful piece of art work.

Each Merchant Tied With Bathing Girl In Tunstill's Show

Not that a bathing suit and pajama revue had any particular bearing on "Vice Squad" when this picture was played by Clayton Tunstill, manager of the Lyric Theatre, Brownwood, Texas, but the fact remains that he used it and the stunt did its share to boost the box office receipts. The whole idea was centered around local interest.

Nine merchants co-operated by furnishing their respective models with a bathing suit and a pair of beach pajamas. Inasmuch as the town is quite religious and frowns upon bathing revues, Tunstill encountered many obstacles before the revue was a success. However, Tunstill had the helping hand of a popular girl whom he knew. This girl talked to the other girls that she was intimately acquainted with and in this manner, enough girls were secured to represent each of the nine merchants.

Large white cards on an easel were used to announce each model and the store they represented. The cards would be spotted first and then the model would enter and the spot followed her all the way around the runway.

Palm trees were placed on either side of the stage and an outdoor scene was used as a background. Each model appeared twice; once in a bathing suit and the other time in beach pajamas.

The revue, at no cost to the theatre other than building a runway, proved to be a business builder. The entire revue was well staged and all merchants were especially pleased with the way it was run off.

Not only did the theatre benefit in the way of money received through increased patronage but also received plenty of goodwill from the merchants as it proved a great advertising medium for them to get all Brownwood in the swimming mood so that they may sell their merchandise.

Tunstill figured it would be better to tie up with several merchants rather than just one for in this manner he was assured of more free advertising and more co-operation from the newspaper. The Bathing Revue was staged each night during run of the picture.

Well done, Clayton, particularly in view of the fact that you had to overcome so much opposition. That was a smart piece of work to secure enough attractive girls to represent the merchants and we're sure that other Club members will benefit from reading about this stunt of yours. By this time you've undoubtedly pulled another business getting piece of showmanship. Let's hear about it.

Weaver Displayed Novel 'Grams From All Over The World

Cablegrams from remote points were displayed in the lobby by L. P. Weaver, manager of the Rialto Theatre, Phoenix, Ariz., to advertise "Women of All Nations."

The lobby flash consisted of two beaver boards of ordinary bulletin size on which were posted Western Union cablegrams supposedly from thirty places scattered all over the world.

The cablegrams were addressed to Vic Flagg and Eddie Quirt and some to both of them, but all addressed them as members of the Marine Corps—"Somewhere on the High Seas" or "Somewhere in America," etc.

The 'grams were humorously romantic in nature—all pledging faithfulness to the boys and asking that they be true to them until they returned again. They were signed by girls' names in line with the nations from which the 'grams were supposed to have come from.

The boards were placed in the lobby about a week in advance of opening and held during run of picture.

The above stunt was based upon public curiosity and attracted many people. During the day it was a common sight to see groups around the displays, laughing and commenting on the text of the messages. Weaver is not the only Club member to cash in on this idea, as we've had occasion to note, and so here it is for some other Round Tabler to use.

Radio Message To Kids Produces Big Results On Serial

A smart little stunt was pulled recently by Ralph Phillips, manager of the State Theatre, Chattanooga, to attract kiddies to "Forbidden Adventure."

The local radio station has a Safety Club composed of some 4,000 juvenile members. An appeal was made to the head of this Club to make a radio announcement that "Forbidden Adventure" would be shown two days later and the first fifty that called would receive a guest ticket to see the picture.

As soon as the radio announcement was made, the phone started ringing, the persons asking for one of the guest tickets. And the phone was continually busy. Phillips handled the requests by alloting the 50 tickets to the youngsters scattered all over the city.

The only cost connected with the stunt was 50 cents for cards. And due to the wide range of publicity the picture was given, the picture played to the largest children's attendance on record; 947 to be exact.

A gag of this sort can be used with most any picture that has kiddie appeal and these days most every radio broadcasting station has an organization of kids. If yours hasn't, how about attempting to promote one? When the results of the above are considered, and in view of the low cost, it would appear well worthwhile for a try-out. What else is doing down your way, Ralph? We'd like to hear from you regularly.

Kids Greet Nicol's Free Ice Cream Gag With S.R.O. Trade

You can call it downright bribery or anything else that may come to mind but the fact remains that free ice cream cones have been the means of a tremendous increase of attendance at the Saturday morning matinees held by M. H. Nicol, manager of the Palace Theatre, Waterloo, Iowa.

Take a look at the expressions of the kids in the accompanying photo and it's almost unnecessary to record that they are all enjoying their treat. The cream and cones were promoted through a tie-up with a local ice cream company and in return the theatre gives screen mention in advertising devoted to the children's Saturday morning matinees.

If this hot weather continues for any length of time a tie-up of this kind can still be used this season as a sure-fire method of attracting kiddie patronage. If not, it's a good one to file away as a reminder to pull this stunt next summer, when the kids are doing other things than attending theatres.

Good Campaign Is Made On "Sporting Blood" By Caldwell

When Wally Caldwell, manager of the Valentine Theatre, Toledo, Ohio, exploits a picture you can generally count upon hearing of a well-rounded campaign, and his recent work on "Sporting Blood" was no exception to the rule. Following are the stunts he employed on this picture.

He stencilled all sidewalks on corners and center of blocks in downtown district and entire west end with 18-inch horseshoes, containing theatre copy in center; placed 200 red and black on yellow one-sheet window cards in windows in all sections of city; arranged with 125 taxis to carry placards on rear windows; tacked one-sheet cards inside entrances of seven riding academies; placed awning streamers on downtown merchants' awnings; arranged for special Madge Evans fashion window in large department store, and a Clark Gable picture frame window in same store containing 24 various style easel frames, each one with Gable photo.

A Clark Gable photo tie-up was also made with a local broadcasting station for presentation of photos to the first 400 local feminine fans who made application. Announcements were made over radio during week-end dinner time hour. An additional 400 photos of Gable were distributed through a tie-up with a laundry. Four thousand hand heralds were also handed out to theatre patrons and placed in packages at a retail market. He secured the usual advance stories and pictures in newspapers.

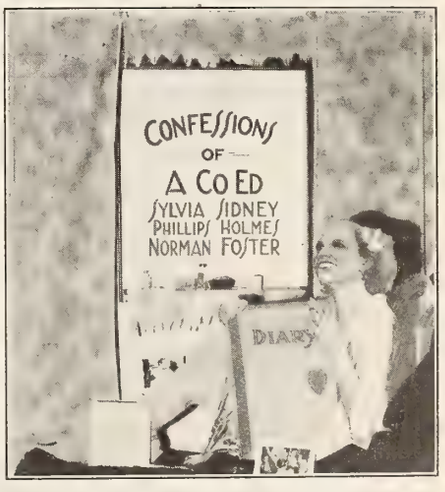
Wally, how about shooting along an occasional photo so that the rest of the boys can see as well as read about your work at the Valentine. Furthermore, if you can spare the time, take a little time off some day and write the Club a letter, telling us all about highlights in recent campaigns. We're all interested, so try to get around to it in the near future.

THEATRE PARTIES AND BENEFIT SHOWS!

Here are two excellent ideas, particularly the Benefit Show angle whereby the organization sponsoring the affair cuts in on a percentage.

Extreme care, however, should be to avoid entering into agreements of such a nature that may not help your average receipts. The organization must sell a specified number of tickets OUTSIDE OF THE THEATRE to cut in on the percentage; this can be on a sliding scale with the cut being increased if larger numbers are sold.

The manager must get a full accounting of all tickets handed over to the committee and is entitled to payment regardless of whether the buyer of the ticket attends the show. Many clubs get the edge in this respect by reason of making a deal to pay the theatre so much a ticket for every one presented at the door for admission. Avoid such a slant.



Contact your local organizations via a trailer on the screen, program notes and personal letters. Point out in the letters the advantages of such Benefit Shows and how they help the treasury of the clubs.

There are many worth-while angles to these affairs, but there are also many pitfalls, so watch your step, but encourage the benefits and theatre parties.

Kayes Constructed Novel Display For Window Advertising

One of the most effective displays used in some little time by H. F. Kayes, manager of the Paramount Theatre, North Adams, Mass., was a cooperative one engineered in connection with the playing of "Confessions of a Co-Ed."

You will note from the photo on this page that one of the cut-out co-eds is reclining on a couch, apparently holding open a diary. A small card resting against her ankles reads: "A Frank Story of the Thrills and Temptations of An American College Girl." Above the cut-out was a large sign giving title of picture and cast. Surrounding the display were stills from the picture together with cards setting forth playdates.

These displays were tied up with numerous stores and placed in windows from one to two weeks in advance of showing, and from what we hear were instrumental in producing excellent results. What else have you been doing of late to fill seats at the Paramount, Kayes? Drop your Club a line now and then and tell us about some more of your work so we can shoot your ideas along to the rest of the gang. We like your window display illustrated here and we are sure that many other Club members will be able to use the same idea, or something similar, to help send this picture over the top.

ROUND TABLE BIOGRAPHIES

When a boy of fifteen years spends his spare time between school hours ushering and selling program ad space, it's a safe bet that the old show germ had a firm hold on Arnold Stoltz, present publicity director for three Loew Theatres in Baltimore, Md.

Arnold Stoltz

Even though he took a law course at Washington University, he adopted show business for his career, leaving it but once to become director of public relations for the Chamber of Commerce and Street Railways. Terminating his contracts with these two institutions, he slid right back into the old game, and there he's been right up to now.

He has been connected with the Warner and Loew circuits and at one time managed the Mission Theatre in Los Angeles, Calif. He has also taken a turn at the acting end of the business, making appearances in many theatres.

Stoltz was born in New York City, is a married man and a member of the N.V.A. and the Cosmopolitan Club. We take it that he's in this business for keeps because he says if he had to begin all over again, show game would be his chosen profession. He can be found these days at either the Century, Stanley or Valencia Theatres in Baltimore, all Loew houses.

"LOBBY LAFFS"

By ED. MALCOLM
(Batting for KIRSCHBAUM)

OUCH!!!

Hoyt's Screen News Widely Circulated In Melbourne, Aus.

The weekly publication "Screen News" put out by Hoyt's Theatres in Melbourne, Australia, is certainly a most attractively gotten up piece of work and thanks to the good offices of George Griffith, Jr., and Universal Joe Weil, we have several copies before us for inspection.

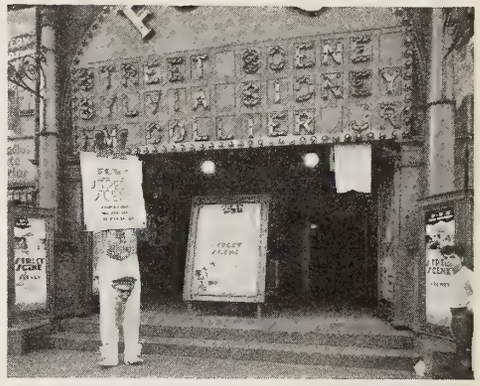
It is a twenty-page magazine with rotogravure cover, the inside front devoted to a listing of local Hoyt houses with current attractions and telephone numbers. The balance contains well selected fan stories, news of the industry, fashion notes and film company ads. It is entirely in keeping with the Hoyt prestige in Melbourne and its editors are to be congratulated for their enterprise in turning out such a neat job.

Lobby and Screen Exploited "Daddy" For L. G. Flanagan

A lobby stunt and screen novelty were successfully used by L. G. Flanagan, manager of the Garden Theatre, Greenfield, Mass., when exploiting "Daddy Long Legs," both attracting a great deal of attention.

The lobby stunt was used for four days in advance and consisted of a young man attired in a morning suit and wearing a silk high hat. The young man parked himself in front of the box office in a rustic chair holding an umbrella, the top of which was lettered, "I am going to be the first in line to see Janet Gaynor and Warner Baxter in DADDY LONG LEGS, playing at this theatre next Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday."

Flanagan put over a bit of novelty on the screen by projecting a silhouette of Daddy Long Legs preceding the showing of the trailer and then at various intervals during the trailer showing by projecting the silhouette figure on the draw curtain at right of screen.



We haven't heard from Flanagan in a number of weeks but know from the above that he's still very much on his job. Lot o' luck, L. G., and keep your fellow members posted.

Skiffington Made Upside-Down Man To Sell Picture

A street ballyhoo was used to excellent results by J. H. Skiffington, manager of Fox's Theatre, Springfield, Mass., when he played "Street Scene."

As you will note in the illustration the "upside-down" rigging was given a man engaged for the occasion and this bally was used along the principal thoroughfares and in front of the theatre throughout engagement of the picture.

Most any customer in the larger cities can make up the necessary rigging for one of the "Upside-Down Men" and if you are so situated that there isn't any dealer in this sort of stuff in your town, maybe you can rig one up in your own workshop. The photo will show everything you need—one man, a pair of button shoes, check and striped trousers, walking gloves, a hat and mask. Don't forget to give your man a little ventilation.

This was an effective stunt for Skiffington and it's a bally that never yet has failed to attract attention unless over-worked. We have not heard about this member's activities in the show world for some time up to running across this stunt and we hope that he will let the Club know what else he's doing over in Springfield.

Try A Magic Club To Boost Juvenile Trade, Says Jeffrey

Pronounced increase in juvenile patronage followed the organization of a "Magic Club" by G. B. Jeffrey, manager of the Stanley Theatre, West Palm Beach, Fla., and inasmuch as this kind of a stunt has not appeared for some time in this department, we're broadcasting it for the information of other members.

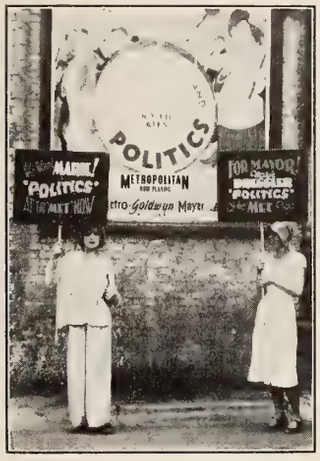
A herald gotten out at the start explains the whole scheme. It reads, "Boys and Girls—Join the Stanley Magic Club—Each Member Given a Complete Set of Magic Marvels—By Attending the First Show Each Saturday. A Different Trick Given Each Saturday Until the Whole Set Has Been Distributed. Get the First Trick By Going To the Stanley Magic Matinee Next Saturday."

The scheme has proven very popular with the kids and the return has been far in excess of the very low cost involved. There are 26 tricks in the set, the theatre being given the privilege of ordering as many or as few as desired. Jeffrey recommends the idea to any manager who wishes to build up juvenile patronage and a line to Club headquarters will bring information as to where members may secure the "tricks."

ROUND TABLE BIOGRAPHIES

Born in Odessa, Russia, in the year 1892, Jacob Vidumsky was educated in the Odessa High Commercial School and we find him entering show business in the city of Shanghai, China, at the age of 28 years. Why? Because the business carried more appeal to him than any other line of enterprise.

Jacob Vidumsky



Since locating in Shanghai he has been associated with Odeon Amusements, Hertzberg Enterprises, China Theatres and Shanghai Amusements in the capacities of manager and house manager. He is at present house manager of the Nanking Theatre, where T. J. Holt is general manager, and prior to this appointment was in charge of the Carlton. To quote from the China Times, "he is kind at heart and serious at work and most experienced in theatre management."

Inasmuch as he states that showbusiness will hold his interest for many years to come, the Club will expect him to keep its members informed on what's doing in Shanghai.

Willis Used Wide Variety Of Stunts To Sell "Politics"

Effective fronts, street ballyhoos, novelty advertising on screen and wide distribution of novelty ballots and contest slips, were some of the features connected with the campaign made on "Politics" by F. L. Willis, manager of the Metropolitan Theatre, Winnipeg, Canada.

Advance selling consisted of readers in both newspapers one week ahead of playdate; panels in foyer, 6 feet by 2 feet, with black velour backing and metallic lettering of stars and title picked up by spots from mezzanine; star cut-outs and art cards with metallic lettering placed on both sides of lobby entrance; art one-sheet with black velour and metallic letter at entrance of mezzanine and black velour banner, 5 feet by 4 feet, reading "Starts Friday," placed in entrance to balcony.

A special midnight preview was held on the Thursday preceding the Saturday opening and on opening day another showing was screened at 10 A. M.

Three days in advance 10,000 contest strips—the gag being to make as many words as possible from letters spelling the title were distributed along with 10,000 novelty ballots. Other outside selling consisted of street car cards; 100 easel standards placed in beauty parlors, hotels and banks, and 26 insert cards in office and store windows.

The photos will give an idea how the theatre front appeared with 24-sheet cut-outs on either side of marquee, placed there for reason that a city ordinance prohibited attaching them to the marquee. The smaller photo shows a street ballyhoo of two women carrying "We Want Marie for Mayor" banners.

Another interesting novelty used that did its share of selling was the screening of a 15 x 4 inch traveller slide, projected from a Brenkert and travelling across the trailer. It was a sketch of Dressler and Moran in the midst of a big crowd, with parade of band and banner carriers.

Willis states that his theatre enjoyed one of the best week's trade in some time as the result of this campaign and that his skeletonized report and photos hardly do justice to the general scheme. He is also one of the entrants in M-G-M's contest for best work done on this picture and we're glad to know he obtained such gratifying results.

Selette Extending Book Cover Idea To Tie-Up With Stores

The book cover idea which we told you about a few weeks ago has worked out so well for Edward Selette, manager of the Arcadia Theatre, Portsmouth, N. H., that he is extending it on an elaborate scale. You will recall that he tied up with a circulating library, supplying it with a manila cover which carried name of theatre and house policy copy on front portion.

Since then he has tied-up with still another library and is now lining up local merchants on the same idea, using brown paper bags as the means of getting across his advertising. The house policy copy is alternated with a cut of lobby, showing articles on display for Gift Nite and other institutional advertising. Three merchants approached have already gone in and he plans to extend the idea until at least 100 stores have been tied-in.

INSTITUTIONAL ADVERTISING!

Theatres have more to sell than just a show, that's something most everyone agrees on, but, they don't do much about it.

Successful theatres have found it a good policy to stress the comfort and conveniences of their houses via trailers, house organs and newspaper advertising and it stands to reason that such a practice is a sensible one in many ways.

This is especially true of houses doing a consistently fair business. Enjoying, as they do, a steady patronage, they start to impress upon their patrons the healthy ventilation system of the theatre through the use of expensive apparatus. Or they emphasize to the women folk the many little comforts offered for their benefit. Seating, projection, safety, etc., are all fit subjects for institutional advertising and can certainly do the theatre no harm to tell the people about such things.

Recently, we published a layout of institutional newspaper ads from the west coast; imagine our surprise when dozens of members commented upon this material and asked for more. Proving that they were in a receptive mood for stuff of this kind.

During the regular grind of running that theatre of yours and advertising its shows, give a thought to some of those other things you can talk about besides pictures. It will create much interest among your patrons.

Selette tells us that 6-pound bags cost but $1.55 per thousand and the printing only a few dollars, so at this rate wide circulation of a message can be secured at small outlay. If any Club member missed the article in the past issue describing the cover idea we will be glad to supply the information for results are proving this a worthwhile stunt. Continue the good work, Selette, and let us know the outcome of the merchant tie-up.

Patrons Stampeded B. O. In Response To Rose's "5 And 10" Ad

The title of the picture suggested a novel means of stimulating public interest when W. B. Rose, manager of the Strand Theatre, Brockton, Mass., played "Five and Ten."

For the first two hours of the opening matinee he advertised a spot price of five cents for children and 10 cents for adults.

He states that he has seen stunts go over big, but never before has he seen one go over as big as this one. Extra ushers had to be called from other local Publix houses and extra police to take care of the stampede trying to gain admission to the theatre.

There were 1,192 kids and 1,050 adults insisting on getting into 1,400 seats in those two prescribed hours. And this does not include hundreds that walked away after waiting over an hour to try to get in.

According to Rose, this stunt proved a wonderful tonic for the box office for the balance of the run, and even the newspapers —picked it up for a play in the news section. At any rate, it was a smart move and a good tip to pass along to other Round Tablers who may be looking for a stunt to use on this picture.

George Curtis Pulled A Sensational Stunt To Sell 'Nite Nurse'

An exploitation stunt that proved so sensational that its sponsor became nervous over its altogether obvious success, was recently pulled for "Night Nurse" by George Curtis, manager of the State Theatre in Springfield, Ohio.

A private ambulance, two nurses and an "actor" figured in the stunt. During peak hours, a well dressed man crossing the street dropped to the pavement. As he did so the siren of an approaching ambulance could be heard and in a few minutes it reached the man's side. The two nurses hurriedly left the ambulance, examined the apparently unconscious man and then ordered a number of onlookers to place him in the car. The car then sped off to repeat the stunt in another busy section of the city.

Curtis states that this stunt attracted more attention in the course of an hour than any ever carried out in his town and we don't doubt his word for one minute. It was a cuckoo, alright, and if any other Round Tablers think that they can get away with it in their towns just help yourself, with George's compliments. He's pulled many a corking stunt out in Springfield and we hope he will remember his old fraternal organization the next time he puts over one that carries a wallop.

HALLOWE'EN KIDDIE PARTY!

Breaking, as it does, on a Saturday, Hallowe'en gives smart managers a fine chance to organize a kiddie party on a large scale and even a masquerade party.

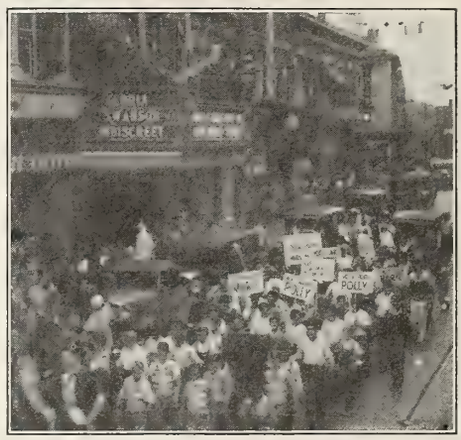
Few holidays appeal to the youngsters' imaginations like this one. Appropriate novelties and shorts can be secured and altogether a box-office record can be hung up for kiddie attendance.

Incidentally, the grown-ups, too, are not immune to the spirit of Hallowe'en, so perhaps you can include in your plans some sort of a gag that will bring them out as well.

Holden's Late News Service Is Popular In Ocala Theatres

A late news stunt is being worked down in Ocala, Fla., where Earle Holden is city manager of the Dixie, Etta and Temple Theatres, which promises to become a prize favorite with patrons.

He has made arrangement with the morning paper to furnish the theatre with about six to ten of the best late news flashes around 8:45 every night. As the reports come in slides are made up, boiled down to proper length so all items can be placed on one slide. Then immediately following the newsreel on the 9 P. M. show, the novelty is announced by slide as "Late News Flashes" and the news slides follow.



The old non-sync which has been lying around idle for some time has been oiled up and effect and musical records are used with the slides. For example, if it's a fire story, the effect record of fire engines and crackling of flames is sent through the horns; if a big gangster story breaks, the machine gun is used, etc.

To us this new gag of Holden's looks like a corker and it's working out so nicely for him that we're passing it along for other Club members to use if they like the idea. However, attention is called by him to the fact that it may be impractical for the larger houses because of the slide angle, as he is using regular radio-mat slides that can be made up on the typewriter.

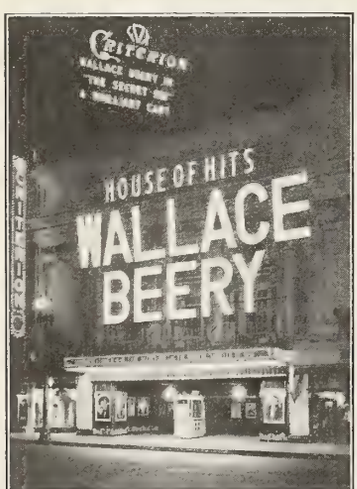
A Parade Featured Politics Campaign Made by Bloomberg

A big political parade was the highlight of a campaign made on "Politics" by P. D. Bloomberg, manager of the Paramount Theatre in Salem, Mass. The entire affair lasted over one hour and was witnessed by several thousand people scattered through the busiest sections of the city.

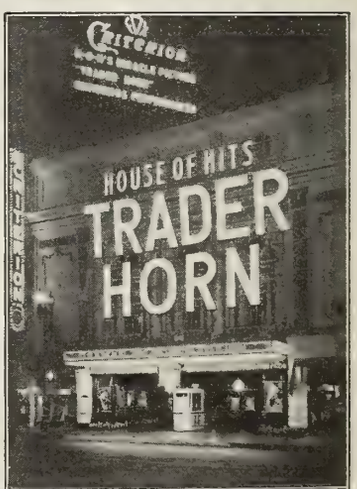
He tied-in with the local newsboys and secured the services of 150 for participation in the event, arranging to have them meet at a set time and place. Two actresses were also engaged for the occasion to represent Dressler and Moran and were driven through the streets of Salem several times before joining the newsboys to start the parade. Two local boys contributed their services in the act of playing trumpets to attract attention.

Through cooperation of local police it was arranged to have a motorcycle escort precede the 15 autos in the parade. The cars were all bannered with "Politics," likewise the newsboys. At the conclusion of the march the two women made stump speeches in the busiest section of the town.

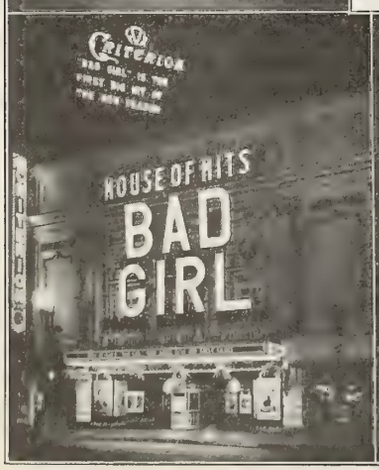
The campaign resulted a highly gratifying business for the theatre on opening day and throughout the entire run of picture and so Bloomberg is passing it along for others to use or adapt to their needs. We almost forgot to mention that he promoted a brand new Lincoln to head the parade and that the newspaper generously supported him in the matter of publicity.



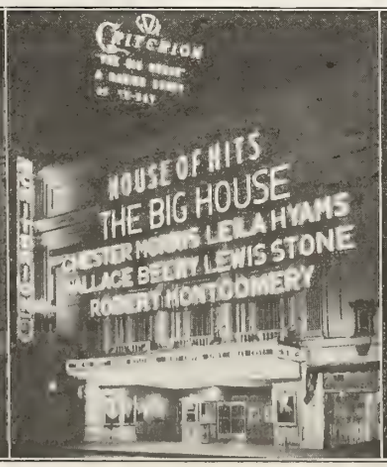
CRITERION SAYS IT WITH BIG LETTERS



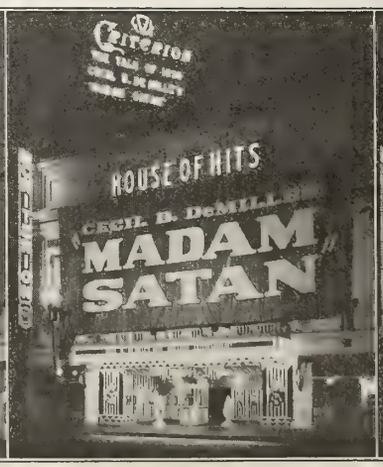
Following the group of artistic and atmospheric front displays carried on the Club pages last week, we reproduce here another group showing how the current attractions were being plugged via oversized letters on the theatre's front.



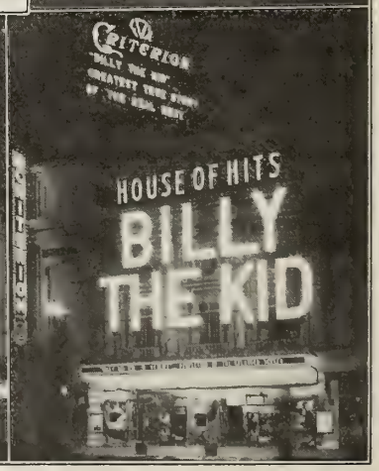
While the lobby displays do not show up very clear on these photos, you can nevertheless see how the entire front looked from long shots, especially the attractions which could be read from a distance of almost a dozen blocks away.



The Round Table Club would like to publish many more pictures of theatre fronts and displays. If your theatre is going in for atmospheric fronts, send us the photos and we'll be delighted to show them to the industry via this section. Such material has always met with a warm welcome, not only from theatre artists, but from the many managers who must work these things out.



However, we wanted you to see what these fronts looked like; so here they are. May not hurt to do something like this yourself once in a while.



SYSTEM IN THEATRE OPERATION!

This Experienced Manager Divulges His Methods for Proper Supervision!

Staff Organization Is Essential for the Successful Operation Of Your Theatre!

By S. S. "SIG" SOLOMON
Publix City Manager
Youngstown, Ohio

It was no easy task to get "Sig" Solomon to write this fine article on theatre management. Few showmen care to discuss their methods because it gives some of the others a foolish idea that it is boasting.

S. S. Solomon

One of the most important topics under discussion by all circuits and independents has been proper theatre management. By which is meant: organization of the staff; preparation for the opening of the house; supervision of its many departments; starting off the advertising campaign at the right time; holding down expenditures to the minimum. These and dozens of other angles are mighty essential in these days of plugging for business without running the overhead up too far.

Solomon knows theatre management and operation. His own rapid advancement with Publix clearly indicates that he is more than "just another manager". Others, who hope to mount the ladder too, can spend a little time profitably reading what "Sig" has to say on a subject all too rarely discussed by theatre men in general.

I am reminded of a bit of business between Maurice Chevalier and the "sloppy" queen in "The Smiling Lieutenant" wherein the s.q. is told that married people do not wink, whereupon the queen asks, "Well, why do people marry?" and Chevalier answers, "For 3,000 years people have been asking the same question and I don't think we will be able to solve it tonight." With the same logic do I believe that this article will not solve your managerial problems, but let's get started and as brother managers, follow me rather with an indulgent mind.

Get Yourself Organized

If there is one thing that should be stressed more emphatically than others; it is Organization. Without Organization easy things become difficult while the man who properly organizes his time can do three times as much of his difficult work as an unorganized man can. Organization gets things done!

Another vital factor that enters into every managerial activity is a sense of value. We, in the Publix organization, have a bible of three words, namely: Organize, deputize and supervise. It is with this preamble that we delve into the various responsibilities, duties and privileges of a theatre manager.

Essentially a t.m. has no hobbies above that of his theatre. Just like the musical director who told his second violinist to keep one eye on his music, one eye on his violin and one eye on him—the t.m. must get them in past the box office, give a one-hundred percent show, minimize expenditures for maximum results, be a good housekeeper, smart diplomat, civic mixer, respected citizen and, all in all, a lover of show business in general and his theatre in particular. So much for generalities and now to get down to brass tacks.

Must Be An Early Bird!

Theatre opens at ten thirty o'clock in the morning although the conscientious t.m. is at his desk at nine o'clock so that he can give the incoming mail and house inspection undivided attention. If the operation warrants a capable house manager, of course, it is he that does the usual house inspection but always under the supervision of the man responsible. Ten minutes before opening, house inspection—with lights up is systematically made as to cleanliness, unusual obstructions, exit doors, ventilation and personal appearance of staff. It has always been my policy to open up every morning at the same time and only have fifteen minutes—at the most—leeway before the regular performance starts. This intermission should be broken down by means of subdued non-sync or 33⅓ m.m. music. With the picture on the sheet some one with good ears and eyes must be in direct contact with booth and responsible for projection and sound. Obviously we agree how important this phase of our operation is, but you will also agree how sadly we neglect to follow through.

With the house staff functioning the manager hies away to a sanctum and while still "fresh" and with clear mind gets into publicity data. An organized t.m. will concentrate with publicity the same as every other phase of his operation and allot a certain amount of time every morning. Because policies vary as to changes each week and as to quality, quantity and variance of entertainment, suffice to say here that initiativeness and resourcefulness are a good t.m.'s prerogatives in handling allotted time for publicity.

Start Planning In Advance

In mapping out a campaign for say, a week stand policy, initial thought should be given at least two weeks prior and worked out in detail so that all phases are set at least seven days prior to opening date. In delving into costs versus results we must carefully consider and analyze opposition, general trend of the public mind, relative importance of entertainment, what campaigns have preceded and those to follow, so as to avoid confliction and repetition. First and foremost there must be no serious booking problems which might mitigate against the proper exploiting of any one program. A manager must decide his one or two or three greatest selling points and so build up these salient factors that the average theatre-goer will be "sold" by a comparative analysis and an unconscious comparison as to theatrical values. Let me bear down and impress with the fact that we always must speak the language of the average theatre-goer.

Much has been said of budgets but I believe a budget is only a means to an end if it strikes an average beyond which costs are prohibitive when compared with possibilities. Thus for illustration, if a budget does not permit the outlay of $10 which, on the face of it, may bring $20 in receipts—I maintain the budget is wrong. Of course, there may be another item of cost control which can be totally or partially eliminated to make way for the $10 expense in the theoretical set-up just mentioned.

In every campaign the following subdivisions should be systematically borne in mind for coverage and relative value: Newspapers, screen, art work (including theatre, foyer, lobby and front), billing, radio and exploitation. In some situations one or another over-balance either from the very nature of the attraction or because of individual treatment.

Manpower-Housekeeping-Personal Contact!

We now come to Manpower. The average theatre manager generally subsidizes this phase of his operation to an assistant but keeps in close contact by means of weekly meetings and systematic personal observations. Adaptability, loyalty, personal appearance and initiativeness are qualities which make for worth-while house staffs, and systematic inducements should be offered the young mind to carry on. I have instituted weekly lecture tours which take in every phase of theatre operation and handled by the various heads of departments.

Housekeeping embraces cleanliness and all its departments. Manpower is broken down to effect complete and continuous coverage; materials used should always be economically effective for close operation. It is always a good stunt when out late to drop in, say at one or two o'clock in the morning, as a sort of surprise visit. This sort of thing keeps everybody on their toes and you know how advantageous it is to keep menial help on their toes by doing the unexpected.

Aside from all the foregoing it is imperative to organize oneself so that each day is broken down, leaving none of the following phases unattended; Personal contact with patrons, interviews, civic and external contacts, personal booth and stage inspections, refrigeration or heating observance, doorman's announcements, regulation of marquee lights and fronthouse manpower coverage.

Harmony—Plus Loyalty—For Success!

Assuming there is the proper amount of ability and will-to-do, harmony is the keynote for the successful manager and theatre. Harmonious relations must exist between booker, district manager, home office officials and resident manager. While judicial supervision is obviously necessary, the manager is in a position to give his theatre specific treatment and his judgment should be so considered. On the other hand, "bull-headed" managers are distinct liabilities. Harmony plus loyalty must reign not only with superiors, but embrace all other contacts including house staff and patrons.

In conclusion, the successful theatre manager always submerges his own personality for the good of his theatre. Ambition to a degree will whet the appetite and serve as impetus to justify the responsibilities invested in everyone of us. It is our duty to cast aside every iota of superficial physical and mental incumbrance. It is not theory, nor preachment, nor "grandstand" words to say that the average well-meaning manager is basically one of the most human of mortals, blessed with a versatility of accomplishments and as such has an appreciation of his own service. Possibly with a little more coordination and organization the fair manager will be good and the good manager better whilst the incapable, unconscientious, inhuman title-bearing manager will be effaced, thus making it a better world for all of us.

LOCAL FOLLIES!

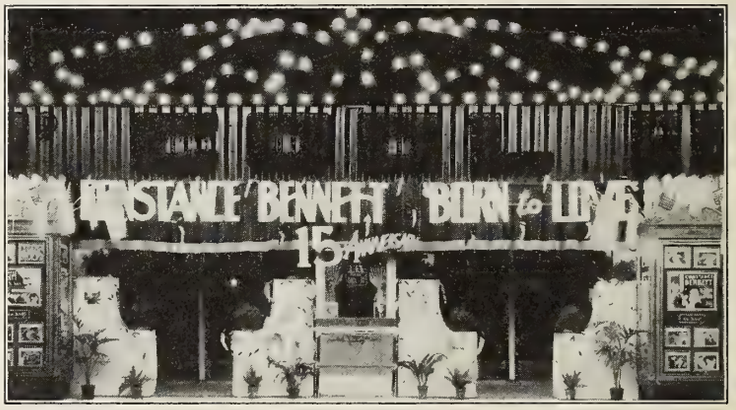
If you are capable of staging a show of this sort, or can contact someone to do it for you, we suggest, by all means, that you try it as a means of boosting business. Providing, of course, that your house and community are O. K. for local follies or any other kind of a show.

Home-town talent is the first major consideration. Importing professional or semi-pro acts will only make your locals seem poor by comparison and leave a slightly bad taste all around.

It can be handled by any house with a stage or platform of decent size; settings will also help put it over, but the recruiting of the locals will be your only big problem.

Every town on the map has its usual quota of amateurs. If convinced that their appearance will be surrounded with the proper atmosphere and no chance for ridicule, you can probably get them into the show. Merchants can be tied in to furnish costumes, etc., and perhaps your newspaper's advertising manager can uncover a slant for a co-op page.

A Popularity Contest for the most popular girl in town can be worked right along with the Follies and will be that much added interest. Voting can be arranged through merchants, the newspaper and the theatre.



Regardless of whether you ever staged one of these home-town affairs, you ought to give it every consideration and try to put it over. Go after business and you'll have little reason to complain.

Hostler Fashioned Attractive Fronts For Two Pictures

It's always a pleasure to present examples of the artistry of Alvin Hostler, manager of the Warner Theatre, Altoona, Pa., and this time we have before us photographs of fronts he used on "Miracle Woman" and "Born to Love." The photo of the former is a bit too faint for good reproduction, so we will attempt a description of it and let you have a look at the other.

It's too bad we cannot show the front on "Miracle Woman" for it appears to be a very colorful affair. However, taking the other photo as a guide and starting underneath the striped effect, a streamer with a catchline reached across the entire front. At either end of the display was a large picture of Barbara Stanwyck which he painted himself. Between the pictures the star's name appeared in purple letters made of beaverboard, mounted on blocks with silver outline. The background was done in light green and roses were used to add more color to the display.

The front on "Born to Love" was made on the occasion of the theatre's 15th anniversary. Note the wall effect which was made of tex-tone, with various brilliant colors. Flowers were placed on the walls to give a more natural appearance and a large red drape was used to form a background for the star's name and title of picture. Palms and ferns were also placed along the bottom front of walls.

Another little advertising gag that he is using with marked success is a cardboard streamer for placement on bumpers of trucks and passenger cars. Clip strings were attached at either ends for tying to bumpers.

We may or may not have told you that Hostler paints, designs and erects these fronts himself, which, considering the general attractiveness, is all the more credit to this live-wire manager. We mention this because of the fact that there are so many theatre managers who have only to outline a plan and then have the house artist and other members of the staff carry out production orders. Keep going, Alvin, and don't forget your Club.

A Monthly Calendar Is Getting Results For R. V. McGinnis

A monthly calendar of attractions is being used with marked success by R. V. McGinnis, manager of the Dunlap Theatre, Clarksville, Ark.

It comes under the head of costless advertising for the reason that the whole card was gotten out by Mack himself, including a couple of hours necessary to sell the small ads that covered card and printing expense. On account of the theatre being closed on Sundays, he used those spaces for the ads, along with other portions.

The name of theatre runs across the top of card, with notice to hang card near 'phone or some convenient place. Ten telephone numbers are called daily and if the receivers can answer what picture is playing, free admission is granted.

Back used to be in the printing business before turning showman and that accounts for the well laid-out calendar. Unfortunately, the colors are such that neither one of the samples we have at hand will reproduce on these pages but we know he'll be glad to supply additional information to any Club member who will take time to send him a line. In the meantime, we'll hope to hear from him again.

Club Index for Month of September

Herewith we list the many items of exploitation, etc., which appeared on the Club pages during the month of September. By keeping this issue close at hand you can refer to it whenever necessary as a means of locating some particular form of show-selling. We hope our members and readers are finding this service useful. The Club would welcome suggestions to improve it.

Straw Earns Good Will Of City With Free Show For Kids

Everlasting gratitude from a party of youngsters and a lot of good will were gained by Charlie Straw, manager of the Capitol Theatre, Regina, Alberta, Canada, when he entertained 25 kiddies with a street car ride and free show.

The kids came from a district hard hit by drouth, hit so hard that street car rides and moving pictures had become luxuries of the past. On their arrival in the city they were taken in hand by the "Captain," the car was driven by "Mark" and they were treated to a sight-seeing trip en route to theatre where they were taken in hand by Charlie Straw. Representing the rest of the children, one of them wrote a letter of appreciation on return to the community. The Regina newspaper played it up with a two-column story of the event.

We are indebted to Pete Egan for sending in the above item concerning Charlie's activities and we hope to hear some more from him. The publicity attending this act of kindness and the local good will created by it certainly were way over and above the small amount of expense involved.

Mickey Mouse Club Is Important Factor With Charlie Alden

The population of Globe Ariz., where Charles J. Alden manages the Fox Martin Theatre, is 7,100 and his Mickey Mouse Club is an important contributor to town festivities if we are any judge of newspaper stories. It was formed only last December and now has a membership of 903 kiddies, ranging up to 13 years of age.

In addition to the staging of Mickey and Minnie Mouse revues, in which the best of local talent struts its stuff, an arrangement was made the past season for instructing members in free swimming lessons. A tie-up was made with the local newspaper to plug the stunt and as a result 173 youngsters, with the help of a competent swimming instructor, have been taught to swim. Children under 6 years of age are not eligible for lessons.

Another stunt pulled off during September was an intercity visit between the Mickey Mouse clubs of Phoenix and Globe. Phoenix is 100 miles away, but it was arranged to transport the entire revue company to this city where patrons warmly expressed their appreciation of the occasion.

And, incidentally, when Alden plays "Politics" it's all fixed to have the Mickey Mouse Brass Band lead the parade. So it all goes to show what can be done with a live organization of Mice. Get aboard this stunt if you have not already started a similar move in your town and cash in the same way that Charlie has. If you want any information as to organization, write your nearest exchange or the home office of one of the film companies sponsoring these clubs. There are several of them in existence at this writing.

RIALTO FRONT IN NEW YORK!

Here is the way the upper part of the N. Y. Rialto Theatre looked after they finished decorating it for Eddie Cantor and his "Palmy Days."

We have already showed you how the more dignified Rivoli, further up Times Square, dresses their attractions with large and impressive fronts, but here, at the Rialto, the circus stuff is played up as being more in line with the house.

Small room for doubt that the banjo-eyed comedian was the stellar attraction for this house. Possibly something here will give you an idea for your house when "Palmy Days" is due for your booking. The enlarged cut-out, for example, is not near as hard to duplicate as first impressions may go; a little ingenuity, plus compo board might even turn the trick and give your cash customers something to talk about.

John Creamer Used Street Ballyhoo To Sell Brown Picture

A street ballyhoo was the means of attracting a whole lot of attention to "Broadminded" when this picture was played by John W. Creamer, manager of the Fox Palace Theatre, Muscatine, Iowa.

As you will note in the photo two boys carried what appeared to be the headless body of a man on a stretcher, with extra large shoes sticking out from underneath the white covering. The stretcher was bannered, "He Laffed His Head Off" and a third boy brought up the rear with a large cut-out of Joe E. Brown's grinning countenance.

To inaugurate a change of starting time for matinees he finally decided to appeal directly to women with a series of teaser ads. The first one was headed, "Ladies! Watch For the Ideal Way to Spend Your Afternoons. (See Tomorrow's Paper)???" The second carried the same head and "???—What Would You Rather Do Between 1:45 and 3 P. M. Than Darn Socks? (See Tomorrow's Paper)???" Again the same head on the next ad and "Why Not Get the Habit of Coming Downtown Between 1:45 and 3 P. M.? The fourth one, headed the same, read "Where Are You Going Monday Afternoon Between 1:45 and 3 P. M. (See Tomorrow's Paper)?" The last teaser read, "Ladies, See the Palace Theatre Ad Tomorrow for Full Details About Coming Downtown Between 1:45 and 3 P. M. (It Will Save You Money.)" The final ad of the series was carried in 2 x 4 space and announced the new policy, also stating that all attending between 1:30 and 2 P. M. would be admitted for 10 cents.

We don't doubt for one moment that the stretcher stunt attracted a lot of attention and must admit that Creamer used a corking method of getting his matinee message over to the ladies.

The BLUEBOOK School

By F. H. RICHARDSON

BLUEBOOK SCHOOL QUESTION NO. 100.—What is the first requirement in stabilizing motor speed? By means of what device is a motor enabled to govern its own speed? Describe the action of the speed governing motor.

Answer to Question No. 94

Question No. 94 was: "(A) Name as many as you can of the various possible causes of fires in motion picture projection. (B) What may cause film to stop, pile up and get into the light beam? Name contributing causes for this kind of happening. (C) Tell us what damages are done by a too-heavy aperture tension, and how you may test to ascertain whether the tension is too heavy. Have you ever made such a test? (D) Name various causes for film buckling."

Due to the short time since publication of the question, the answers are still coming in, but I am unable to wait longer. With the three questions printed in one week the matter will soon straighten itself out, so you chaps stop kicking.

The following have, up to this time, sent correct answers: Lester Borst, Dorsey McAvoy—or I think it is Avoy. Be careful and sign your names very plainly. Herman B. Billings, John L. Georgely, Thomas Dantley, James Devoy, Leroy Bates, Peter Danielson, G. L. Doe, Bill Doe, Jack Billings, Pat O'Brien, N. D. Garling, Will H. Peck, Jack Billings, Andy Earle, Wm. D. Hotaling, Tom Kay and Larry Tipton.

In addition to these I must give the following credits on Question No. 92: Evans and Rau, A. L. Mark and Dan Burgess. Question No. 93: Evans and Rau, projectionist, Fahnestock theatre, Muncey, Pa., who failed to sign his name; Lester Borst, Andrew Nolan, Henry M. Hanson, Buskirk and Kroll and Henry Garling. All these made acceptable answers, but they all for some reason came too late for credit with the published answer.

There were several excellent answers to Question No. 94, but on the whole I believe that of Andrew Nolan is perhaps a bit better than the rest. He says:

"(A) Fires may be caused by (1) failure of automatic fire shutter to operate properly; (2) splice pulling in two between aperture and intermittent sprocket; (3) bits of film tearing loose and sticking in the aperture; (4) break in film between intermittent sprocket and lower sprocket, caused usually by loss of lower loop, and film piling up under fire shield until it forces it open and springs up into the light beam. This has of my own knowledge actually happened. There is also of course the possibility of fire if film scraps are left lying about, and a fire may even occur at the rewinder table or the film cabinets, but I do not believe these latter would come within the scope of the question. (B) This may be caused by a breakage between the lower sprocket and intermittent sprocket It may also be due to failure of the take up to function properly. One contributing cause would be an improperly adjusted idler roller which permitted or caused the film to climb the lower sprocket with a soundless projector, or the sprocket next below the intermittent with a sound projector.

(C) Too much aperture tension will or may either cause the intermittent sprocket to strain or crack the sprocket holes, or even to rip them out entirely. The proper aperture tension is that which will permit the film to begin over-shooting (picture climbing up on the screen) when the projector is run 10 revolutions of the crank shaft above the highest projection speed used, or, as things now are, at 100 feet of film per minute. Yes, I have my tension set that way on all three projectors.

(D) The only cause I know of for film buckling in projection is excessive heat, but I believe or understand that film may buckle because of improper treatment in the laboratories. I do not know just what the improper treatment is, but have been told it has something to do with the drying." (What about more aperture plate tracks.—Ed.)

Taken as a whole, I believe you will agree that Nolan has answered well. Some of you may wonder just what benefit there is in answering such questions as these. Well, men, agreeing that they have perhaps no large value except to the novice, still I hold they do have a certain value to experienced projectionists, in that they cause them to brush up on and think of these very practical, even if ordinary, routine matters. It always is well to brush up occasionally on all points of and concerning one's work. Almost every day I receive letters in which the projectionist writers make mention of the good they have derived and are deriving from this "School." Last week an exhibitor in Birmingham, Ala., wrote asking certain information concerning screens and said: "That Bluebook School of yours certainly is a very fine thing. My projectionist has learned more from studying those questions than from anything else, and it shows up in improved work, both on the screen and in sound."

PROJECTION EXTRAORDINARY

Many times lately while wandering down the Great White Way, New York, I have observed a brightly illuminated, queer looking object perched on the roof of a skyscraper at 41st and Broadway. It evidently was a huge stereopticon, for when the air was laden with humidity, smoke or dust, a light beam might be traced from it to a brilliantly illuminated advertisement on the side of one of the many great buildings in that territory.

Recently, this ray being particularly visible, your editor concluded it was time to investigate.

First having obtained permission, friend Daughter and I were whisked far upward by elevator, stepped out upon the roof into a brightly illuminated spot, peered cautiously over the low wall at Broadway and the Great White Way far beneath, rubbered at the freak stereo and shook hands with the projectionist, brother H. D. Shay, formerly of Pontiac, Mich., and member of Local Union No. 601, Benton Harbor, same state.

With him was Mrs. Shay, also a competent projectionist, and Miss Shay, age six, with whom your editor immediately fell in love.

The stereo is itself a skeleton affair of light steel, mounted upon a rubber-tired truck so that it may be moved about on the roof. It is so mounted that it may be swung so that the beam will point in any desired direction, including straight up. In fact, brother Shay informed me that under certain conditions of low-lying clouds he could and did project advertisements upon the clouds, where they were quite visible.

The light source is an H. I. arc consuming 150 amperes. It is backed by a concave reflecting mirror which directs the light upon a thin metal plate about 18 inches in diameter, in which the wording of the advertisement to be projected is perforated. Beyond this plate, 20 feet from the light source, is a single bi-convex projection lens 24 inches in diameter and 20 feet (feet, not inches) in focal length.

That is all there is to it, but it consumes about one dollar's worth of 16 mm. positive and 11 mm. negative carbons per hour. Current costs from $1.25 to $1.50 per hour.

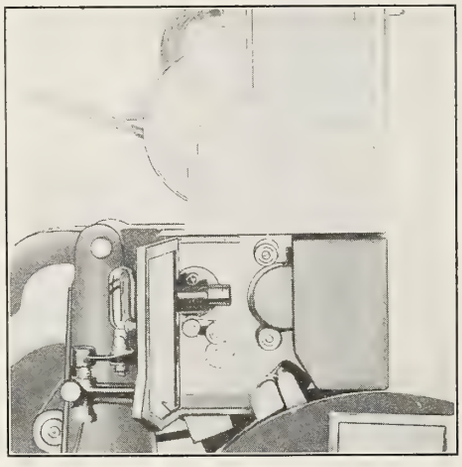
It is in operation every evening from dark until midnight or after. Rain does not stop operations. Fog is the only thing that puts it out of business. It gave one a sort of where-am-I feeling to stand beside the low wall and gaze out and far down into the darkness at those tens of thousands of twinkling lights and watch the thousands of tiny spots moving about on the walks. I've been in high places before—lots of them, but always in broad daylight. It is very different at night. If the projectionist ever fell over that wall—which the saints forbid—well, I'm afraid the poor man would be severely shaken up, though at that it's only about 40 floors down to Broadway, and we have 'em 102 stories high here now. I went up on one of the latter recently and had to come right back down. Shoulders started to itch. Wings sprouting! Believe it or not!

Books and Movements

From a city in Pennsylvania comes this letter: "Dear Mr. Richardson: Will you kindly forward information concerning your book on Sound Motion Pictures. I am a projectionist, working on R.C.A. type PG-10 equipment. Does your book explain RCA equipment in detail, particularly as to how to remove the optical system, clean it and put it back again?

"Our single bearing Simplex intermittent movement leaks a lot of oil. We had them fixed up, but they still leak and some of the oil gets on the sound optical system. Would double bearing movements put a stop to this?"

The third volume of the Blue Book of Projection, which is the one dealing with sound, gives considerable information concerning RCA equipment but not the kind this man seeks. The sound volume deals rather with fundamentals. R.C.A. equipment has undergone radical changes. It would be rather foolish to print detailed information such as this brother asks. On the other hand it would be rather foolish for this man to be without volume three of the Bluebook, and the other two volumes as well, because volume three deals with sound fundamentals. It tries to explain, and thousands of purchasers in this country say that it very thoroughly explains in very thoroughly understandable language, the fundamentals of sound reproduction and projection.



For example, once you have this book and study it carefully, you will understand exactly how and why a vacuum tube functions in sound reproduction or in the rectification of current. Once you have intelligently studied this book, while you may not be told how to dissemble and reassemble the equipment, you will know how that equipment functions and will therefore be able to handle it intelligently.

The instruction books by the various companies will tell you how to make out and put back those things which a Projectionist is able to take out and put back—and that is not every thing because some of the elements in the sound optical system must be adjusted by means of a microscope, which can only be done by an engineer equipped with proper knowledge and tools.

I shall communicate with R. C. A., asking them that you be supplied with proper instruction books, but I advise you to by all means send $10.20 to the Motion Picture Herald for the Blue book or, if you have the first two volumes, then get the third or sound volume, which is, I think, six dollars when purchased alone.

Projectionists are now receiving relatively good wages. It is up to them as a matter of plain duty to have such books as the Blue book which is standard literally all over the English speaking world. Many hundreds of Projectionists outside the United States and Canada have bought these books, and tens of thousands of Projectionists in the United States and Canada have them, and as yet not one purchaser has indicated dissatisfaction, whereas many hundreds have expressed thorough satisfaction. Incidentally, volume three has a "Trouble Shooter" section, which is well worth the entire price of the book.

As to the movement, I will have the International Projector Corporation communicate with you concerning your complaint. The double bearing movement has a very clever means provided for preventing oil leakage. I believe that the installation of this movement would either entirely remove your trouble, or very materially reduce it. I am not certain what, if any, guarantee the company makes in this respect.

Remarkable Tube

Dr. C. M. Slack, engineer in the research department of the Westinghouse Lamp Company, has been awarded the $500 prize offered by the company for any outstanding accomplishment in either the designing of a new product or in manufacturing methods.

Dr. Slack's accomplishment consists in the development of a bubble of glass having the almost unbelievable thinness of .0002, or two ten-thousandths of an inch.

It is a bit difficult to conceive of glass of such fragility, or to vision any possible use for it. However, this "sheet" actually is or is to be used as the "window" in what is known as the Lenard-ray tube. The sheet, or "bubble," is an integral part of the tube glass. This is accomplished by sucking in on the opposite end of the tube, after one end has been worked to a pre-established thickness, or at least that is your editor's understanding of the process.

Heretofore a window made from metal foil has been used in such tubes, but this new glass bubble is said to be a great improvement, even though it is so very delicate that the slightest touch will destroy it. The thin glass permits the passage of electrons at much lower voltage than was required to force them through the metal foil, the difference being as 70,000 to 30,000 volts.

I set this before you, friend reader, merely as illustrating the almost unbelievable delicacy and fineness to which it now is possible to carry manufacturing methods. Such tubes are of course no part of projection sound equipment, and probably never will be.

New Lens and Waist Level for Filmos

Two new accessories for Filmo 70 cameras will be marketed by Bell & Howell. One is a new Cooke 1-inch F. 3.5 focusing mount lens, and the other a waist level viewfinder.

The new lens is different from the former focusing mount lens in that the focusing and diaphragm dials project out sufficiently into the field of the finder to enable the user to observe his focusing graduations as well as the diaphragm graduations when looking through the finder tube.

Named to Resarch Staff

Dr. Andrew Christy has been appointed to the engineering research staff of G-M Laboratories, Inc., Chicago, manufacturers of the Visitron photoelectric cell.

MUSIC AND TALENT

LOEW ORGANISTS GIVEN BIG BILLING

Stage Shows Back at Seattle; Union Troubles Settled

With Fanchon & Marco stage shows back at the Fox Fifth Avenue theatre in Seattle and the differences with the musicians' union settled, Fox West Coast Theatres, Inc., has rearranged the first run setup in that locality.

The "long run" pictures, representing the pick of Fox, Paramount and Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer releases, henceforth will be seen at the Fox Paramount, managed by Tom Olsen, instead of at the Fox Fifth Avenue, as formerly. Prices of 25, 35, 50 and 75 cents will prevail, as before.

The Fox Fifth Avenue, with stage shows added and an orchestra of 25 men directed by Jules Buffano also featured, will run the "average" attractions for one week. A slight rise in admission prices brings matinees to 35 cents and evening prices to 60 cents, instead of 50 cents. Loges will be 75 cents as before. James Q. Clemmer will manage.

The Fox Coliseum, managed by Ernest Ludwig, remains a 35 cent house with two changes weekly, taking the weaker attractions from the major companies listed in the foregoing.

Forbes' Band Gives Novelty Overture at the Saenger

In a "general merchandise" setting, and in a stage version of farmer's costumes, Lou Forbes and his band at the New Orleans Saenger have an overture billed as "Down On the Farm."

The band enters through the audience, and does some trick stuff with saws, balloons and other unusual "instruments," which is really a relief from highbrow presentations.

Herbie and Louise play "What Next."

Stage Units at Indiana

Fanchon & Marco stage units will be presented at the Indiana in Indianapolis, Skouras-Publix house, beginning October 16. Difficulties with musicians are being settled, it is said.

Return of Vaudeville to Saenger Stage Awaited

It is possible that vaudeville in all its former glory will be seen and heard on the Saenger stage within a few weeks, when it is expected that the negotiations for a new scale between the Publix and Allied Stage Crafts will be signed.

DON MILLER

Recently this young chap concluded a successful five-year engagement with Kunsky Publix Metropolitan theatres in Detroit and this is a record to be proud of in that or any other city. Don created a large following in the Motor City through his original ideas in organ presentations.

His engagement for the coming season at the Punch & Judy Theatre, a semi-club theatre, privately owned, in the smart Grosse Pointe section of Detroit, is an achievement envied by many organists. Billed as Detroit's Genial Organ Maestro, Don will do both popular and classical arrangements as well as scrim ideas in his organ presentations.

Haines Appears at Capitol

Warner Artists Bureau Moves

The Warner Artists Bureau has moved to larger quarters in the east wing of the general offices. Walter Meyers is in charge of the department.

Orchestra Leader Dead

William V. Cappelli, former Denver theatre orchestra leader, died recently in Rapid City, S. D., following an operation. Burial was in Denver.

Bailey at Denver Organ

Bob Bailey of Omaha has been engaged to play the organ at the Denver Paramount.

Featuring Names in Ads, Marquees, Lobbies

Unit or Production Ideas Will Be Used With Community Singing in DeLuxe Houses

By ED DAWSON

Organists are coming into their own. The Loew circuit has adopted a policy to bill the orgainsts of the deluxe theatres in all advertising and to give them further recognition on the marquees and in the lobbies.

The organist is the only factor in the show that makes the members of the audience feel that they are an integral part of it, and by getting them to sing he helps to instill enthusiasm in the entire performance as well as interest in the stage show, said Louis K. Sidney, head of all production for Loew theatres.

Box Office Attraction

"In these days especially, the orgainst who can do things to make people happy and forget their cares, if only for ten minutes, is valuable to the theatre in which he works, and it has been proved that he is a box office attraction," Sidney said.

"Therefore we feel that by billing the organists in all our ads and giving them additional billing on the marquees and in the lobbies, we can add to their already great popularity and bring in more people."

Another direction of the new policy is the decision to introduce pretentious organ novelties in all the deluxe theatres of the circuit.

New Type Solo Launched

Starting this week at the Paradise theatre in New York City, Loew's is launching a new type of solo called "The Trial of Classic versus Jazz." It is a combination organ solo and overture. Con Maffie, the organist, plays the part of the prosecuting attorney, and Al Evans, the orchestra leader, is the judge. MacLaughlin, the house singer, is the prisoner and the house pianist is the policeman. The audience is the jury.

The solo is built around the idea of "stolen" melodies, popular songs that have their genesis in the classics of music.

This and other novelties are to be pushed in the deluxe houses of the circuit.

Roxy On Air From Berlin

S. L. Rothafel (Roxy), now touring Europe in connection with Radio City, will broadcast from Berlin to this country, Sunday, Oct. 11 on an NBC-WEAF network.

Arnheim in "Flying High"

Gus Arnheim, orchestra leader, has been signed by M-G-M to appear in "Flying High," musical film from the stage show, which Charles Riesner is directing.

STAGE SHOWS

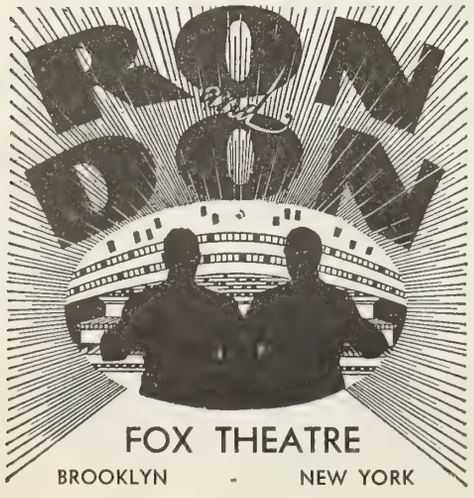
San Francisco Fox

Week ending October 7

The glitter of Parisian night life is presented in the Fanchon and Marco "Montmartre" Idea. There is real action, with numbers worthy of being headlined and stage settings by Leonidoff that add realism.

Walt Roesner and Fox Concert Orchestra present "Waltz Eternal," a medley of famous waltzes in which may be recognized such favorites as "The Blue Danube," "Merry Widow" and "Jolly Fellows." Joaquin Garay sings "Now That I Need You You're Gone," and as an encore offers "Clavilitos," in Spanish.

The stage show opens with a street scene in Paris and two flower girls, the Duval Sisters, offering their colorful wares to the passersby as James La Marr sings of the wonders of the city. The Belcher de Valery Girls make an unexpected appearance from two great flower baskets and dance, making use of colored balloons. James Marr sings again while pictures of Paris are thrown on a screen and Don Julian and Marjorie do a modern dance.



The scene changes to the Latin Quarter, with a street lined by cafes of many nations. The Belcher de Valery Girls, in the role of senoritas, stream out of the Spanish Cafe and do a dance as fiery as the tamales featured within.

The Duval Sisters represent the United States and offer steps in syncopated rhythm. Dolores, Eddy and Douglas prove real sensations of adagio, with Dolores thrown through the air and held aloft in the most precarious of positions.

David Robel, the Human Top, spins in approved Russian style, with the dancing troupe forming an effective background. Their odd costumes and use of comical masks make this part of the show especially interesting.

Joe Jackson, whose pantomime work is widely imitated, proves as clever as ever and holds the attention of his audience without speaking a word. His work with a bicycle which comes to pieces in a most unexpected manner is a masterpiece of comedy. He is co-starred in the show with the adagio trio and deserves the honor.

The act comes to an end with a merry-go-round scene and a real carrousel in action. The entire company appears on the stage, with the featured members going through tabloid versions of their specialties.

New York Broadway

Week ending October 9

The second edition of "Varieties," featuring Eddie Dowling, Ginger Rogers and Ray Dooley has met with as great approval with New Yorkers as the "First" and they are packing them in every show. The show opens, after an overture by 17 accomplished musicians, ably led by Eddie Kay, to a scene depicting "Times Square," in which William Longen, as a policeman sings "The Right of Way," as most of the cast walk back and forth through rain. Bill has a very fine voice and the audience, after each of his efforts, gives him a great hand. The 24 Albertina Rasch Girls, follow with a "jazz" routine which only half, apparently, know. Eddie Dowling as master of ceremonies, who works in nearly every bit of the show is just the type of performer who would be a great asset to this house if kept on for many weeks. Dowling is a typical New Yorker who speaks the language, like nearly all in the audience, he has a ready wit, tells the kind of stories this audience likes to hear and has that intimate appeal which would make him a popular favorite here. Eddie's first job in this show is that of introducing two real old time performers, two old men who have been well-known to Broadway many years ago and both of them still good performers and troupers. One of them, Harry Barker, 87 years of age, presents a routine of contortion dancing that many youngsters would be envious of. The other, Billy Swan, age 74, offers a routine of acrobatic dancing. Both of them stop the show cold and take many bows.

Andree and Sanger, adagioists, due to an accident to the girl member of their team, presented an impromptu burlesque adagio routine that had the house roaring.

After a flattering but true introduction by Eddie Dowling, Ginger Rogers appears and impersonates in song and talk, nearly every member of the cast of "Girl Crazy," in which she recently starred. She finishes up with a very good impersonation of Maurice Chevalier and Al Jolson, and received, what nearly amounted to an ovation. Miss Rogers has beauty, youth, appeal and showmanship, four things that will go a long way in making her a great star. Dowling is next seen in one of the boxes and while there tells stories to the audience until Miss Rogers appears, when he sings "Underneath the Moon," to her. After this number, he just about breaks up the show by kissing some of the girls in the next box. The next scene depicts the docks under the Brooklyn Bridge and in it, Bill Longen and Maxine Carson and Dowling and Ginger Rogers sing the aforementioned number as the Albertina Rasch girls do a better routined tap dance.

The Three Sailors then offer their inimitable routine of comedy dancing and hokum. The bit in which they form a human boat as the orchestra plays "Volga Boatman," got the most laughs, though nearly everything they did evoked plenty laughs. They got loads of applause and were entitled to take an encore but due to the lateness of show, didn't. Ray Dooley and her baby bit got plenty applause. Ray continues to have the audience with her. The next and last scene, that of a banquet hall has the entire company in evening attire, with Eddie Dowling impersonating Mayor Walker and making a radio speech and singing "Will You Love Me in December as You do in May," and then giving flattering attention to each of the acts on the bill, having them each do a bit. The shows closes after the Rasch girls do a modified rumba on top of tables. A thoroughly enjoyable show.

Milwaukee Wisconsin

Week ending October 1

As a prelude to Fanchon & Marco's "About Town" Idea, the Wisconsin theatre orchestra under the direction of Glen Welty offers "Yamerkraw," featuring a violin quintet in "Deep River."

The Idea opens with the chorus in varied costumes doing their stuff before a metropolitan setting, representing Seventh and Broadway in New York. The members are attired as chauffeurs and Ben Dova does several neat tricks while the chorus change costumes. His stunts are done in the role of an inebriated celebrator atop a lamp post. The chorus return in blue police uniforms with large white hands to complete the episode.

Max and His Gang entertain in a fetching manner. Max himself is very versatile and does acrobatic tap dancing, recovers his handkerchief from the floor by twisting himself into a question mark, turns any number of flips and spins hoops from his neck, arms and leg. His gang includes six smart dogs who perform in an intelligent manner.

The chorus come back attired in white dance frocks each with a dummy garbed in full dress attire. They whirl their mock partners about in fine style and pave the way for Paul Olsen, who performs with his dummy, Miss Clara Bow-Zo. Olsen gyrates his dummy partner in a manner which brings many laughs.

Ted and Al Waldman, blackfaced comedians, perform in a musical manner, the one playing a saw and the other a mouth organ. They offer among other numbers "Let Me Call You Sweetheart," "When It's Springtime in the Rockies," and the "Stein Song." They keep up a lively patter.

The chorus' next number is to "Just One More Time."

Joe Pasco, billed as the world's champion trick bag puncher, smacks plenty of leather. He finally is blindfolded and punches three bags, two with his hands and one with his feet, while in a lying posture. In the background we find the chorus, arranged in separate niches, each punching a yellow bag.

Radio Singer on Stage

Russ Columbo, heard regularly over an NBC network, has been signed by Radio-Keith-Orpheum for vaudeville at Brooklyn and Manhattan houses from October 10 to November 15.

ARLO HULTS

ORGANIST
RKO 86th Street Theatre
NEW YORK CITY

ORGAN SOLOS

JOHNNY WINTERS (New York Beacon), for his first week's solo at this house, certainly proved to the audiences that he could do full justice to the organ and also give them 10 minutes of entertainment. His presentation incorporated many beautiful combinations and was composed of but four numbers, a classic, an operatic, a ballad and a hot jazz number. Each number was played in a distinct fashion and in good taste. Winters first offered a spot-solo of "At Your Command," then orally introduced the numbers and offered an explanation of each. He followed this with the "Finale," from "Marche Slav"; "My Heart at Thy Sweet Voice," from "Samson and Delilah"; "Many Happy Returns of the Day," and closed with a "red hot" rendition of "Roll On, You Mississippi." In the last named number, Winters featured the melody with his left hand and many pleasing figurations with his right.

His efforts to entertain the audience met with fine approval and it is a foregone conclusion that this young man will continue to meet with favor.

EARL ABEL (San Antonio, Texas), offered an organ solo presentation which he called "A Literary In-digestion." After his usual spiel, he played "When the Moon Comes Over the Mountain," "When I Take My Sugar to Tea," a classy special to the tune of "Just a Gigolo," then a tongue twister on "Wrap Your Troubles in Dreams and Dream Your Troubles Away," and for his closing selection, "Whistling In the Dark," while the boys and girls each sang different parts of the song slides.

MILTON HERTH (Hammond Paramount) for the last half of "Aniversary Week" offered a presentation entitled "Organ Varieties." He opened with a slide telling of the anniversary and then had the audience sing "Happy Birthday." Then he went into the solo, explaining via slides the different types of songs to be played. Every possible variation of songs was presented and not only lustily sung but just as greatly applauded. The numbers were "Pardon Me Pretty Baby," "Moon Comes Over the Mountain," "Yuba Plays the Rumba," and "Little Girl," for the final singing number. One chorus of "Yuba" was played with clever orchestral effect. "Then You'll Remember Me," from the opera, "Bohemian Girl," was sung by a concealed singer. "Rhapsody in Blue," in its entirety, brought forth a tremendous hand. This personable chap is a good showman, an accomplished musician and an organist who has the entire audience with him from start to finish.

MAC BRIDWELL (San Antonio, Majestic), had as his solo a Radio Popularity Contest and the idea went over very good. Rudy Vallee was shown on the screen and Bridwell gave "Vagabond Lover" with the famous crooner singing along with the song slides. Next came a likeness of Morton Downey doing his well-liked "Say a Little Prayer For Me." Guy Lombardo's picture then appeared while this Canadian band leader vocalized his "Whistling in the Dark." Kate Smith came in for a strong finale and sang the popular hit of the day "When the Moon Comes Over The Mountain."

AL GULLICKSON (Milwaukee Warner), is a fair son of Norway, imported from that country by Warner Brothers, and the Milwaukee theatre is his first Warner charge. He sings in a capable manner and also offers for his selection, with the words flashed upon the screen, "Many Happy Returns of the Day," "When the Moon Comes Over the Mountain," and "The Stein Song." He represents the first permanent organists at the Warner since its opening and from early indications will click in fine style.

ESTHER LEAF (Omaha Paramount), has a medley solo conducted as a contest. Her audience is invited into a songfest, similar to the series Wesley Lord conducted from this same console last winter. Miss Leaf's program is a radio popularity contest. On the screen, in a colored scene, is a radio studio outdoor scene, two large masts prominent on the skyline. Worked into the picture also is a "mike," in a shadowy effect, but plain because of its size in the center of the screen.

Words in verse then are projected upon the screen to carry the thought of the organist, while she plays medleys and, in turn, finds her medley ending in a favorite by the microphone artist. She is playing "Now You're in My Arms" and the picture and name of Morton Downey appear. She plays "Under Your Window Tonight" and Guy Lombardo's picture is next on the screen. Then "Many Happy Returns of the Day" and Kate Smith is shown.

A little gag is worked at the end in which Miss Leaf announces that one voice seems to have predominated. Her voice amplifying mike, to which is attached a long extension cord, is sent by an usher into the auditorium, the usher to find this man and invite him to the console to sing. The man who is found then sings from his seat "I saw You Up in the Moon." He is the husband of the organist.

ADA RIVES (New Orleans, Loew's State), takes a crack at the Empress Eugenie craze with a solo that brings back the songs which went with the hats of the different styles in the past few years. First one is "Oh, You Beautiful," which the audience didn't sing with such gusto, but they woke up on "K-K-Katy" and showed enthusiasm on the slide which told what steps the negro lad promised to do with his girl friend at the "The Darktown Strutters Ball." Then, announced Miss Rives over the microphone, the admirer of an old maid saw her in an Empress Eugenie model, which made him sing "I'm Through With Love."

UP AND DOWN THE ALLEY

HELLO EVERYBODY!

Due to many requests, which this department has received in the past six months, for a section devoted exclusively to Musical Conductors and Overtures, I am happy to announce that starting next issue we will carry reports of Overtures and all other information regarding leaders and their bands . . . If You have any information that will be of interest to the readers of this section, please do not hesitate to send it in. . . .

William Haines, popular screen comedian, who has been packing them in at the Baltimore Century for the past week, is doing the same at the New York Capitol this week. . . .

Whispering Jack Smith, well-known radio and vaudeville artist, can now be heard over a twice a week program on station WABC . . . Jack has been off the air for the past two years, during this time he played all the important theatres in Europe and incidentally while in England he became quite a crony of The Prince of Wales. . . .

Here is a protest nobody can do anything about. . . . Riva Kaye of Santly Bros., says "Not all kings sit on thrones." . . . It happened this way. . . .

When she makes the rounds of organists-back-stage doormen get in her hair. . . . Talk about being important in your own home town! Even the high-falutinest organist is meek as a lamb besides a door-guardian with a mind of his own. . . .

Riva went to see a mighty big man one night and the doorman refused her admittance giving this 'n' that 'n' the other thing as excuse. . . . She tried her darndest to get in by telling the truth but when that failed she remembered words heard on a golf course and let him have it—ending up by saying "And besides all that, my dear man, I'm his wife—so what now?" . . . After the spiel, she never knew the real reason why he admitted her. . . . She thought she'd knocked him speechless. . . . She didn't, (and won't 'til now) know how speechless she had made him—because it happened that that particular doorman was that particular organist's father-in-law. . . .

Fred Kinsley and C. Sharpe Minor are the latest organists in these parts to get radio hook-ups. . . . Fred is now featuring a lot of high-class music from the Astor Hotel and Charlie is being featured over the Mennen's hour. . . . Both from Station WOR. . . . Adolph Goebel, who has just returned from his honeymoon in Europe, is awaiting a new assignment from Publix. . . . Jack Ward is now at the Fox Academy of Music, down on 14th street. . . . Stanley Wallace is at the Fox, Hackensack, N. J., . . . Harry Gabrial at the Marboro, Brooklyn. . . . Ron & Don, popular organists at the Fox, Brooklyn are always talking about their pal, "Frig" Dugan . . . He must be a great guy, I'd like to meet him some time. . . .

That's all there is, this week, S'long. . . .

Ed Dawson.

VOICE OF THE INDUSTRY

It's the Picture That Counts

I HAVE READ WITH MUCH INTEREST the letters to the press, written by various exhibitors, and although I have never contributed an article to a trade paper, I feel that your paper is doing the industry lots of good and trying to uphold it, what with your section devoted to the Managers Round Table Club, and so forth, and the other articles which both laud and criticize the industry.

The spirit moves me right now to have my say and I feel that I am going to express the same opinion that countless other small town exhibitors and managers will express (not to mention the larger towns).

First, let me tell you who I am, with whom I am connected, and so on. My name is Tom Harper. My age is twenty-seven. I have been in the motion picture business about fifteen years. My first experience was rewinding reels, then usher, musician, operator, etc., not to mention doing a little sign work on the side. As a matter of fact, I was a "jack of all trades," but at least good enough to follow this thing up from the nickel and dime days to where it is now.

At present I am connected with Lam Amusement Company of Rome, Ga. O. C. Lam, the president of the company, is also president of the Southeastern Theatre Owners Association. I will say without hesitation that Mr. Lam is, in my opinion, the best independent theatre operator in the South. Not because I work for him, for I would still say the same thing even if I got fired before this letter reached you. Mr. Lam has stood for lots of boners (for which a circuit would have given one the walking papers), all because he has faith in his employees and you know that makes the right kind of manager anxious to succeed. I am sorry to say that there is not very much success right now: first, because this is a "cotton boll" town and second because the picture entertainment is "just not there." In the place of progress, it is slipping back. Every exhibitor knows that to be a fact!

The talkies have killed this industry and I'll tell you why: They have put a lot of meaningless dialogue in the place of action.

The pictures no longer thrill an audience. You even see a scene—in a Western picture that would have thrilled you were it silent—with a mighty organ or orchestra playing a gallop with a drummer who knew his stuff cueing it in. Now you hear mechanical sound. The motion picture has lost its fascination! Where the flappers used to sit and enjoy a love scene while "I Love You Truly" was being played on the organ or piano—now they hear a bunch of husky voices—and the romance is all gone. They don't even comment on it.

It is true that talking pictures have given us Charlie Chase, Laurel and Hardy, and the Four Marx Brothers (I might also mention Ruth Chatterton). This combination has sold me on the talking pictures. Outside of these I can't say so much for them. These actors can make me forget silent pictures ever existed and if the others were just half as good the industry would be in better shape. They are all real artists.

Furthermore: I would like to know why Alice White is not featured more. There was my best drawing card in this town. The first talking picture I ever saw had Miss White in it and I hope to tell you it was good. Why First National ever let her out is more than I can ever understand. She was all that company had in the way of a "flapper type" and she made the other stars of that type with other companies look sick. That girl is a real asset to the motion picture business, if the producers had sense enough to figure it out and would put her in a decent starring vehicle. She has the goods that appeal to the average small town audience. I know that!

Lots of theatres are running double features now. They are only cutting their throats. I can't figure it a business booster to inflict two poor pictures on the public in place of one.

I am trying in my poor way to conduct the LaGrange Theatre as it should be conducted. It is a beautiful house, in fact the best sound theatre I know of in this state. That doesn't matter; it's the entertainment on that screen that counts and we are just not getting it. When better pictures are made, then the exhibitors will get the business.—W. T. HARPER, Manager, La Grange Theatre, La Grange, Ga.

Why?

HERE ARE TWO QUESTIONS THAT were put to me last night by a very prominent business man of my town. I think they are pretty important, not because of the fact that I am writing them or who asked them, but because, I believe, they reflect the thoughts of a great majority of our people on the movies of today. I would consider this gentleman not only very broadminded but a well traveled and well read man. He asked: "Why do the movie producers produce their pictures with the thought in their mind that the majority of people who attend shows are indecent people and have vulgar minds? And why do they stress smoking and drinking, especially drinking, in most of the pictures?

"It was the movies that did the most to kill the saloon by furnishing a place of amusement for the whole family, so that men could spend their evenings with their families rather than in the saloons. Now if they help to bring them back they will be bringing in competition that will hurt their business very much: The movies are supposed to be natural and lifelike. It is not lifelike or natural to see a young lady wandering around the house with a cigarette in one hand and a glass of whiskey in the oher. It's not American life at all."

Now for a few reports on what the picture did for me.

"The Smiling Lieutenant"—Not a great big special as Paramount ballyhooed it but a better-than-ordinary very light romance. Almost too light. Fine acting by Chevalier, Colbert and Hopkins and musical background helped. Direction just fair.

"Caught"—Louise Dresser plays the hard-boiled character of Calamity Jane wonderfully, and good acting by Arlen and Dee helps. Good action picture for Saturday.

"Thou Shalt Not"—2 reel comedy—Billy House gets many laughs in this comedy.

"Honor Among Lovers"—Claudette Colbert and Fredric March fine. Comedy work of Ruggles and Rogers cut too short. Direction weak. Picture pleased but did not draw.

"I Take This Woman"—One of the best. Gary Cooper and Carole Lombard had great parts and put them over. Just fair for Saturday—not much action. Drew good and pleased.

"The Royal Family of Broadway"—A dud for small towns. Looks like a lot of lunatics running loose. Swell cast and acting ruined by silly story and dialogue. Ina Claire not much.

"An American Tragedy"—Naturally some smart producer would hire a Russian director to direct this great American story, and he messed it up plenty. Acting of Sylvia Sydney, Frances Dee and Phillip Holmes good. Should have been a great picture but is just a gripping drama with a big courtroom scene putting it over. Irving Pitchel as the prosecutor was great.

"Up Pops the Devil"—The Society Against Prohibition should pay exhibitors for running this. It is just one round of drinking after another, with Skeets Gallagher and Stew Erwin running around soused through it all. Carole Lombard very good but Foster not much. Not much to it.

"Near Trail's End"—Bob Steele puts plenty of action in this Western. Too short—only 61 minutes. Needs more comedy and could use more of Steele's singing—he sings good. Very good for Saturday.

"The Dog Doctor"—2-reel comedy—Just like most of Educational's comedies. It is full of laughs. Andy Clyde great.

"Kick In"—Surprised me by drawing very good. They liked Clara Bow in a dramatic part very much. Regis Toomey scored in his part. Not quite a gangster picture.

"Scandal Sheet"—Can you imagine a George Bancroft picture without any fight or action to it? All talk-talk-talk with plenty of chances for action. Wasted fine acting of Bancroft, Kay Francis and Clive Book in this. Not much good.

"Confessions of a Co-Ed"—Not for the children. Well directed and pleased pretty good crowd. Sylvia Sydney and Phillip Holmes and Norman Foster all good. Very good.—L. L. LEVY, Iris Theatre, Kerens, Texas.

DEAR HERALD:

Tomorrow we are going to try to negotiate the Yellowstone National Park unless snow sets in tonight, which it looks now like it might do. The Park was closed to tourists officially on the 20th, but people are still going through.

Jumping from 100 in the shade to where the mountains are all covered with snow is no small jump, if you ask us, and jumping from B.V.D.'s to heavy underwear and an overcoat is not such a small jump, either. If we are unable to get through the Park it means we will have to backtrack 320 miles over the road we just came, and that won't be so nice, either, especially since there are only five or six towns of any size on the road. This is a long country, out here and it is just as wide as it is long. We presume there were good reasons for making this country, but the evidence doesn't show up along the highways.

We can see one good reason for making the Yellowstone Park, it ought to keep a lot of people from going across the water and spending a lot of dough to see the Alps, for the Alps hasn't a thing on the Yellowstone Park.

September 25

It's backtrack for us. The Sylvian Pass in the Park is reported to be covered with snow, and that pass is a steep climb up the mountain of nine miles, and climbing mountains in a snow where traction is uncertain doesn't appeal to one who is familiar with this kind of travel.

"Spelling" the Opposition

We met two very delightful people here in Cody, Mr. and Mrs. J. W. Corder, who operate the Cody theatre. Mr. Corder has been operating this theatre for 15 years and during that time he has had opposition nine different times and nine different times his opposition has had to close, which indicates one of two things, or both: that Cody is too small for two theatres and that Mr. and Mrs. Corder are very popular with the Cody people. Our guess is that both reasons would be correct, especially the Corders.

The Cody is well equipped with sound, and, judging from the bookings of the pictures for this theatre, the Cody people are enjoying pictures well in advance of most towns of this size, especially where they measure distances from the exchange in hundreds of miles, and it is 580 miles as the crow flies from here to Denver, where Mr. Corder gets his service.

Cody is what might be termed a "cow town," that is, stock ranching is the principal industry. It is also a tourist town during the tourist season. People going to and from the Park usually make Cody a stopping place, and this adds no small amount of revenue to the town. Mr. Corder says he is feeling the effect of the depression from this source of revenue, as the tourist business to the Park has fallen off to a marked degree. Last night he was playing "The Smiling Lieutenant" and had fairly good business for the second night showing and the picture gave very good satisfaction. We were glad to meet these two delightful people.

A Surprise Theatre

If you want to meet up with a surprise, stop at Basin and examine the Wigwam theatre, operated by Mr. R. G. Keckler. Mr. Keckler has installed RCA sound equipment and has as complete equipment as can be found in any of the de luxe houses; in fact, we have never seen any better.

Basin is a county seat town of something like 1,800 people and is located in the potato and sugar beet section, and this section, being under irrigation, practically assures a crop every season.

In addition to perfect sound installation, the Wigwam is finely decorated, has upholstered seats, Brussels carpets in the aisles, retiring rooms and a well furnished cry room for fretful children.

Mr. Keckler impressed us as being one of Wyoming's up-to-date showmen, as he books his pictures as near as possible to release date and he sees to it by his advertising that everybody within driving distance of Basin is fully advised of the time and place where they will be shown.

We doubt if there is another theatre between the Rockies and the Missouri in any town of the size of Basin that is equipped to give its patrons better service than the Wigwam, and we doubt if a more congenial manager can be found than Mr. Keckler.

Business Improving

We didn't get to see Mrs. McKay, who operates the theatre at Graybull. Graybull is the shipping point for the Grass Creek oil fields. She has a large refinery and employs considerable labor. She is also in the sugar beet section and considerable revenue is derived from this source, which no doubt makes Graybull a town of considerable importance.

Worland has three sources of revenue to draw from. Sugar beets, a sugar refinery and muskmelons. The muskmelon season has just passed and the beet harvest is just commencing and will continue for several weeks, which makes Worland one of the live spots in the Bighorn basin.

Mr. Kirby, who operates the Elk theatre, says business is beginning to show improvement, although he thinks there is a lot of room for it. He has a well equipped theatre and there would seem to be no particular reason for Worland people to seek entertainment elsewhere.

Hot Springs and Coal Mines

Roy Katzenback of the Whiting theatre at Thermopolis has redecorated his theatre throughout and has installed a complete Western Electric sound equipment. Besides the townspeople, Thermopolis has two sources of revenue. It has the famous hot springs that draw many tourists during the summer season, and the Crosby and Gebo coal mines, located near Kirby, a distance of about 12 miles. These mines employ several hundred men and they furnish no small part of the patronage at the Whiting.

We had the pleasure of witnessing at the Whiting M-G-M's "Sporting Blood" with Clark Gable, Ernest Torrence, Madge Evans and Lew Cody, a picture well played, well directed and well received by the Whiting audience.

At Casper recently Mr. Schulte screened for us "The Star Witness," a Warner Brothers picture with Chick Sale doing the funny stuff. This is a semi-gangster picture that is different from most pictures of this type, as it brings in considerable comedy which eases up on one's nerves considerably. And Chick can, and does, do it in this picture to perfection. Even though you have a bad attack of the blues, we will recommend Chick as a sure cure every time.

Those of you who are acquainted with our angelic disposition will be surprised to know that our temper has got the best of us and is running rampant with nothing in sight to check it. Here we've got to travel several hundred miles back over a road we have just covered in order to get over the mountains into Idaho, and where the scenery consists mainly of rocks and sagebrush and miles upon miles of road that seems to have no end. Gosh all fishhooks, why didn't we start voting the Democratic ticket sooner? They talk about it being a "Long, long way to Tipperary," but it's got nothing on this road. And here we are so far from New York that it's dollars to doughnuts that this won't get there in time for publication notwithstanding it goes by air mail. HELP, HELP! Send the wrecker.

THE RELEASE CHART

Productions are listed according to the names of distributors in order that the exhibitor may have a short-cut toward such information as he may need, as well as information on pictures that are coming. Features which are finished or are in work, but to which release dates have not been assigned, are listed in "Coming Attractions." Running times are those supplied by the distributors. Where they vary, the change is probably due to local censorship deletions. Dates are 1930, unless otherwise specified.

LOOK FOR BETTER PICTURES

NOT since sound first burst upon the eager ear of the movie fan have there been changes and improvements so important to the industry as those wrought by Eastman's introduction of ultra-speed negative film. They begin on the lot, and they carry through to the screen. Because of them you can look for better pictures for your audiences. And that is an augury of better business for you. Eastman Kodak Company, Rochester, New York. (J. E. Brulatour, Inc., Distributors, New York, Chicago, Hollywood.)

YOU remember Warner Baxter as the "Kid"—O. Henry's famous character—in that big success, "In Old Arizona." Meet him again, in a new adventure, romance with a pile-driver punch. And Edmund Lowe as Sergeant Mickey Dunn—good lover, good soldier—he admits it. It's swell—vigorous, heart-stirring.

The Public Wants Outdoor Pictures

"Increased use of exteriors in forthcoming productions is on the slate as a result of the public demand for more action and less unnecessary dialogue, inquiries by the Film Daily reveals...with the back-to-nature policy looming more prominently as a result." —Film Daily

MOTION PICTURE HERALD

Vol. 105, No. 3 — October 17, 1931

The Truth in Drama

FROM here and yonder every now and then we hear carping voices in this industry saying that adherence to historical fact and other verities in the background of dramatic production in the motion picture have no significance. Nothing matters except that the picture should be entertainment, says a familiar, even if unauthoritative voice.

That, with all too painful obviousness, expresses an attitude of this industry inherited from the illiterate days of long ago when the master producers were mechanics who had become cameramen by sheer propinquity and the impresarios of the era had not yet moved far from the nickelodeon.

It ought not to be necessary, but it is, to remark that the motion picture in succeeding to dominance among the arts of expression has also fallen heir to its full share of the responsibilities of civilization, or what we hope is a civilization, builded most considerably upon education and, in some good faith, upon tradition.

Perhaps it is true enough that only a minority can be outraged by such liberties as the screen may take with historicity and fact, but it chances that the minority so affected is made up of the leaders of thought, scholarship and literary expression. The motion picture must keep the faith of the other arts if it is to hold its self-esteem, or if it does not mind self-esteem, then the respect of the respectable in the world of intelligence.

It is hard to decide who are the most dangerous foes of the screen's wellbeing; those who are indifferent to its responsibilities to the truth or those who deliberately seek a distortion of the truth for special causes. Within the month we have had the painful picture of the motion picture committee of the Daughters of the American Revolution withholding their approval of the production, "Alexander Hamilton" because it appears that the picture tends to suggest to some minds that this popular idol "had clay feet." It would, surely enough, have been decidedly untrue to history if Mr. Hamilton had been painted the lily white of a copybook character. And quite apart from that, some of us have had a private opinion that Mr. Aaron Burr may have had his provocations beyond the accepted tradition.

Vast harm has been done to the real George Washington by the whitewashers and fabricators of the Parson Weems school, for which, praise be, the motion picture has no share of responsibility. But let us encourage the motion picture to be as responsible in its narrations as the best of the printed word. It has been ably demonstrated by Mr. Lytton Strachey, Mr. Emil Ludwig and other able persons that history does not have to be violently dealt with in the writing of a good story. The motion picture can be quite as capable. It has a definite obligation to be as responsible as the author if it is to be respected. It needs respect, a very great deal.

The "Still" Photographer

FOR some two months MOTION PICTURE HERALD has been surveying motion picture stills from contemporary production for the purposes of its "still of the month" page, the second of which appeared in last week's issue. The chief finding to date is that apparently no one in Hollywood loves a still photographer and that the industry knows no more about the importance of the still as an instrument of interpretation and exploitation than it did in 1914. About 1 percent of the submitted and surveyed material is worth a glance from an art editor, out of the hundreds, possibly thousands of stills made. Inquiry appears to indicate that the still photographer is even yet today considered an inavoidable nuisance on the lot. Hollywood has many able still cameramen, as their occasional work shows. They could serve the industry if permitted.

All About the Screen

FOR the service of organizations and individuals interested in the institution of the screen, "A Motion Picture Study Program" has been compiled at the offices of Alice Ames Winter of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, in Hollywood. It is a tremendously interesting and comprehensive array of material collected from a wide range of original and authoritative sources. It occupies the impressive space of some 104 mimeographed pages, effectively subdivided by topics and made readily available to seekers after specialized information.

Mrs. Winter and her collaborator, Alice Evans Field, have done the industry a considerable service in this compilation. It supplies all of the information necessary for anything from a high school essay to a Commercial Club speech, or even a doctorial thesis.

A reading of the material presented is well calculated not only to convey a vast deal of compressed fact but also a wholesome respect for the motion picture as a medium, an art and an industry.

A Break for Authors

THERE is an intelligent broadening of the motion picture viewpoint involved in the announcement from Hollywood that Mr. Winfield Sheehan has announced a policy of publicity of which "the object will be to identify writers in the minds of theatre goers by the quality of their work." It is about time that the art of the motion picture should be aware of creative contributors outside the set. Also ever since we observed the credit title on "The Ten Commandments by Jeanie Macpherson" we have felt something ought to be done about original authors.

TWO SAGES CONSIDER OUR ART & AMERICA

Two of the most distinguished men of American literature, Mr. Hamlin Garland and Mr. Irving Bacheller, within the week have given voice to a critical evaluation of current expression in literature and the related arts, including the motion picture. Their observations are laden with significance to the motion picture industry, and more especially to those relatively few and powerful persons who can be held responsible for the trend or trends of production, responsible either in terms of their acquiescence to the works of subordinates, or responsible in terms of their direct administrative acts.

Both Mr. Garland and Mr. Bacheller have rounded their three-score-and-ten, both are vigorous, creative, active and virile, even though mellowed by long experience and much, much observation of that strange thing which younger writers have been for some years calling "the American scene." Mr. Garland has been honored with the Pulitzer prize and is a member of the American Academy of Arts and Letters. He was born in Wisconsin and is intensely of what we mean by "America." Mr. Bacheller, a son of upper New York state, and of Mayflower stock. He was connected variously with the press of New York City for years and was once an editor of the New York World. His published works make up a long shelf of attainment from "The Master of Silence" in 1890 to "The House of the Three Ganders" of 1929.

Neither of these temperately spoken gentlemen violently deplores, and it perhaps should be said, speaking to this mercurial, hurried industry, that these writers have an attentive audience to which they do not find it necessary to scream to be heard. They state a case, not for a limited and literary audience, but for the United States of America and its better traditions, in which our art and industry of the motion picture can be educated.—TERRY RAMSAYE.

MR. HAMLIN GARLAND in his recent book of reminiscences, "Companions of the Trail," characterizes the books of recent years as "ephemeral," and makes observations about New York which mean Broadway. He says:

"The world of literature today is in the midst of an almost universal era of cynicism, obscenity, and destructive criticism . . . Writers of a certain type have glorified the female libertine and as panderers they have prospered, for the publishers of books and magazines have welcomed them, shifting the blame to the public with the excuse that the public wants that sort of thing.

"Something has gone out of American literature society . . . It is not merely that our writers are less cultured; they occupy a totally different attitude toward authorship . . .

"Another and still more disturbing change is in process. New York is becoming each year more European, more antagonistic to what certain of its writers call New England Puritanism. Month by month these critics, contemptuous of 'the American tradition', join in celebrating the novelists and dramatists who sound the sexual note most insistently. A claque for the pornographic has developed. It is becoming fashionable to sneer at marriage, chastity, home life and the Church, and to bring into the dining room the phrases and jokes of the roadhouse. Certain socalled philosophers openly advocate the morals of the barnyard in their essays on freedom and their attacks on 'the puritanical ideal'.

"Others, however, have achieved a success by the cheap and easy device of putting into print the stories and phrases of the saloon and the brothel.

"This is the most disturbing phase of the whole situation. Young writers, perceiving that the pornographic experts are the highest paid men and women in the field of authorship, are led to write their confessions and voice their defiances.

"Happily a reaction appears to have set in. Some of the most remarkable successes of the 1930 season were achieved by books and plays of imagination and idealistic quality. In the midst of the public which enriches the panderer and the bootlegger, another and vaster public exists, one which rewards the fine novelist and the decent dramatist."

"There is one leader of incalculable influence. It is the movie show.

"This is the greatest power for good or ill the world knows and in part it is good. It has over-emphasized and exalted sex and violence as a power in human affairs—now and then with shocking indecency. Seldom in my knowledge has it done justice to the agencies for the improvement of the human spirit. Whatever may be said of the church and the synagogue—and I am well aware of their imperfections—they seek to make men better citizens, with a deep respect for human rights. They fail in their purpose now and then, but rarely. When they fail the case is extremely advertised.

"Why should this great agency for good be neglected by the stage? Is rectitude uninteresting? The great problems and adventures of the human spirit, in conflict with the power of evil, are tremendously of interest. When an artist of deep insight deals with this theme, no theatre can hold the crowds that want to see his play.

The craftsmen of Hollywood would do well to turn from swift and violent adventure to the slowly going things in which sex is not both the driver and the team, but is the dog under the wagon—a big, powerful, likeable dog, if you please.

"The conditions of which I complain are, in part, due to rich, idle and often much-married men and women who set the fashions in dress, manners, and even in morality. They soothe themselves in wallows of vice where the code of Moses is violated and ridiculed. Many of them despise America, while they have tattened on the prosperity it has enabled them to enjoy . . ."

FOX OPENS THE EDUCATIONAL FIELD AS A LICENSEE OF RCA PHOTOPHONE

THE GREAT GOD BUNK

by MARTIN QUIGLEY

Despite all of the attention which has been lavished upon Hollywood this bizarre institution continues virtually as it has been since the days when the original producers, with their own or personally borrowed money, went out and so conducted the business of production as to enable them —not as the exception but as the rule—to make a profit for themselves, their distributors and their exhibitors.

Those were the days before the enthronement of the great god Bunk.

Those were the days before a salary equal to that of the President of the United States was considered a reflection upon the social standing of a person in Hollywood who, in the majority of cases, in any other business under the sun, would be considered well-paid if his salary kept him in the necessities of life.

Those were the days before the cult of vanity, self-seeking, double-dealing and an enormous appetite for money grew up as a devastating fungus upon production.

It is only natural that there have been certain marked revolts on the part of the public against Hollywood's efforts to make the world look at life as Hollywood does. But it seems hardly natural that Hollywood should remain oblivious to these revolts and continue to explain them, to its own satisfaction, with arguments which give a new significance to the art of the alibi.

Exhibitors are being continually called upon to hang out in front of their theatres billing which virtually amounts to carrying the legend, "Smallpox," yet Hollywood either in its supreme indifference or in its supreme ignorance does not seem to realize that large numbers of the public who have been and would continue to be regular patrons are shunning the theatres.

It is not reasonable, in advance of the radical clean-up which must come, to expect much from this institution called "Hollywood". But it is difficult indeed to understand why the stern hand of authority has not been laid upon that institution by the principally responsible executives in New York.

The day of righting or reckoning cannot, conceivably, be far off.

A Father Writes

By interesting coincidence, the same morning that Mr. Quigley was moved to the expression presented above, MOTION PICTURE HERALD's clipping service brought the following item, published first in The Christian Century, of Chicago, an undenominational Protestant publication, and reprinted in The New World of Chicago, the official paper of that Catholic archdiocese. It is clear that there is a basic relation of provocation between the utterances of the editor-in-chief of QUIGLEY PUBLICATIONS and that pensive father in Chicago, seeking entertainment for a certain small young person. His letter to The Christian Century says:

"It is a hot Saturday morning in September. A temporary widower, responsible for the amusement of a small young person whose mother is away on business of her own, wonders how the afternoon is to be spent. At this moment the s. y. p. is busily writing at the next desk, and occasionally she rests from her labors long enough to take a few round trip rides in the elevator. But this, as a means of passing a motherless day, will presently pall. Then what to do? How about the movies? It's cool inside, and here are all the attractions of Chicago's Loop within

Clarke Sets Precedent in Non-Theatrical Move

Dual License Permits Recording and Distributing Films at Saving of $400 Per Negative Reel

By JAMES P. CUNNINGHAM

Harley L. Clarke, president of the Fox corporations and of General Theatres Equipment, this week established a precedent in the motion picture industry when he arranged to contract with RCA Photophone for an RCA license to record sound pictures for use in the non-theatrical market. Fox thereby becomes the first company to hold a dual recording license under both Western Electric and RCA sound patents and with the new agreement is given the right to record and distribute films in the educational non-theatrical field at a saving of $400 per negative reel.

Electrical Research demands a royalty of $500 per negative reel for non-theatrical showing. A Photophone license requires payment of $100 a reel.

First Serious Move

This step by the Fox interests, which may possibly be followed by Warner Brothers, may be accepted as the industry's first serious move to develop the non-theatrical field to the important point which leading educational and motion picture authorities believe eventually will be reached by scientific-religious-educational films.

All licenses granted by Western Electric and RCA to producer-distributors permit only of regular theatrical showings. The use of theatrical subjects, or of non-theatrical films in the non-theatrical market, or of the production of any sound reel for exclusive non-theatrical screening, requires a second royalty payment in addition to that made for subjects released to theatres. Erpi's royalty of $500 per reel for each negative is identical with royalties asked of distributors on regular theatrical subjects.

Huge Sums Necessary

Inasmuch as the non-theatrical market has never reached the economic proportions of the industry's theatrical outlet and because its future possibilities require many months of pioneering and the expenditure of huge sums before passing the embryonic stage, picture company executives are said to disapprove of the Erpi $500 royalty for non-theatrical reels, declaring it to be excessive. However, no effort was made to negotiate a proportionately lower fee on a lengthy license or contractual basis until recently, when urged by the growing nationwide interest in the new market, leading producers

BRITISH CIRCUITS REFUSE TO PAY MORE FOR PICTURES OUT OF U. S.

Rental Values Decrease As Exchange Drops

Ultimatum Declared by Mark Ostrer Before Gaumont Stockholders—Quota Rise to 10 Per Cent

By WM. H. MOORING, London

An ultimatum against American renting houses in regard to rentals was declared by Mark Ostrer at the annual meeting of Gaumont-British stockholders. Ostrer said that notwithstanding the adverse effect which the fall of the pound sterling has had upon American importers, the premier British circuit will not pay more for American films. This means that there will be strong resistance to any attempt on the part of American distributors operating in this country to pass on to their exhibitor customers the difference created by exchange fluctuations. For there is no doubt whatever that the power of the British circuits controlled by Gaumont is not confined to its own internal range of bargaining, but exercises a very real influence upon all British theatre owners.

Agitation Among Independents

Among independent theatres there is already a good deal of agitation against what were described as "advantageous booking conditions," accorded to the Gaumont circuits.

Associated-British, the second largest British group, also is able to insist on better terms than the smaller exhibitors can command, but the persistent objection thus engendered among the smaller men is sufficiently strong to minimize the margin of difference. The circuits really in effect do not get much better terms than the rest.

Predominant in this issue, and of paramount importance to U. S. A. film companies, is the fact that the British quota this week rises to 10 per cent for the ensuing year. The British output is already adequate to meet this increase, with plenty to spare to allow a good margin for individual bargaining on the part of exhibitors.

Gaumont-British controls a good pick of the best British output, with British International—owning the Associated British circuit—holding the second biggest bunch. That leaves the insignificant output of a few small British producers, plus the new British films now being made by Paramount, Radio and Universal on this side.

In Stronger Position

Clearly the British exhibitor is in a very much stronger position to obtain enough British films to more than meet his quota. And beyond doubt there is definite upgrade in the quality of this output.

At the present time, smaller exhibitors have only one real complaint against the British producer: it is that he considers that the native product, by reason of its indispensability through law, starts off automatically at a higher value than comparable output of foreign origin. This situation eases, however, as the number of available British features increases.

Meantime the operation of exchange is affecting very seriously all the distributors operating on foreign outputs on this side.

Although, strictly, an advance in terms is due to meet the fall in money values, economic pressure bears in the other direction, not only preventing American distributors from recovering, but actually forcing them to offer lower terms.

Offered Reduced Figures

In many instances independent exhibitors who have held out against 33 per cent sharing terms have been offered much reduced figures. In greater London and in the country territories this has sometimes amounted to a drop of from 33-1/3 percent to 20 per cent on terms ultimately fixed. Appreciating the double advantages of higher quota and favorable exchange movements, British distributors are all going out for sales; their publicity allocations are increased, and they are "entertaining" the exhibitors on a scale which hitherto has been a feature of business conduct with U. S. A. concerns only.

Added to their growing confidence in the home market is the fact that export of British films will inevitably be stimulated by the fall in the pound sterling.

There is little doubt that the growing power of the major British theatre circuits, added to the newly found prosperity of their production and distribution affiliates, leaves the American concerns more than ever at the door of the independent exhibitor, who is already their mainstay. And the British combines are there too with a competition more severe than they could have dreamed of a few months ago.

A Real Victory!

Advices to Universal's New York home office from its agents in Mexico City, indicate that the Universal Newsreel, through Cameraman C. Ehlers, has succeeded in relieving a Mexican censorship situation which was acting against all newsreels. Several weeks ago, the government decided on reel censorship requiring every cameraman to be accompanied by a government officer, who would pass on the suitability of any picture the cameraman desired to take, and also censor all reels leaving the country. Ehlers gained an audience with government officials and convinced them that the action would be detrimental to newsreels, and that they were merely banning information which was completely covered by cable to all newspapers in the United States. As a result, all censorship of newsreels has been abandoned in Mexico.

A FATHER WRITES

walking distance. That's it—we will go to the movies. Well, where shall we go? Let's look in the paper. How about the Palace? 'High Stakes—blazing excitement as New York playboy out-tricks pretty chiseler'. Hmmm; evidently not the Palace. State-Lake? 'Waterloo Bridge—adults only'. Woods? 'Pagan Lady—sexy, speedy, melodramatic'. Castle? 'The White Devil, with Lil Dagover'. Chicago? 'Constance Bennett in Bought'. Oriental? 'The Spider—thrills, chills and laughs'. Well, this young person thrills and chills easily enough without any movie assistance. Roosevelt? 'This Modern Age—adults only'. United Artists? 'Street Scene—the prize play'. We might try one of those, and trust to luck that the s. y. p. won't understand it. . . . Yet the picture barons wonder why attendance is falling!"

Momand Denied Further Injunction Hearings

Judge Hal Johnson in district court at Shawnee, Oklahoma, refused to grant further hearings on the injunction petition of A. B. Momand, Shawnee exhibitor, who charges a "monopoly" against Griffiths Brothers Amusement Co. and various national distributors. Judge Johnson ruled that the case must now be tried on its merits.

Attorneys for Momand are now planning to come to New York to take depositions in the action which goes to trial next month. Momand's separate suit for $2,500,000 damages alleging restraint of trade on the part of the Griffiths Amusement Co. and distributors is scheduled to be heard sometime in December.

Delehanty in Europe Plans RKO Pathe Export Branches

T. S. Delehanty, vice president and general manager of RKO Pathe Export Corporation, is in London concluding arrangements for setting up branch offices and selling agencies for P. D. C., Ltd., in Europe.

When Delehanty was in England, last July for the same purpose, it was announced that offices would be established in Paris, Brussels, Berlin, Warsaw, Barcelona and other continental key centers.

PUBLIC WANTS TO THINK: RAY LONG

Letting Sales Executives Help Decide Production Schedule Is Mistake, Says Editor-Publisher

The American public today prefers a thought in its entertainment to the "kick" it asked for over a period of several years past. In both its reading matter and its theatre, that public is showing its preference for mental rather than emotional entertainment.

Briefly summarized, these are the opinions on the trend of popular tastes held by Ray Long, prominent editor and publisher, and given to Motion Picture Herald in an exclusive interview. Long, who began a brilliant and successful career as an Ohio newspaperman, recently resigned the editorship of Cosmopolitan Magazine and the presidency of Hearst International Publications, to become chairman of the board of the publishing firm of Ray Long & Richard R. Smith, Inc., of New York. He first gained national prominence in publishing circles as editor of Hampton's Magazine and, later, of Red Book and associated magazines.

Opinions Based on Experience

His opinions on the fiction requirements of the American public, particularly that popular type of fiction which so greatly influences motion picture production, are regarded as being authoritative because of his wide and successful experience.

"Public taste," said Long, "is now more thoughtful and leisurely than it has been in years. It is becoming distinctly mental, rather than emotional, in character. It is also broader in perception than heretofore, with less interest being evinced in the problems and adventures of only two characters —hero and heroine—and more in entire cross-sections of human life."

He cited such literature as Vicki Baum's "Grand Hotel" to illustrate the awakening public interest in the adventures of numbers of characters rather than those of a few principal ones.

Violence Alone Not Intriguing

Sensationalism and violence, and sex, too, when handled without delicacy, are themes which no longer intrigue the American public, according to Long; whereas studies of human life, particularly historical and biographical material possessing dramatic values, are increasing in popularity from month to month, in the editor's opinion.

"What about the demand for mystery stories?" he was asked.

The dapper editor, a symphony in brown from shoes to cravat, looked out from the depths of his ornate, high-backed office chair, the hugeness of which almost dwarfed him.

"There is still a demand for good mystery stories," he said. "Producers have done a good job, for the most part, on mysteries. The Van Dine stories, in particular, were well handled. Sound, of course, has contributed vitally to mystery productions."

RAY LONG

Humor is also welcome to the public, Long said, adding that the demand usually exceeds by far the supply of genuinely good comedy material. Unlike many others who believe that humor is in greater demand in times of adversity—as now—Long feels that the demand for it is a part of human nature and is affected little, if at all, by external conditions.

"The diversion-seeking public is always ready to laugh."

Sex, according to Long, also has a constant marketability. The manner in which the public prefers its sex served is the only variant.

"At present," he said, "the public's preference for sex treatment is in thoughtful and analytical depiction. Coarseness, suggestiveness, double entendre and the brazen depiction have ceased to shock or divert the public."

Action stories also have a constant public, Long said, although he described it as a smaller public and one which never makes any remarkable numerical gains.

Urges Editorial Independence

His idea of literary material which fulfills all the requirements of today's popular tastes includes such works as "Angel Pavement," "Martin's Summer" and "Hatter's Castle." Long has published more fiction in the past twelve years from which pictures were later made than probably any other editor of a popular fiction magazine in America.

He selected a Camel from a plain cigaret box before him, and lighted it before launching his criticisms of picture production.

He believes, he said, that studio executives should read every important story before it is purchased and then either personally supervise its production, if important enough, or delegate a capable editorial man to do so.

He also believes that to permit sales or other business office executives to participate in conferences at which production schedules are decided upon is one of the gravest faults of the industry.

"It is as though a magazine editor were to permit his circulation or advertising managers to buy the stories for his magazine," he said.

Important and costly stories are purchased by studios without the production head having seen any more of them than a brief synopsis, declared this intimate of Will Hays. Long said he often had expressed his wonderment over this to his acquaintances among studio executives. He believes it should be obligatory on every studio head to know and understand every important story before it enters production.

Opposes Reader System

"I don't think it's too much to expect of a studio executive," he said. "As editor of Cosmopolitan Magazine, I was not obliged to do manuscript reading, but I did it, regardless. Systematically, I devoted the greater part of every weekend to reading manuscripts. I took notes on them and made suggestions which I thought might improve them. George Horace Lorimer, the editor of The Saturday Evening Post, does the same.

"I have never used the reader system in selecting stories for any magazine I have edited. I have done it myself, or capable assistants, who are editors, have done it in association with me," he said.

Made Up Every Page

"I realize that for a studio head to follow through production each important story may be impossible. If Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer makes 70 pictures each year, even my friend, Irving Thalberg, whom I believe to be a genius, could not undertake literary supervision of them all, in all stages of their production. But some capable editorial mind should do so."

"Lorimer," he continued, "reads an average of 15 stories weekly for the Post; then follows them through the publication by supervising even make up. I read about 24 stories each month for Cosmopolitan and then made up every page of the magazine."

Long touched upon producers' relations with writers and authors in their employ. He is widely recognized as a friend of many of the world's prominent writers of popular fiction. He believes that most producers in their relations with writers lack understanding of the individuals with whom they are dealing, and in the main the studio suffers as a result.

Must Be Handled Differently

"Writers are different types of people from those regularly in the studio's employ. They must be handled differently. I know of altogether too many instances of prominent and capable writers having been frustrated, saddled with unworthy assignments, even ignored altogether by the studios that employed them. The result is that the studio fails to get what the writer has to give—and what the studio has paid for."

Long discoursed on story alterations which result in pictures that are significant departures from the original manuscript, and expressed the opinion that, in the main, he believes the changes to be justified.

Praises Dreiser Picture

"I was one of those invited by Theodore Dreiser to attend the premiere of 'An American Tragedy.' After seeing it, I reminded Dreiser that his original work—a two-volume story of probably 300,000 words—could not possibly have been reproduced for exhibition as an ordinary evening's entertainment. No producer could have made 'Tragedy' as Dreiser thought it should be made. It could only have been produced faithfully by the Chinese method, which permits a performance to continue for days at a time.

"In my opinion," 'Tragedy' is a good picture; but it is a story which should not have been touched by a producer. Even the stage version was unsatisfactory in many important ways."

Frequently, in Long's opinion, the altered versions of stories result in pictures which are improvements on the originals. He liked "A Free Soul" on the screen much better than he did when he first read and bought it for Cosmopolitan.

He believes, he said, that producers recognize and meet trends in popular tastes pretty well, but that they are slow in realizing when a once-popular theme is waning, or even done for...Better editorial supervision of story buying and production schedule planning would remedy this, he believes, and would spare studios the mistake of making pictures of which the public has tired.

"Capable editors possess a catholic taste. They have the unique faculty of liking what a very large portion of the public will also like. They will tire of that in advance of the public."

"When gangster themes were at their height," he said, by way of illustration, "magazine editors were flooded with gangster material. A great deal of it was bought, and rightly so. As the flood continued, however, the editors sickened of it, and were rejecting gangster manuscripts long before the public, too, had sickened of them. The result was that no capable editor found himself overloaded with this type of material when the demand for it was over. Producers, on the other hand, are still making gangster pictures."

Long has received many offers from major studios, some of the most tempting of which were made only recently. He consistently has rejected them all, probably because of a sentimental attachment for a profession that has repaid him generously for serving it well, and probably only because he knows of "too many instances" in which editorial men have fared rather poorly once inside the studio gates.

Giannini Departs for West Coast

Dr. A. H. Giannini, former chairman of the board of the Bank of America National Association, left New York Thursday for Los Angeles, where he assumes his new post as chairman of the executive committee of the Bank of America National Trust and Savings Association, which operates 438 branches on the Pacific Coast. With Giannini went Tom Walker, former assistant vice president of the Bank of America in New York.

Although efforts were made by individuals prominent in the motion picture industry to tender a "farewell" testimonial dinner of a public nature to Giannini, prior to his departure for the West Coast, these efforts were uniformly discouraged by "Doc," who indicated a preference for taking leave of his numerous business and personal associations in New York in private. However, Nicholas M. Schenck, president of Loew's, Inc., and M-G-M, tendered a luncheon for Giannini and his business intimates in New York on Tuesday of this week. About 50 former associates of Giannini's at the Bank of America branch at 41st Street and Broadway, where Giannin conducted all of his motion picture financing, were in attendance.

The merger of the Bank of America National Association with the National City interests will be voted on October 17, with approval of the merger regarded as certain. The merger becomes effective 30 days after approval is voted.

Carl Laemmle in New York

Carl Laemmle has arrived in New York and will remain at the Universal home office until after the second annual entertainment of the Universal Club, scheduled for October 31 at the Hotel Astor.

Batchelor and Hoffberg in Deal

Chesterfield Pictures, George Batchelor president, and J. H. Hoffberg have signed contracts by which Hoffberg will distribute all of the new Chesterfield product in the foreign market.

Two Cleveland Zoning Systems Are Considered

Two proposed zoning systems for Cleveland, drawn up by exhibitors of that city, were under consideration at the office of Colonel E. A. Schiller, of Loew's, Inc., in New York this week. A committee consisting of Schiller, a group of Cleveland exhibitors, and Dave Palfreyman of the Hays office, sought an agreement on a new Cleveland zoning plan at the conference. Cleveland exhibitors declare that the plans were delivered to Dave Palfreyman of the Hays office last week to be presented to the distributors. Palfreyman, in New York this week, denied that any Cleveland zoning plans had been delivered to him, and said that the purpose of this trip to Cleveland last week was merely to investigate the local situation and confer with circuit representatives there over the protection demands which they are now asking.

A Cleveland exhibitors' committee headed by Myer Fine, an official of Associated Theatres, drafted two zoning plans, either of which, it is asserted, would be acceptable to Cleveland exhibitors. The plans are reported to be based on admission scales and would correct a present situation which permits houses charging 10 and 15 cents admission to play ahead of houses charging 25 and 30 cents admission.

J. J. Harwood, president of the Cleveland Motion Picture Exhibitors Association, conferred with representatives of the Hays organization on this situation several weeks ago. The conference, according to report, resulted in Palfreyman's recent investigation of the Cleveland protection system. The Cleveland Exhibitors' Association indicated that it expected a report on the proposed new zoning plans from New York distributors this week.

Cleveland has been without a uniform zoning plan for the past two years. Last year, distributors rejected a plan drafted by exhibitors and said to have been approved by members of the Cleveland Film Board.

Jack Harwood Dies In Cleveland; Was An Exhibitor Leader

John J. Harwood, 52, Cleveland exhibitor leader, died late Thursday from a heart attack while undergoing treatment at the Roubick Health Club, Cleveland. He is survived by his wife, Evalyn and two sons, Jack and Max, both in the theatre business in Cleveland.

Harwood was president of the Cleveland Motion Picture Exhibitors' Association for five years as well as vice president at large and chairman of the board of directors of the MPTO of Ohio. He was also a former member of the board of directors of the MPTOA, national organization. A 32nd degree Mason, Harwood was also a Kiwanian.

Funeral will be held on Monday from the funeral home of George Edick, 1877 East 82nd street, Cleveland.

BUYS OWN SECURITIES FOR PROFIT

Loew's, by Purchasing Own Sinking Fund Obligations, Makes Investments to Pay Up to 30%

By THE ANALYST

As a side line during periods of slack business in the regular lines carried by a concern, purchasing its own securities can be recommended as a way of making money for stockholders. The result of such efforts may not appear on the current statements but as the maturity and sinking fund retirement dates of funded indebtedness roll around, the profit in such a course will become more and more apparent.

The motion picture industry has one company, at least, which has taken a business-like advantage of the opportunity offered by the depressed prices of securities generally. This is Loew's, Inc. Looking into the future the officers of this corporation could see obligations coming due which could be discounted at high rates. The obligations were the redemption of funded indebtedness of various subsidiaries of the parent company. The opportunity for discounting these future obligations lay in the low market prices, extremely low in comparison with the price which the company would have to pay on the maturity date of these obligations.

Makes High-Paying Investments

The corporation has been buying its own sinking fund obligations during the past year to such an extent that sinking fund requirements in some issues have been taken care of for more than five years in the future and in other cases the issues have been practically bought out of the market. By doing so the corporation has made investments which will pay as high as 30 per cent in some instances and also has provided a market for securities of the subsidiaries which permitted holders forced to sell to obtain a better price than would have been the case otherwise. In other words, the corporation has not only made all stock outstanding more valuable but it also created a prestige for motion picture company bonds and debentures, as well as notes, by keeping them from sinking to the extent similar securities in other industries did.

Loew Building Clear of Debt

The amount of money which Loew's, Inc., and its subsidiaries have invested in anticipating sinking fund requirements is not known, as purchasing has been done on all of the issues continually as opportunity offered at prices which made them attractive investments. It is still going on and the support this gives to the market of these securities probably will continue until such time when they approach so close to par that the profit is gone from pre-sinking fund requirement purchases.

Elsewhere on this page is a list of the various issues of the Loew subsidiaries, with the amount outstanding as of the date of the corporation's last annual report which was August 31, 1930. Naturally the amounts outstanding are before the normal actions of the sinking funds of the various issues over the last 13 months. The $1,800,000 Loew Building and State Theatre First 6s were retired at maturity last year, so that the Loew Building in New York, which houses the State theatre, is free and clear of debt. The Orpheum Theatre First 5½s due this year are also probably retired, as are the Taylor and Market Building Co. First 8s, also due this year, and the other issues are all reduced, at the present time, through the operations of sinking funds.

Of the remaining issues, purchases have been made which anticipate sinking fund requirements for the next three to five years with the exception of the Loew's, Inc., 15-year Sinking Fund debenture 6s, due 1941, in which purchases have been limited to current sinking fund requirements.

Purchases of the next largest outstanding issue, Loew's Theatre and Realty Corp. First 6s of 1947, have amounted to more than the sinking fund requirements for the next five years. The minimum of sinking fund requirements on this issue is $125,000 semi-annually, so that well over $1,250,000 has been invested in this issue alone. Loew's Boston Theatres Co. First 5¼s, due 1934, have been practically all bought up, as have some of the other issues which mature within the next two or three years.

The profit which the company will make from these purchases could be computed only when the actual details of the transactions can be tabulated. This is impossible at the present time as purchases of the various issues have been made in small lots at varying prices and at various times. It is a conservative estimate that the purchases will show an actual profit of between 20 and 25 per cent on the money invested in this manner.

Saves Investment

The conditions of the securities markets over the past several months have not put beyond the possibilities that a tabulation of purchases will show an average price of close to 80 for practically all of the issues. Thus by an investment of $80 the company has secured possession of a security which it is bound to pay $100 or more for on some date in the future. Just the $20 savings between the purchase price and the par, under such conditions, would amount to 25 per cent. Stretched over a period of years the profit would be much less, if the difference between the purchase price and the par price was the only consideration from anticipating sinking fund requirements. However, each of the issues carries a rate of interest which made it an attractive investment when it was first offered and the company receives the benefit of not having to pay this to outsiders during the time from date of purchase to maturity.

The savings which Loew's, Inc., has accomplished by adopting this course of procedure to keep idle money working during a period of depression is only the purest sort of estimating for reasons that the amount invested and the prices paid have not yet been tabulated. On the basis of the Loew's Theatre and Realty Corporation operations, which have been noted, the investment of the company probably will be in the neighborhood of $5,000,000. On this basis the officers of the company have earned the stockholders an actual $1,000,000 through entering another field at a time when its money was not needed in its own normal operations.

FLORABEL MUIR, Editor

THE HOLLYWOOD HERALD has the honor to announce the appointment of Florabel Muir as Editor.

Nationally and internationally known, she is the foremost reporter of this industry-empire which centers in Hollywood. She is first a reporter and second an interpreter of all that pertains to public interest in this extraordinary community. Its multiple complexities of who and when and where and why are but the pages of a continuously unfolding daybook open to her eyes and experienced understanding. She believes in the unwritten law that news must be printed, and hopes the while that it will be cheerful.

Florabel Muir brings to THE HOLLYWOOD HERALD, as an institution of the motion picture, appreciation, understanding, whimsy, and optimism. Under her well-qualified editorial direction, THE HOLLYWOOD HERALD, alert and vital, will proceed apace on its mission of providing a journal of preëminent interest to the creative colony of the motion picture.

Publisher,
THE HOLLYWOOD HERALD.

FLORABEL MUIR, EDITOR OF HOLLYWOOD HERALD

Most Widely Known News Writer of Southern California Reaches 2,000,000 in Daily Press

Florabel Muir, most widely known news writer of Hollywood and southern California, is this week announced as the editor of THE HOLLYWOOD HERALD, west coast daily of Quigley Publications. Miss Muir has for some months been a contributor to the columns of the Hollywood daily, and, on occasion, to the pages of MOTION PICTURE HERALD.

Miss Muir, through her activities of some years as the general news correspondent for the New York Daily News, and syndicated papers, has become nationally famous, with a reader audience of more than two millions in the daily press.

Reporter and Specialist

To a unique degree Miss Muir combines the ability of performance of high rank in journalism and news reporting with an intensely specialized and intimate knowledge of the motion picture and the Hollywood community. In her newspaper connection she directs the operations of a considerable staff of reporters, covering not alone the affairs of Hollywood, but all of the general news of the region.

Miss Muir was born and reared in the plains country of western Nebraska and was educated at the Nebraska State University at Lincoln. Her newspaper career began on the Salt Lake Tribune, with which she was employed for several years. Thence she went to various west coast newspapers, including the Los Angeles Examiner and the San Francisco Chronicle.

Of the Militant School

She is of the militant school of journalism and has handled many spectacular stories from out of the high colored areas of the West.

Miss Muir is tall and athletic. She rides mustangs, and raises dogs on her sprawling acres in North Hollywood. She does a vast deal of personal reportorial work and in a typical day rolls up a hundred miles in her car, which she drives herself, with zip and celerity. She knows everybody in Hollywood and nearly everybody on Broadway. Her daily routine includes 40 or 50 telephone calls. Besides her daily newspaper responsibilities, she finds time and energy for the writing of various special articles for the magazines, and is the while writing a book on various Hollywood matters to be delivered as per contract with her publishers this winter.

Brown Denies G. E. Loan of Five Millions to RKO

Reports that General Electric, an ally of RCA-RKO, had loaned $5,000,000 at three per cent to RKO were denied yesterday by Hiram Brown, RKO president.

Authors to Share Profits in Company Under Sol Lesser

Unit production under a royalty system whereby the author will participate in the profits of production and will take part in the preparation and actual filming of his story is the departure planned by Sol Lesser in a new producing and distributing company, The Motion Picture Guild of America, Inc., which Lesser as president is incorporating under the laws of Delaware. Nathan Burkan is acting as counsel for the new company.

In announcing his plans in connection with his resignation as assistant and confidential adviser to Carl Laemmle and his son, Carl Laemmle, Jr., Lesser in a statement sent out from Hollywood said that under this system the producer will be freed from the necessity of tying up huge sums of money in complete advance payment for stories which may or may not be produced and in salaries to expensive staffs of writers.

"The failures, follies and abuses under the present method of dealing with authors have become one of the most frequent sources of ridicule of the business methods of the producers," Lesser said.

Advance payment is to be made outright to the author "of an adequate sum of money as an option on a story under favorable consideration." The profit participation of the author "will be on a sliding scale based on the gross receipts of the picture's sale or rental."

Skouras Gets 47 Fox Houses; Denies Deal for Roxy Is On

No deal for the Roxy theatre, Fox Brooklyn and Fox Midwesco theatres is under way between Spyros Skouras and Fox, Skouras declared late this week, in taking over operation of 47 Fox houses in Manhattan, the Bronx, Long Island and New Jersey.

Formal title to the 47 Fox houses went to Skouras Friday morning. Franchises for Fox pictures were included in the deal and will be effective as long as the houses are operated by Skouras. Harry Arthur, Fox Theatres executive, instructed house managers at the 47 theatres involved in the deal to give two weeks' notice to union operators and stage hands preparatory to assumption of operations by Skouras.

Freddie Stein, formerly Brooklyn district manager for Fox, is understood to be joining the Skouras Brothers in an official capacity.

J. Meyer Schine, up-state New York exhibitor, began negotiations in New York this week for the taking over of 33 Fox theatres in the East.

BENEFIT SHOWS IN 7,500 THEATRES TO FEATURE MOTION PICTURE WEEK

Nov. 18-25 Set by Hays; Young Accepts Plan

Proceeds Will Be Kept In Individual Communities; Distribution To Be Under District Chairmen

The motion picture industry will contribute to the cause of national unemployment relief through a National Motion Picture Week, extending from November 18 to 25, during which some 7,500 theatres throughout the country will stage benefit performances.

The plan, offered by Will H. Hays, M. A. Lightman, president of the MPTOA, and Abram F. Myers, head of Allied States Association, has been accepted by Owen D. Young, chairman of President Hoover's unemployment relief committee.

Among the approximately 7,500 theatres which will contribute their services will be 2,500 affiliated houses and 5,000 unaffiliated theatres, the last named group comprising some 300 independent circuits. Present indications call for holding these benefit performances outside the regular theatre playing time, with the exact time to be selected by the individual house operators, as best conforming to their theatre schedules and as possibly most desirable from the standpoint of achieving the largest possible attendance. It is likely, however, that most houses will use midnight performances for the benefit programs, except in the cases where the midnight show is a regular feature of the weekly schedule. In these cases, the benefit performance will probably be held in the morning, before opening of the theatre for the regular daily performance.

Will Not Pool Proceeds

It is expected that the money obtained from these benefit presentations will not be pooled in any great national fund, but will remain in the local community in which it is obtained. There it will probably be distributed in accordance with the decisions of a local motion picture committee, which in turn will doubtless act in conjunction with and at the suggestion of a community representation of the Owen D. Young national relief organization.

It is further felt that distributors will not be under the necessity of contributing the film for these special performances free of charge to the exhibitor, since it is anticipated that exhibitors will build their benefit programs about the feature and short attractions which they have regularly scheduled for the period during which the National Motion Picture Week falls. Where percentage agreements exist with distributors, however, the latter are expected to waive their portion of the gross intake in order that the entire proceeds of the performances may go to swell the unemployment relief contribution for the benefit of the individual communities.

Conversations are now under way between leaders of the film relief movement and William Canavan, president of the national projectionists' and stage hands' unions, seeking to bring about a voluntary contribution of services by operators and stage hands for these special performances, without remuneration for their time. No difficulty whatever is anticipated on this score, however, since the unions have repeatedly expressed themselves as wholeheartedly in support of any relief measure and in view of industry-wide co-operation which has without hesitation swung behind the original Hays office movement to aid the national Young committee. In addition, ushers, doormen, cashiers and other theatre help are expected to offer their services gratis for the special showings.

District chairmen, who are either already appointed, or still in the process of designation by the Hays office central committee, will decide the exact date within the special week, for Motion Picture Day, which will consequently differ in the various territories. The day will not be made national, so long as it falls within the National Motion Picture Week.

The District Chairmen

District managers already appointed for the various distribution zones include the following:

Atlanta—Headquarters: 125 Walnut St.; chairman: L. H. Lionel Keene; secretary: Love B. Harrell.
Boston—Headquarters: 60 Scollay Square; chairman: Martin J. Mullin; secretary: J. J. McGuinness.
Cincinnati—Headquarters: 1635 Central Parkway; chairman: G. A. Smith; secretary: Alice Juergens or Helen Siebler.

Washington—Headquarters: Earle Theatre Bldg.; chairman: John J. Payette; vice-chairman: A. J. Brylawski.

The Albany, Charlotte, Des Moines, Kansas City, Los Angeles, Milwaukee, Oklahoma City, Pittsburgh and Salt Lake City zones have not yet been organized nor district chairmen appointed.

Conn Wins Point In RKO Action

Federal Judge Ira Lloyd Letts this week at Providence overruled a plea in abatement and a motion to dismiss the plaintiff's bill of complaint in the $150,000 suit brought by Jacob Conn, operator of the Olympia at Providence, against RKO of New York and the Royal Theatre, Inc., of Providence.

Conn in his suit against the two concerns alleges they conspired in violation of the Clayton Anti-trust law to prevent him from procuring an adequate supply of pictures for his theatre between July 1, 1929, and December 31, 1930, and he fixes his damages at $150,000. Conn asks Judge Letts, in the event a petit jury finds for him, that the court treble the damages. Under the Clayton act, a presiding judge has a right to fix damages treble the amount found by a trial jury.

Attorney Phillip C. Joslin, counsel for RKO, filed a motion to dismiss Conn's bill of complaint on the ground that his client is without the jurisdiction of the Federal court in this state. This motion was denied by Judge Letts. Joslin maintained that his client did not have an office or bank account in this state. Attorney John J. Richards and Edmund F. Beagan for the Royal Theatre filed a plea in abatement and this was also denied by Judge Letts. William A. Needham appears as counsel for Mr. Conn.

Combines Inquiry at Toronto Goes to Jury on Monday

Prosecution of film exchanges and chain companies under the Combines Act by the Ontario Government is scheduled to get under way before the Grand Jury at Toronto on Monday. Many witnesses, including numerous independent exhibitors, who gave evidence before Commissioner Peter White at the Royal Inquiry last winter, have received summonses to appear.

Rather significant is the fact that indictments have just been registered at the Assizes against 25 electrical contractors of Toronto on the charge that they have been operating as a combine in restraint of trade and against the public interest. With the moving picture charges following within a few days, prospects appear unfavorable for the exchanges and chains.

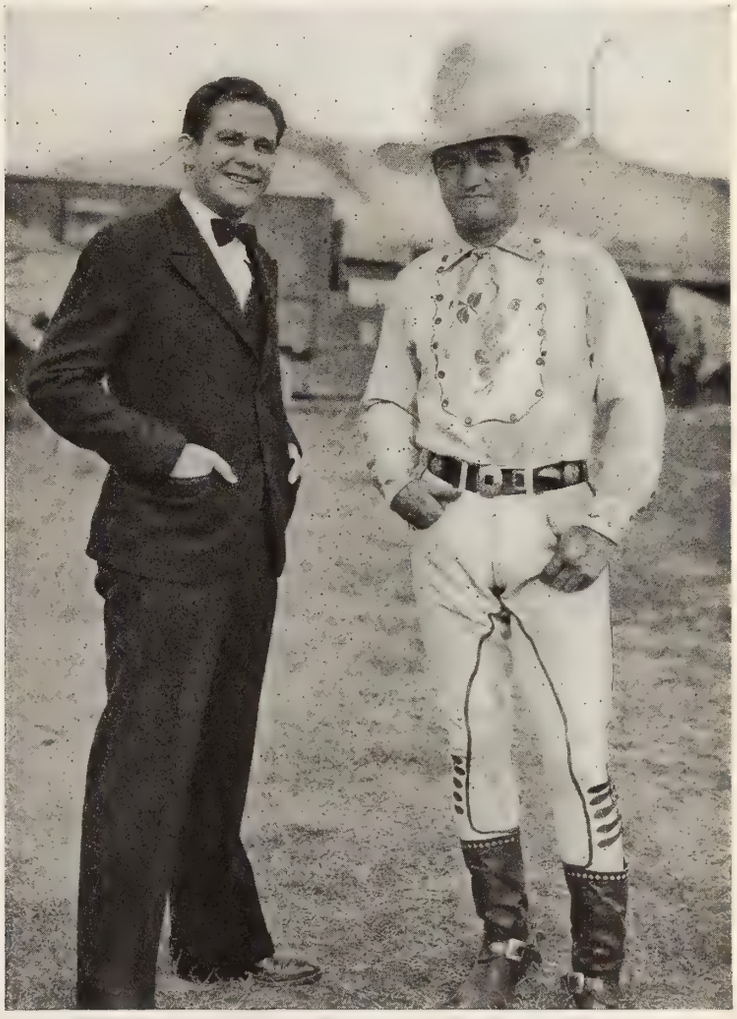
Kent, Seidelman, Returning

Sidney R. Kent and Joseph H. Seidelman of Paramount are scheduled to arrive in New York from Europe aboard the Majestic on Sunday, October 18.

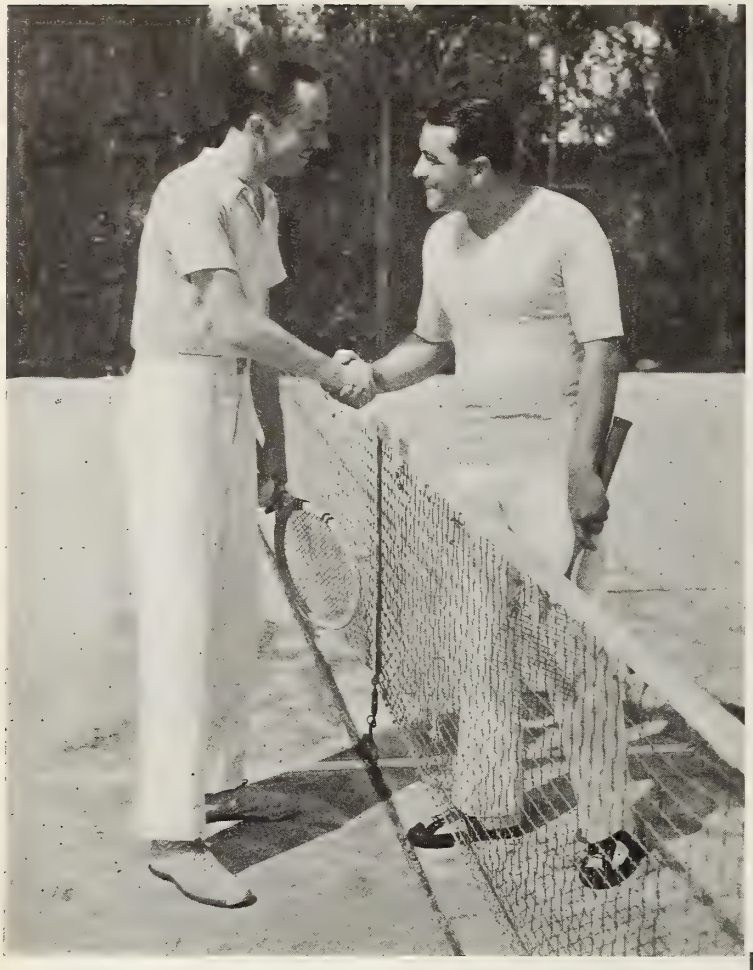
Publix Increases Capital

Publix Enterprise, Inc., of New York, increased its capital from $10,000,000 to $14,000,000 in the state house at Dover, Del., this week.

THE CAMERA REPORTS



BACK TO WORK. George Arliss, Warner Brothers star, on the S. S. Olympic, returning to the United States following a vacation in his native England. He is expected to begin a new picture upon his return to Hollywood.



HIS CAMERA DEBUT. A recent arrival in the Reginald Denny family, Reginald, Jr., as with Mother he "poses" for his first portrait. Both mother and son are "doing well"—and we add our congratulations.

CONVALESCING. Evalyn Knapp at home, following her long confinement to the hospital as the result of a fall. She is expected to be well enough to start work soon in First National's "The Honorable Mr. Wong."

SHOWMEN. Tom Mix, soon to return to the screen in Universal Westerns, and Paul Short, Publix manager in Dallas, on the grounds of the Sells-Floto circus, which features Mix, when that show played Dallas recently.

TENNIS STARS. And they're pretty good on the screen, too. These matches were less frequent, of course, when Bill Powell was with Paramount. Now both he and Dick Barthelmess are working for Warners.

CONGRATULATIONS. Yes, they put it over—we just couldn't turn down this picture of Bing Crosby, Jimmy Eagles, Dick Stewart and Delores Calles of the Mack Sennett "Billboard Girl" company. Guess why!

BELIEVE IT OR NOT. "I love you" is the world's best story and its glad to be stuck with it, even as Ivan Lebedeff and Betty Compson in this subtly sophisticated episode in RKO-Radio's "The Gay Diplomat."

CONTRASTS. The white sheen of pearl and silk—and Caryl Lincoln. One of the Wampas baby stars of 1931, Miss Lincoln has been given the feminine lead in Big Four's Western, "Cyclone Kid," starring Buzz Barton.

PUZZLE: Find the third sax. There's the big one made for a set in a Vitaphone short starring Rudy Wiedoft. And there's Rudy and his sax. And—oh, well, it's Sam Sax, head of the Vitaphone studio.

FATHER AND SON. And actors both. Two generations of the Gleasons, Russell and James, who continue their close private companionship frequently on the screen, by appearing in the same RKO-Radio pictures.

NEW SCREEN YOUNGSTER. Making, with his obliging dog, as fetching a rustic camera study as we've seen. He's Dickey Moore, a Warner contract player in spite of his age, who made his debut in "The Star Witness."

WOMEN PRESENT PLEA FOR FILM PROGRESS TO LEAGUE INSTITUTE

Cite Affirmative Service, Harmful Tendencies

National Council Reports Conviction That Discrimination Is More Effective Than Censorship

Recommendation that women demand of film producers throughout the world that they preserve in their pictures a respect for religion and the home, a treatment of crime in such fashion as to discourage its imitation, accuracy in portrayal of racial and national customs and cultures, and presentation of woman "with true proportionate stress on the great urges that motivate her life" rather than "solely in the role of sex protagonist," is made in the report of Frances White Diehl, chairman of the Motion Picture Committee of the National Council of Women, U. S. A., to the International Council of Women at the International Education Cinematographic Institute of The League of Nations at Rome.

Affirmative Services

Under the heading of the "screen's affirmative service," in addition to specific benefits in the fields of peace and pedagogy, the committee lists the following:

"1. It has whetted the human intellect, stirred the desire for more knowledge, increased the preceptory powers and sensitiveness of the minds of all of us.

"2. It has been a powerful agency in the dissemination of general knowledge. People everywhere are more informed on general topics than they were before the days of the motion picture.

"3. It has taken us out of our provincialism into the area of world affairs.

"4. It has afforded to hundreds of millions, in an after-war era when life has been drab and bitter, a necessary and invaluable release from the worries and oppressions of the struggle for existence.

"5. It has broadened the appreciation of art from the status of a patrician quality to that of a general one."

"Harmful Tendencies"

On the other side, "harmful motion picture tendencies" in some part of the product, as pointed out by the Committee in its report, are as follows:

"1. It has exaggerated sex in the perspective of life.

"2. It has portrayed crime so vividly that the power of suggestion is sometimes harmful, especially on that portion of the audience which might be easily impressionable or morally unstable.

"3. It has tended to confuse religious ideals and ethical standards.

"4. It has weakened support for established institutions.

"5. It has extolled excesses.

"6. It has mitigated great service in the field of international relations by unfortunate instances in which nations, customs or ideals of various nations have been inaccurately portrayed.

"7. It has glorified a material goal and standard for life."

The Committee adds that it does "not charge malicious intent in these matters" but attributes the situation to an erroneous belief of producers that "entertainment is its own self-sufficient justification," the Committee holding that the industry has "certain other obligations."

The Committee reported its conviction that "discrimination is more effective than censorship," that "scissors indeed will never make pictures what we want them to be." It cited several instances of cooperation with the industry, as well as the industry's own Code. It pointed to the success of children's matinees.

What Leaders Say

Mrs. Diehl brought messages to the Institute from nine outstanding women leaders in America. Excerpts follow:

Miss Lena Madesin Phillips, president, National Council of Women—"We, as individuals, can make it (the motion picture) serve the high purposes for which we are striving, but only if we approach it collectively."

Mrs. John Ferguson, president, National Council of Federated Church Women—"The increasing number of pictures worthy of support are a challenge to our cooperation and encouragement in the continued production of such."

Grace Thompson Seaton, president, National League of American Pen Women—"The future of the 'talkies' points to a wide field of educational value."

Valeria H. Parker, M.D., sixth vice president, International Council of Women—"The entertainment picture cannot escape its responsibility as an educator of public taste."

Mrs. David H. Ray, Vice chairman, National Society of New England Women—"The films are distinctly better and we are told that good films are paying."

Mrs. Leo B. Hedges, California Motion Picture Chairman, Congress of Parents and Teachers—"It is most encouraging the way parents are seeking these reports (preview reports) as a guide in the selection of the family's motion picture entertainment."

Mrs. Percy B. Pennypacker, past president, General Federation of Women's Clubs—"If we will only patronize the good pictures, and absent ourselves from the poor ones—there is no telling what may result in the next three years."

Mrs. Phillip A. Brennan, president, International Federation of Catholic Alumnae—"The result (of the work of the Motion Picture Bureau of the International Federation) has been a quick responsiveness to suggestions for the improvement of pictures."

Mrs. John F. Sippel, president, General Federation of Women's Clubs—"Demand will bring to the screen the best in films, but first there must be demand."

Hollywood, the International

Entertainment pictures, as well as news reels, are intrinsically international in their genesis as well as their distribution. Hollywood is an international city.

Moss Broadway Makes Television Part of the Show

New York Theatre Guild players will participate in a theatre television demonstration to be transmitted to the stage of the B. S. Moss Broadway theatre, 53rd street and Broadway, New York, on October 24. The demonstration will be made with U. A. Sanabria equipment for an invited audience of theatrical and technical representatives.

Beginning Saturday, October 24, theatrical television will be included as a regular part of the stage presentations at the B. S. Moss Broadway. According to the terms of a contract just approved by Moss and Sanabria, these public television presentations will be a part of every program at the theatre.

At a press gathering in the theatre this week, at which announcement of the theatrical television presentations was made, B. S. Moss, Morris Gest, theatrical producer, and Carveth Wells, explorer, all predicted that theatre entertainment of the future would be by television, and that both the theatre and drama itself would be benefited thereby.

The initial Broadway theatre demonstration will be identical with earlier theatrical television programs attempted by Sanabria in Chicago and New York. Daily theatrical demonstrations were presented at the Eighth Street theatre, Chicago, during the Radio Trade Show there this summer, and were repeated later at the public Radio Show in Madison Square Garden, New York. The Sanabria television stage screen used in these demonstrations is ten feet square and although it nominally presents only the head and shoulders of a single figure at a time, it is claimed that two and even three subjects can be presented simultaneously.

POLITICS, SPIRIT, THE PUBLIC AND THE PICTURE BUSINESS!:

Universal originally had in its new "Spirit of Notre Dame" several shots of Al Smith, which, when previewed, caused much concern and lifting of eyebrows to the reviewing committee of a nationally-known organization, who are understood to have issued an ultimatum or something, to Will H. Hays that Al Smith be taken from the picture—or else.

Universal denies that it was asked by Hays to eliminate the Smith reference to satisfy the narrow-mindedness of the Southern delegation of this women's unit. BUT—!

Two important Southern circuit heads also told Universal, in sotto voice, that if the company expected playing time below the Mason-Dixon line, Smith's head, brown derby and all, must be guillotined.

Another story has it that the Smith sequence was deleated when "U" found the film two reels too long.

However, regardless of what influence prompted its removal, the fact remains that the head was sacrificed and although it is pretty hard to prove, we feel more than a little sure that the late Knute Rockne, whose sportsmanship is the motivating force throughout the picture, would most certainly do everything within his power to withhold release in the South if he knew the reason for Smith's exit—which is just about typical of everything but sportsmanship.

began to give serious consideration to its invasion and immediate development.

Erpi is said to have flatly refused to accede to demands of a lower non-theatrical royalty, telling producers that Erpi's sound quality can only be maintained by such royalty. RCA Photophone was then brought into the picture, agreeing to a $100 per reel fee. It is held unlikely that Electrical Research will change its policy, and realizing this, the producers are understood to be prepared to go to Photophone for non-theatrical licenses.

Western Electric knowingly forced the issue one month ago when it served notice on licensees that in future it would rigidly enforce the payment of $500 per negative reel for each reel placed in non-theatrical distribution. This automatically made prohibitive the heretofore popular practice of newsreels making local shorts for neighborhood theatre use whenever some neighborhood event lent itself to filming. Fox Movietone News (as a typical example) made local newsreels as a goodwill gesture to many of its theatre accounts, charging only actual cost of sound, raw stock and laboratory work, ranging from $50 to $75 per reel, which is far removed from the $500 added royalty taxed by Erpi.

No Other Significance

A swingover to RCA for non-theatrical rights has no other significance, at least for the present, inasmuch as Western Electric theatrical licensees have millions invested in studio equipment and to change these channels for a new Photophone theatrical license and Photophone equipment would be economically prohibitive, even if Erpi agreed to a cancellation of existing recording licenses, which is too remote to be considered a possibility.

The use of theatrical subjects with educational appeal in the non-theatrical market following completion of their run at theatres was an important phase of the non-theatrical market before sound. The part which this factor will play in the new setup is at present a matter for much speculation, in view of the fact that Erpi will enforce a $500 non-theatrical royalty payment on Western Electric-recorded features which distributors may seek to divert to non-theatrical channels. The RCA Photophone license granted for non-theatricals embraces only new subjects recorded on Photophone devices and cannot invade Erpi's contractual rights with present Western licensees with regards theatrical subjects.

The Photophone contract, therefore, can only give partial solution to the non-theatrical royalty problem confronting Western Electric licensees, until five or six years hence when present ten-year licenses of Erpi users expire.

W. E. Questions Savings

In the Western Electric camp, there is belittling of the savings to distributors who plan to split their recording royalties between Erpi, for theatrical, and Photophone, for non-theatrical. It is held that the insufficient quantity of product which will be produced under a Photophone license exclusively for non-theatrical showing will not bring to any producer a royalty savings exceeding $40,000 for every 10 one-reel educational, scientific or religious subjects. However, picture executives consider this plenty important, pointing out that the costs of eight single reel school subjects would be defrayed in their entirety by $40,000 thus saved.

Reports that the W. E.-Erpi interests are much concerned by Fox's wholesale invasion of the non-theatrical film field because of the competition which threatens the electric were denied at Erpi, where Charles Bunn, general sales manager, stated that his company's participation in producing and distributing reels is at present only for experimental purposes and is intended to aid in opening the market, after which Erpi will confine its activities to the sale of equipment. The Erpi non-theatrical library contains approximately 100 subjects, but, according to Bunn, Erpi will not permanently compete with distributors in supplying product to non-theatrical accounts, as it does at present, selling an entire program of educational subjects and renting a portable sound machine, with an operator, at a flat sum. "We are interested only in equipment and do not intend to enter the film business," Bunn stated.

In addition to moneys lost to Erpi on non-theatrical royalties where its licensees turn to Photophone, the electric stands to lose a considerable sum on possible sales of portable sound recorders for making non-theatrical shorts. These cost approximately $25,000 at both Photophone and Erpi and appear to be necessary in order to permit of their transportation to location for producing certain types of scientific and historical subjects. They also will prevent interference with regular studio recorders.

$110,000 Spent on Erpi Survey

Harley L. Clarke's interest in the non-theatrical and school fields dates back eleven years, long before he became interested in production-distribution. Clarke founded the Society for Visual Education, Chicago, and is understood to have spent in excess of $600,000 in developing the field, with a view to furthering the market for portable projectors manufactured by International Projector, subsidiary of Clarke's General Theatres Equipment. Non-theatrical films, too, are one of Clarke's hobbies, and this fact coupled with the sales possibilities offered new portable sound projectors manufactured by International, have influenced the Fox chief to formulate plans for a gigantic non-theatrical program which is about to get underway. The field only awaits product for immediate development and this Clarke intends to supply under his Photophone license.

Erpi and its parent company, Western Electric, have spent $110,000 in recent months surveying the non-theatrical field, in line with plans of company executives to develop it as the next big market for Western sound equipment. The theatre field is nearing its saturation point and the Erpi offensive will be launched momentarily. Erpi salesmen in the field and the home office staff are being trained to non-theatrical methods.

As the situation now stands, Fox and Warners are expected to take the lead in the film business supplying product, with RCA Photophone, Erpi, Fox, through General-International, and possibly Warners, through Pacent, in a keen competitive battle to sell sound projectors.

RCA Photophone will grant licenses to manufacture sound projectors under its patents at 7½ per cent of the gross sales on machines. Others will join the movement in the equipment battle as it gains momentum, DeVry, Bell & Howell and several small independent concerns included.

Fox-Case Development

Although Fox is a Western Electric licensee, the sound recording equipment which it uses is not wholly Western Electric, but is considerably a development of the Fox-Case Corporation, a 100 per cent owned Fox unit which was formed five years ago when Case deserted the DeForest sound concern to join William Fox in furthering the technical development of sound-on-film, which up to that time had not been perfected commercially. Warners and Western Electric, through the Vitaphone Corporation, participated prominently in marketing sound on disc and it is over this tieup that Warners now seek $50,000,000 in royalty payments from Western as its share in aiding the development. This case is being arbitrated in New York.

Fox-Case and Western Electric joined laboratory forces to further sound-on-film, but no royalty agreement similar to that between Warner and Western was made. Fox interests, it is said, have long since considered this a poor business deal on the part of William Fox, in view of the important contributions which Case and Fox-Case made to Western Electric and sound-on-film, which today is practically standard in sound reproducing at theatres, replacing disc.

There have been at various times reports of Fox seeking a rebate, or payment of some nature, for so aiding in sound film's development, but these reports, all preceding the present Fox-Clarke regime, have never passed the rumor stage.

Tremendous Market Seen

That the educational field of non-theatricals offers a tremendous market was accepted as a definite fact many months ago. It is estimated that approximately 230,000 primary and high schools, colleges, universities and private institutions are in operation, although not more than half—which is considered plenty in itself—are possible users of sound film as a part of their curriculum.

At present, the situation finds RCA Photophone and Erpi in a pitched battle for educational equipment business, although neither organization has even scratched the surface because of the lack of available sound films. It was a realization of this which forced Erpi into the production of educational shorts 18 months ago. Although RCA was slow in organizing its theatrical organization, permitting Western to steal a march and obtain the bulk of large theatre installations, Photophone has long since seen the possibilities in non-theatrical sales and plans to fight Erpi for its share of that business.

Test at Columbia U

At Teachers College, Columbia University, V. C. Arnspiger, director of research, recently conducted a test of the value of films in educational use. The results show that 77 per cent of students seeing a sound educational film and doing assigned reading received higher ratings than the average made by those not seeing the school picture. Tests conducted elsewhere throughout the country indicate that even the average grade school student shows improvement in rating of between 10 and 55 per cent where films were made part of a course. Harley Clarke has stated that the improvement in ratings when films are used in the classroom ranges from 50 to 100 per cent.

Erpi's tests show that students respond rapidly to learning by films, although it is not considered practical to insist upon text books being supplanted by celluloid lessons in view of their becoming monotonous and because of the fact that school book manufacturers will undoubtedly play an important part in making available material for class room films. To antagonize them, it is believed, would be to create an enemy to the development of school films. The films will chiefly embrace material which lends itself to illustration, permitting the books to continue with their wordy educational duties.

Standardization Needed

Standardization of width appears to be the crying need of the educational field. Portable 35 mm. sound machines are available and so are 16 mm., likewise films in both widths, and in sound-on-film and sound-on-disc. This lack of standardization in size is expected to do much to hamper the field's development, according to non-theatrical students who seek to bring all interests together, both film and equipment, in order to effect a standard width.

Data accumulated by Western Electric in research work in the non-theatrical field indicate the impossibility of expanding the new field to its true size unless standardization is effected. And standardization can only be effected, Erpi officials believe, when all industry factions get together on the technical phases of film and equipment and coordinate their efforts with those of educational leaders. Erpi chiefs expect concerted action within one year.

Plan to Use Both Widths

Most motion picture companies at present plan the production of subjects both in 16mm and in standard 35mm width. Erpi sees a larger field for 16mm machines than for portable standard. RCA Photophone chiefs find the direct opposite to be the case. Clarke and his General Theatres-International Projector interests believe that 35mm is more practical and the only logical size. The educational field itself, embracing film divisions of important universities and government bureaus, have to date concentrated on 16mm sound subjects, participating in the production of only a few 35mm subjects.

All of which leaves the market in a state of technical chaos, of complete disorganization, similar to that in which the industry found itself at the inception of sound and from which the business took three years to extricate itself. Past experience, it is felt, should point the way to the economical practicability of a definite standard. It is hoped that this will come about during this first year of serious development.

Disc in 16 mm. Field

From present indications, sound-on-disc will play a part only in 16mm installations. The same reasons which prompted the industry to desert disc for film hold true in the non-theatrical field insofar as standard 35mm activities are concerned. No one has as yet brought to market a 16mm projector for sound-on-film which is both practical and economically possible. Leading projector manufacturers have for the past three years spent huge sums in their attempts to develop 16mm sound machines, but to date none has been successful. Standard 35mm, therefore, appears to be the logical size for portable non-theatrical usage.

The important phase of financial returns in non-theatricals is, of course, in the equipment end, what with a minimum of eight times as many possible users as are in the entire motion picture theatre field. Wholesale installation has been held up, and will continue to be so, until a guaranteed supply of films is made available.

There is said to be sufficient profit to make participation in production-distribution of school films interesting, but it is expected that the important factors and largest earners to be found in the field when it becomes stabilized will only be those who have combination projector-film organizations.

New to the Field

The industry is practically unfamiliar with the new market. Attempts to break into the field in pre-sound days were disorganized and weak. Complete understanding of the peculiarities of the class room were understood only by those companies concentrating in that branch of non-theatricals, including universities and visual educational societies which worked directly with educators in making scientific and other films of learning. It is, therefore, a new experience for the industry and one which, it is expected, will bring with it many intricate problems to be surmounted before the field is made profitable.

In silent days, the industry contented itself with adapting historical or other educational subjects to the non-theatrical field. "King of Kings" was made available for religious instruction, "Abraham Lincoln" for its biographical and history value, and so on. Now, however, this part of the industry's activities will play but a small part, if any at all. Films of a more scientific and straight educational appeal are the order. These, naturally, cannot be made by film men alone, but must be worked out in conjunction with educators. Nor can educators produce films, as has been proven at Erpi and Western Electric. The subjects must combine the show sense of a production man, familiar with audience tastes and reactions and the technique of film making, with the educational knowledge possessed by the professor. Another problem is in the need of satisfying a large number of educational boards with subjects presented, this because of the wide divergences of teaching methods used throughout the country.

Little studio space is needed for the production of educational reels, a fact which relieves the film industry of much anxiety in view of the possible interferences with regular theatrical production.

The classroom film is a thing apart from all other branches of non-theatricals. Hotel installations, films made for industrial concerns, sales messages and advertising reels constitute separate branches and in no way influence the classroom development. The home field, too, is another factor. Erpi cannot install machines in the home, but films of its licensees may be shown in the parlor upon payment of a third royalty to the electric.

In the home field, Clarke and RCA Photophone will probably be the biggest units. Home pictures, however, are not expected to be developed on an important scale until after school films have been established.

Folly of Antagonizing

Distributors, it is understood, have seen the folly of antagonizing theatre owners by diverting theatrical releases to the non-theatrical field. And, although practically all companies participated in this practice in the silent era, causing considerable antagonism to exhibitors who found themselves in some situations facing competition at school auditoriums and churches, there now exists a general feeling in major distributing circles that the practice died with silents. No one company would take the initiative to lead the others out of the situation, but now that the problem has been eliminated completely, it is held unlikely that it will again develop. Experience will prevent the recurrence, say distribution executives.

The classroom film is looked upon optimistically by industry leaders as representing an ambassador of goodwill to youngsters who have not yet developed the picture-going habit. It will be a boon to the business, they say, pointing out that outdoors and other forms of amusement take the greatest box office toll among those attending school. The classroom film should develop a taste for the theatre at an earlier age than ever before, and, in addition, believe educators and film leaders, they will go a long way in improving the cultural aspects of motion picture development.

Fire Regulations

The industry and its allies in the ducational field have yet to clarify the application of films in schools to the nation-wide fire regulations governing screenings. Unions, it is expected, will insist upon the use of their operators, setting $25 as a fixed scale for two hours per day for a five-day week. The union fight, as with the present theatre battle on one-man operators, will deal with the fire hazard presented by operation of a projector by an inexperienced, unlicensed individual. In many keys, city ordinances require the operator to be licensed. In others, this is not the case, but fire boards demand in practically all instances the use of regulation metal booths and suitable fire prevention apparatus.

Non-inflammable stock, which at present is used only partially in the school field, will solve the fire problems and it is with this thought in mind that Eastman Kodak and other raw stock manufacturers have been laboring for the commercial and scientific perfection of non-inflammable material, which eventually will be used almost exclusively for school room subjects, according to raw film technicians.

Physical Distribution

The method of physical distribution of subjects has not as yet been determined. Their handling will require the services of one with at least a slight knowledge of school requisites, and although exchanges may be utilized by national distributors as the basis of their physical outlet, separate departments containing complete educational libraries will undoubtedly represent the modus operandi, with schools and colleges renting subjects from a card index at a flat fee per reel.

RKO Pathe, an important factor, as Pathe Exchange, Inc., in the silent era of non-theatricals, this week launched its bid for non-theatrical business. A licensee and affiliate of RCA Photophone, RKO Pathe has resurrected Films of Commerce, Inc., with headquarters at the company's New York home office. The old Harvard Classics of instructional films, released several years ago, have been taken from the vaults, buffed and brushed and replaced in distribution in silent form. They are being made available in 16 mm. and 35 mm. widths. Two subjects are offered free, as inducement, after which the company seeks business, at rental rates, for its group of nine single and two-reel "Human Geography" series, and eight single-reel "Physical Geography" subjects.

Universal Laying Groundwork

Universal is quietly laying the groundwork for a non-theatrical barrage and by mid-winter Carl Laemmle's company, it is expected, will be operating at full blast with non-theatricals, under a new Western Electric non-theatrical license, and making 16 mm. reels.

Columbia organized its first non-theatrical department two months ago.

Warners are surveying the field and will be ready soon.

United Artists, M-G-M and Paramount, though undecided as to what courses to follow, are expected to be found prominently in the field.

Educational, always active in non-theatricals and one of the silent era's largest distributors, will again lay heavy stress on non-theatrical sales, it is understood.

Western Electric's sales methods of equipment will be directed from home office and company field branches, while Photophone plans to concentrate on radio dealers and educational equipment centers to dispose of its 16 mm. equipment. Sales on 35 mm. standard portables will be directed through the regular Photophone organization.

Bell & Howell Active

Bell & Howell, recognizing the importance of a film supply as an aid to selling its projectors, this week acquired rights to 100 16 mm. educational films which have been added to the extensive B. & H. library at Chicago. Usually, organizations of this class furnish films gratis to schools and institutions which are company equipment users, although in many instances a small rental or transportation fee is charged.

The new purchase embraces collaborative work on the part of cameramen, travelers, explorers, scientists and educators and includes 3,000,000 feet of material, 42 of the subjects relating to science and nature. Six of the group, known as the "American Statesmen" series, relate to the lives of Washington, Franklin, Jefferson, Lincoln and others. Thirteen have to do with films on Poe, Holmes, Irving and other writers. Geography is covered in nine subjects, eight are on outdoor life and a five-reeler on the Life of Christ.

All are approximately 400 feet, in 16 mm. width, with synchronized disc accompaniment, and were made in cooperation with Dr. Raymond L. Ditmars, Edward J. Foyles, M. S., Henry R. Linville, Arthur H. Graves and Ida M. Mellen.

Eastman Kodak, one of the nation's largest non-theatrical factors, has a library of 550 subjects, 1,200 reels in 16 mm. length, with branch Kodak distributors in 65 cities.

Film Departments

General Electric and other large industrial concerns will again have film departments to further the distribution of their own reels at educational institutions. Although films of the sponsored reel type (Chesterfield, Socony, etc.) are not expected to progress in the educational field, there are many subjects (history of coal, operation of machinery, etc.) which undoubtedly will find appeal in the classroom.

Other educational film units have libraries totaling 2,000 additional subjects, listed by Burton Holmes Travelogues, Chicago; all U. S. Government bureaus; independent visual educational societies, colleges and independent concerns. Majority are silent, with disc accompaniment or synchronization. However, sound film supply is negligible at present and is the cause of present impediments in development, which, it is expected, will be eliminated in six months to one year.

Arliss to Make Three

George Arliss will make three pictures for Warners before returning to England next summer. His next may be Clare Kummer's "A Successful Calamity," but that is not definite yet.

English Inquiry Committee Is To Study Situation

It is generally felt in British political circles that as a result of private conversations recently, it has been decided that no matter in which direction the coming general election turns, a special governmental committee will be appointed to thoroughly investigate the entire question of American competition in Britain, and its possible extension, in the Allied fields of films, radio and television.

The committee which is the direct result of agitation both within and outside the House of Commons, is to have power, it is understood, to hear and examine expert evidence and to frame recommendations to the government. The political "agreement" which is giving rise to the committee formation is not a party affair.

Representatives of all parties are said to have declared that the quota law has not been an unqualified success, particularly because American firms, in addition to acquiring British theatres, are making pictures which, while internationally distributed as British, are bringing no money into England, and will be in direct competition with the product of companies purely British in origin and finance. Several powerful political leaders are thought to be in favor of a foreign imports license quota which would limit acceptance of American and other films to a fixed proportion of the British films taken by and distributed in the respective foreign countries.

Clara Bow Signs With Rork For Independent Production

Clara Bow has signed with Sam Rork for an independent production which will go into work on the Coast December 1. The film will be "Get the Woman," from a Canadian Northwest story by Nell Shipman.

The story ran serially in a magazine under the title of "Monsieur Sweetheart," and Miss Bow decided upon it for her return to the screen after studying many scripts and considering numerous offers.

Western Electric Wins Suit From Steffes In Minneapolis

Western Electric has been awarded $422 damages in a suit against Al Steffes, Allied leader, by a municipal court judge in Minneapolis. The decision was not appealed.

The electric charged Steffes with failure to complete payment on his Paradise theatre sound installation. Counsel for the exhibitor leader argued that the lease was a conditional sales contract.

Academy Closes Balloting Oct. 17

Members of the Academy of M. P. Arts & Sciences this week commenced balloting for awards to be presented to the best actor, actress, director, cameraman, sound engineer, art director, producer and writer. The annual presentation will take place at the Academy's dinner in Hollywood, at the Ambassador Hotel November 10. Balloting terminates on October 17.

U. S. DISTRIBUTORS "VICTIMIZING" EXHIBITORS, AUSTRALIANS CHARGE

Capone Denied Preview, Says Hughes Office

The following story and comment was released this week from the Howard Hughes publicity offices:

Al (Scarface) Capone, Chicago underworld czar now on trial for evasion of income tax payments, has made efforts in Hollywood to obtain advance information of Howard Hughes' motion picture version of "Scarface."

A Western representative of Capone, it was disclosed yesterday (Tuesday, October 13th), approached Howard Hawks, director of the picture, and said:

"The 'Big Fellow' wants to look over your picture; how's chances of arranging it?"

The director replied:

"The 'Big Shot' will have to lay down his money at the box office if he wants to see 'Scarface'."

"Well," said the Capone emissary, "we just wanted to let you know what the 'Big Fellow' said."

The Capone agent added that the "Big Shot" is known to be opposed to gangster pictures, particularly those which reveal underworld characters as "rats" and not "heroes." It will be recalled that Capone himself informed reporters in Chicago two weeks ago that gang films "should not be allowed, as they are not good for kiddies."

Agitation in several states to ban gangster pictures is said to be aided by Capone, who is believed to maintain expensive lobbies in many state capitals for this purpose. The gang leader is said to realize that newspapers and motion pictures are doing more to bring about his downfall than any other factor by disclosing his underworld operations.

Convinced that this is true of "Scarface," Producer Hughes has despatched prints of his picture to the censor boards of Pennsylvania, Illinois, New York, Kansas and Ohio prior to releasing it. He is of the opinion that by so doing he will gain the cooperation of the state authorities in putting down the gangster menace.

The MPTO of Arkansas, Mississippi and Tennessee will hold its fall convention in Memphis, November 1 and 2, probably at the Hotel Peabody.

Independents to Request Aid of Government

"Fighting Fund" Established at Sydney to Aid in Collection of Data Showing Losses

By CLIFF HOLT
Sydney, Australia

Failing to receive rental reductions and a moratorium for six months on paying rentals to distributors, independent theatre owners at Australia are peeved to the point of storming Parliament's doors for aid in alleviating the "oppressiveness" of renters. The independents are preparing data which they believe will convince the government that they are being "victimized" by American combines.

In their heated discussions, evidently, they have lost sight of the fact that distributors, too, both domestic and American, have been turning in red reports because of general economic conditions, curtailment of exhibitor activities in Australia, and the loss sustained from lowered English money values.

At a largely attended meeting in Sydney, a "Fighting Fund" was established to contest the validity of film contracts in equity; and a decision was reached to present the balance sheets of representative theatres to Parliament, to prove by facts and figures that in almost every case theatre-owners over the last six months, have been operating at a loss, or just making ends meet. It was also decided that the Showman's Association's executives should persist in its efforts to bring about an amendment to the Moratorium Act so that it would include rental agreements, thus giving showmen breathing space in which to eliminate liabilities incurred by contracts signed in more prosperous days.

That exhibitors in Australia already have the sympathy of the government is hardly surprising when it is borne in mind that the companies to which they are indebted, or with which they trade, are foreign controlled. Nevertheless, they are unlikely to find that the presentation of data, proving that they are running at losses, is going to help their cause, inasmuch as at present, it would be difficult to find any business of importance that has not been losing money in the past year. Many of those companies are now depending on reserves to tide them over, and it is felt in some quarters that exhibitors will have to do the same.

The suggestion that theatre-owners are being victimized by "American Combines" is described at Sydney as being "sheer piffle." Unfortunately, the allegedly wealthy combines are finding the Australian end anything but the profitable market it may have been once, and if showmen are getting little, it is certain that the renter is getting less. After all, the industry's financial welfare depends entirely on the box-office.

Other sections of the trade in Australia find it regrettable that political interference should be sought by independents. Past experience has shown that, when dealing with governments, what is expected to be assistance in the first place, invariably takes the form of a brickbat later.

U. S. Circuit Entry Seen

A meeting of Melbourne bankers and exchanges this week appointed a receivership for Union Theatres, Ltd., which controls more than 50 theatres, among them the largest first-run houses in Australia.

Entry of a second American theatre circuit into Australia is seen as a result of the Union Theatres developments. Another eventuality is seen in the probable flotation of Greater Union Theatres and Greater Union Theatres Investments. Opposition to Fox, controlling Hoyt's, is seen in impending developments.

Hoyt's Recovers in Operations

After losing $53,155 in the first six months of the last financial year, Hoyt's Theatres, Ltd., of Australia made a recovery in the latter period amounting to $74,860, returning the company a profit over the full period of $21,750 after providing for depreciation and taxation. Despite the credit balance, the directors found it impossible to pay any dividend.

The directors, Stanley S. Crick, and Charles E. Munro, report that the result of the year's trading, "brought about mainly by reduction of rentals and other strict economies," must be considered as satisfactory in view of the decreased spending power of the community, taxation, and general unrest in a period of economic stress. The report continues: "During the past year the company has met its heavy financial commitments in a satisfactory manner, but to achieve this result, it has been necessary to obtain assistance from other sources. Fox Film has furnished such accommodation as has been required from time to time, thus enabling the company to function without serious embarrassment."

The assistance given by Fox is traceable in the reduction of $317,500 in overdraft, and $1,031,730 in creditors' and sundry balances.

Warner's Slash Australian Lineup

Opinions of prominent Australian exhibitors indicate that Warner-First National has moved wisely in allocating only 58 pictures for this market, thus leaving room for the shelving of inferior product. Leading owners hold the belief that independents will pay more for a service, which, without cutting into schedule, can "dump" poor pictures and guarantee its releases. It is suggested that other distributors follow Warner-First National's lead.

Inferiority of product generally is one of the prime factors blamed for the dearth in Australian theatre attendances.

WHEN THE SCREEN TEACHES

by
RITA C. McGOLDRICK

WITHIN the past month an unusual number of high grade motion pictures have come into the studios for preview, many of them containing tempting material for the service "School and Screen." Some of these have been exceptional in thir treatment, brilliance of technique, strange and authentic geographical settings, incredible shots of the wild creatures that infest the jungle, of volcanoes in eruption and of fascinating fauna and flora. But much of this material is inappropriate for children's programs because of the sophisticated situation, the double-edged lines, the frank expression of passion, which, after all, is not the best diet for the child mind.

"School and Screen" is rather pleased to announce itself as being a little bit old-fashioned in its views on diet for children. We believe that the ten-year-old may have more meat at his dinner, for instance, than the two-year-old brother who has not finished cutting his teeth. We also believe that the average child in the elementary school, in the processes of his mental development, is not ready to digest and assimilate the subtleties of the sex-problem play or the underlying doubtful moral values of the underworld themes. For that reason we deliberately eliminate from this service pictures that are strong in themselves and brimful of educational interest, but too sophisticated for young people's entertainment.

Three Pictures Chosen

In this issue of "School and Screen" we have selected three pictures with a great deal of consideration, and with something of courage. Warner Brothers' historical feature, "Alexander Hamilton," is one of the outstanding pictures of the year. It re-creates the exciting post-revolutionary period in and near Philadelphia, using for its familiar characters James Monroe, Thomas Jefferson and Alexander Hamilton in their political and diplomatic relationships under the direction of George Washington, who comes into the picture with the vividness of reality. One catches in this picture the indomitable spirit of the revolution; the flavor of the tavern and the rough stage coach road; the thoughtful intensity of the men whose canny wisdom shaped this country's destiny.

The kernel of the story concerns itself with a dishonest plot to defeat Alexander Hamilton's Assumption Bill, with which he hoped to establish the credit of the faltering young nation. His plotters tempt him through a woman, and for his moment of indiscretion brand his public life. But Hamilton accepts the challenge. He faces public scandal and disaster to his home rather than betray his country's interests. All of this has been done with the utmost delicacy and beautiful restraint. There are no scenes of passion, no cheap love-making.

Notwithstanding all of this, one national organization that prides itself on its discretion in the selection of better pictures, says in its Monthly Motion Picture Guide, in which it lists "Alexander Hamilton" in the same class with several tawdry pictures: "Hamilton's truly great patriotic contribution to his country's welfare are made incidental to a notorious love affair in this story. We know some heroes had clay feet; but surely there is no necessity of focussing the camera on their weaknesses. For this reason this picture is not recommended."

"School and Screen" is courageous enough to believe that this picture should be recommended for boys and girls of high school age, for college students and for all adults and that it should receive the highest rating instead of the lowest, for its artistic, vigorous and patriotic interpretation of a period of which we all know too little. Of course, we believe that this is not juvenile diet. The very young children will not have reached the Alexander Hamilton stage in their studies and naturally would have no interest in a production of this kind. High school children seeing it will fly back to their textbooks with new interest in the history of those times which this story tells so dramatically. College students will find it one of the most delightful pictures of the year.

"Alice in Wonderland"

On the other hand, we have listed a charming and simple little picture, "Alice in Wonderland," which has been made for very young children. This is an ingenious production, far from the Hollywood manner. Its settings are simple, its costumes modest, and its lack of extravagance notable. But Alice herself acts convincingly, there is an exceptional musical score, and the little picture has caught something of the illusion of the childhood classic. Little children will love it; older ones will scoff at it; the mothers and fathers who take the small persons to the show will be bored to death. Yet there is a place in the film world for "Alice in Wonderland" and her fairy tale companions, and for that reason "School and Screen" encourages their production.

"Riders of the Purple Sage"

Our third selection for the month is a Western, boasting more of story form, action and beauty of background than is true of most of the pictures of the plains. Its mesas and canyons, serrated rocks and bridal veil falls, its distances and natural cloud effects, offer an excellent opportunity to any teacher for a fine hour in classroom geology. Its beautiful horsemanship and fast action attendant on the heroics of Lasiter, the outlaw from Texas, will delight every boy in the country. There will be no difficulty in winning classroom response from any pupil who has seen "Riders of the Purple Sage."

We believe that educators and teachers will find it to their advantage to go personally to see the pictures selected by "School and Screen" service. It is our hope that the additional information contained in the "Selections," added as a new feature to this month's pamphlet, will supplement "School and Screen" in a definite, constructive and practical manner.

Unique Foto Film

Star: Ruth Gilbert.

This film story of Alice has been adapted from the childhood classic, "Alice's Adventures in Wonderland," by Sir Louis Carroll. This is a picture for very small children. It has been made simply, without pretense at magnificence, and in no way competes with the beauty of setting and technical perfection that marks most Hollywood products. But there is a place in juvenile programs for pictures for very little children. "Alice in Wonderland" fills that need. It tells the story of the dreaming Alice and her adventures with the Cheshire Cat, the Door Mouse, the Hare, the Duchess, the Tortoise, the King, Queen and Knave. Alice acts convincingly. She is charming and gay. She will attract the juvenile audiences. The trial of the Knave of Hearts and the bits of court comedy catch the illusion of the original story. This is a good picture for matinees for small children, and it offers excellent opportunity for kindergarten teachers and the parents of children under ten to awaken child interest in the story as it was written and in other stories of the same kind.

1. What happened to Alice?
2. Where was she when she fell asleep?
3. What did she dream about?
4. Where did she go in her dream?
5. How many queer persons did she meet?
6. Where did she have a tea patry?
7. Tell a story about the tea party.
8. Did you like the Duchess?
9. Was she kind to Alice?
10. Who did the Knave of Hearts steal?
11. What did the King do about it?
12. What did the Queen say?
13. What did Alice do before the King and Queen?
14. Do you know what a jury is? Ask your teacher to tell you.
15. Who were the jury at the trial of the Knave of Hearts?
16. What did you think was funny about this trial?
17. Who did you think was the funniest person in this picture?
18. What part of it did you like best?
19. Would you like to have done the things Alice did?
20. What happened to Alice at the end of the picture?

Tell a story about a dream that you have had.

(The theme song for this picture was written by Irving Berlin. The musical synchronization is very good.)

Alexander Hamilton

Warner Brothers

Stars: George Arliss, Doris Kenyon, Dudley Digges, Allan Mowbray as George Washington, Morgan Wallace as Monroe, and Montague Love as Thomas Jefferson. Written by George Arliss and Mary Hamlin.

This is an historical drama of those stirring days following the Revolutionary War in which the young nation's statesman were engaged in shaping the country's destiny in its state of flux. The story centers around Hamilton's efforts to establish the Governments' credit by strengthening the federal power and by having the Central Government assume the various war obligations of the thirteen states. It opens with Washington's thrilling farewell to the troops, in which he promises them payment for their services. It tells the story of Hamilton's Assumption Bill and Residence Bill in a dramatic fashion.

Alexander Hamilton's enemies tried to discredit his character by a maliciously contrived plot to involve his name with a woman's.

This is not a picture for young children but is admirable entertainment for high school and college students.

1. What position did Alexander Hamilton hold in the Government in the post-revolutionary period?
2. Where did Washington make his farewell address to his troops?
3. Was he president at this time?
4. What did he promise to do for the troops?
5. Was this a fair and just pledge to them?
6. What did some of the statesmen think about the Government assuming this obligation?
7. Why did they think the thirteen states should pay their individual bills?
8. What was the Assumption Bill?
9. What did Hamilton hope to accomplish through this bill?
10. What was the Residence Bill?
11. Name two arguments for and against a central location for the Government's capitol.
12. Why was a site on the Potomac selected?
13. Describe the home of Alexander Hamilton.
14. Name two important historic things that Thomas Jefferson said in this picture.
15. Describe Monroe as he appears in the picture.
16. Did George Washington seem true to life to you?
17. Describe the interior of the stage coach tavern.
18. The home of Alexander Hamilton and the Wayside Tavern were typical colonial habitations. Describe ten pieces of typical colonial furniture as you noticed them in this picture.
19. Describe the dramatic climax of the picture.
20. Compare the filmed Alexander Hamilton with your history's record of him during this period of his career.

Write a 250-word composition on "A Nation's Credit."

A department that has for its definite aims:

1. To encourage children to see the best things of the screen, thereby leaving them less time and money for the poorer kind.
2. To have the entertainment screen contribute directly and constructively to their education.
3. By winning support for high type pictures to offer an incentive to producers to make more of the same kind.

Riders of the Purple Sage

Fox Film Corporation

Stars: George O'Brien, Marguerite Churchill, Noah Beery.

This picture, twice screened in silence—once with William Farnum, and once with Tom Mix in the role of the heroic outlaw from Texas—now finds new strength and power with the added dimension of sound, the rush of horses' feet, the roar of water tumbling over cliffs, the wind in the trees, and the crisp and staccato dialogue of Lassiter the bandit.

This picture has no outstanding originality in plot or development. It tells the story of the lone girl rancher who is trying to carry on in the place left her by her father, of the evil politics of the local gang, and of the chivalry and generosity of an outlaw. But this ordinary structure has for its background the dazzling magnificence of the western canyon country. It offers a splendid opportunity for a valuable classroom hour on geology. This picture also offers a dozen important topics for descriptive composition.

1. What is the study of geology?
2. What does the word itself mean; trace its derivative. Compare geography, geometry, etc.
3. What is a mesa?
4. From where do we get that word?
5. What is a canyon?
6. What is the difference between the words cañon and canyon?
7. Name three causes for these strange rock formations.
8. Why do we have more of them in the western country than in the east?
9. What kind of rock do you think these canyons are made of?
10. What is erosion?
11. Do sand and water wear down more quickly the soft or the hard rock?
12. Describe the plant life of the plains.
13. Why is it so scarce?
14. Why does cactus thrive in this section?
15. What is a corral?
16. Describe the round-up of the stampeding steers.
17. What was the method used?
18. Describe the entrance to the mysterious valley.
19. How could one boulder start an avalanche?
20. What was the most thrilling moment in this picture?

Excellent Short Features

We wish to call to your attention the following short features which will add distinction and educational interest to any program for young people.

TURN OF THE TIDE
Supreme Thrills Series
RKO Pathe

"Turn of the Tide" is one of a series of thirteen true stories of the Great War picturized and verbally described by Floyd Gibbons. This one tells the story of the early morning hours of July 18, 1918, when three hundred thousand American boys, who had been hurriedly mobilized and rushed into action, delivered the first decisive offensive blow of the Allied troops in the World War, turning the tide of defeat into the promise of victory. This is an electrifying and vivid presentation, excellently photographed and with an accompanying musical score. These authentic thrills of the screen are among the best short features of the year.

BIRDS OF THE SEA
Fox

Very interesting and scenically lovely.

BLUE RHYTHM
Columbia

Here is another Walt Disney cartoon in which Mickey Mouse conducts the animal orchestra for the amusement of all.

DANGEROUS TRAILS
Warner

This is the ninth episode of the adventures in Africa of Wynant Hubbard, lecturer and scholarly adventurer. It is an extraordinary study of wild animals as they roam through the jungle and cross the paths of the man with the cameras. (Accompanying lecture.)

EGYPTIAN MELODIES
Columbia

A very amusing cartoon depicting the experiences of a spider in an Egyptian tomb.

GYPSY CARAVAN
Vitaphone

Giovanni Martinelli, as a gypsy caravan driver, sings with his unusual, beautiful effect. This is a happy opportunity to hear this Metropolitan opera star.

ISLE OF ISOLATION
Imperial

A very entertaining talk accompanies these pictures of the Island of Bali. Mr. Dickason calls it one of the most enchanted islands of the globe.

JERUSALEM, THE HOLY CITY
Ideal Pictures

An interesting scenic, accompanied by an instructive talk. It depicts the historic background and the lives of the various races that dwell in the Holy City.

OLYMPIC TALENTS
RKO Pathe

This Grantland Rice Sportlight is one of an instructive and interesting series of views of various athletes in training for different sports for the coming Olympic Games of 1932. A lively and humorous talk adds to the interest.

GERMAN FILMS LOSING TO U. S. ON CONTINENT

Carefully Selected American Pictures Will Have Growing Demand, Says Canty

The shoe is now on the other foot and producers and distributors in Germany find that it is pinching. Since the rush of German-made talking pictures through Continental Europe, the old cry raised against American exchanges that they were "glutting the local market" has changed to criticism of "the predominant number of German-made talkers." The feeling now, after six months, is that carefully selected American pictures, featuring box office names and subordinating dialogue to action, will continue to have a limited growing demand, in the face of the decreased attendances partly attributable to the wholesale switch to German product.

Tired of Mediocrity

"The fresh rush of German 'talkies' into Austria, Czechoslovakia, Hungary, Yugoslavia, Switzerland and Rumania (German dialogue films are still banned in Poland) gradually tired cinema goers with their mediocrity, and it became apparent that, with few exceptions, they would fail to meet local film tastes that had been developed chiefly by the American 'super' silent," says Trade Commissioner George R. Canty at Paris in a report to the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce.

"Relatively excellent responses are being given to the exhibition of certain films in English dialogue, with titles in the local language superimposed on the film. Recently, American 'talkies' have been shown in the larger cities of the various countries involved."

"Purged of Parasites"

Canty pointed out that theatres in Germany are having a harder time of it than elsewhere in Europe with the possibility of Italy. He cited the claims of leaders in the trade that thousands of exhibitors are on the verge of bankruptcy. Canty sees another result possible:

"Unless unforeseen cinema credits appear in Germany before the new year arrives," he says, "the German industry will have been purged of most of its parasites, which hitherto have greatly hindered the normal growth of the local industry (prior to the sound film era, mushroom companies with one or two features each to their credit accounted for a large percentage of the total output) and the most of the serious small companies that have done so much to keep the German industry on the world map. This survival of the fittest, in face of present demoralizing economic conditions, should restrict the German industry to five companies with an estimated production output of 10 or more features each during the next season; two adequate cinema circuits controlling some 220 cinemas, and about five competent distributors, as follows: Ufa, 25 features; Sudfilm, 15; D. L. S., 15; Emelka, 10, and Terra, 10."

The leading circuits are Ufa with 170 houses in Germany alone, and Emelka with 50 or so, practically all first-run. The leading producers mentioned, besides Ufa and Emelka, are D. L. S., Sudfilm and Starfilm.

More Product Than Expected

Canty predicts that the reported shortage of product for next season will not be as serious as at first expected. With the needs estimated at 200 to 250 features, about 120 already have been announced by leading companies. It is estimated that Americans will contribute 35 foreign-made German talkers, France 12 or 15. German producers "appear to have concluded that their intention to supply films for the world markets will, temporarily at least, be restricted to films in German and French dialogue, and special foreign versions without dialogue."

Of the latest German contingent regulations Canty says:

"The American film exchanges in Berlin are beset with three unusual conditions: (1) A provision against the blind booking of foreign product as against permitted blind booking of domestic products; (2) the non-transferability of the socalled interior contingent permits (permits issued in connection with export returns of domestic products are transferable and have a market value of approximately $5,000 each), which practically necessitates a participation in the German industry, such as the production and/or distribution of local products, in order to distribute foreign products; and (3) the necessity of first showing a film to a professional audience, in substitution of the oldtime trade show, before it can be booked to the trade.

Sees Advantage to Americans

"The removal of the first point in future regulations—or, at least if the present one stands, to have it apply to all alike—would be a distinct advantage to Americans, for as it now obtains the American exchange quite often find attractive desired play dates booked ahead with local unfinished product.

"If the internal permits could be made transferable, there would not recur a situation of the latest playing season in which some American companies did not have enough permits while others had too many, yet, because they were not transferable, the excess permits had to be returned to the ministry of the interior. Furthermore, the market price of permits would drop substantially, since all permits issued would be transferable instead of the smaller portion of the whole, which is awarded for export returns only, as at present.

"The third point has not greatly affected the American trade, although the real reason for this restriction in the regulations is not known. In any event, it is not believed that it means much to the local trade, and it might be removed subsequently."

Fan Writer Turns Actor

Viola Waldmier, formerly motion picture editor for Central Press at the Cleveland headquarters, and previously associated with several fan magazines, has taken up acting under the name of Viola Ilma and is currently playing a collegiate in "Cloudy With Showers" at the Morosco theatre in New York.

Writ Under Copyright Law Given Pathe in Newark Case

An injunction under the Copyright Law has been granted RKO Pathe restraining the Metropolitan Exchange, Newark, N. J., from further distribution of Pathe prints. Judge William Clark of the New Jersey District Court held, in granting the injunction, that unauthorized exhibition of motion pictures was infringement under the Copyright Law, a subject which figured in the defense of the exchange.

Final hearings in the case, which grew out of the seizure of 1,700 Pathe prints, alleged to have been held without license, will be conducted next month.

TRADE ★★★★★ MARK

Paramount Pictures

Better Late!

M. A. Lightman, Memphis theatre owner and better known as president of the MPTOA, accidentally set a personal record on a recent Sunday. He acquired two new theatres in Fort Smith, Ark., and was scheduled to open both on that Sunday, one with "Monkey Business," the other with "Devotion," at 2 o'clock. Came the vital hour but came no pictures. The Marx effort was lost in Memphis, and Ann Harding's cinematic troubles were stranded in Oklahoma City. Followed 15 long distance calls by M.A., as a result of which "Monkey Business" was rushed by plane and "Devotion" by taxicab, both converging upon Fort Smith and M. A. in time to start both shows at 3:30. Is that an omen, or what?

Deal for Hughes-Franklin Theatres Out; Dickinson

Glen W. Dickinson is contemplating the addition of several theatres to his circuit in Kansas-Missouri, he announced when he returned from the west coast. He said negotiations for Hughes-Franklin theatres in the Midwest division did not go through. While in Los Angeles he conferred with Harold B. Franklin, president of Hughes-Franklin. Dickinson spent three weeks on the coast and was accompanied by E. S. Olsmith, who recently resigned as feature salesmanager of Tiffany-Sono Art in Kansas City to become his assistant. Dickinson's visit to the coast was marred by receipt of a telegram notifying him of the bombing of the Bijou Theatre in Kansas City in the dispute with the operators' union.

$5,743,255 Net 6 Months Report From Paramount

Paramount Publix Corporation reports consolidated net profits of $5,743,255.34 for the six months and $2,227,603.12 for the three months ended June 27, 1931, including earnings of subsidiary companies after deducting all charges and reserves for federal income and other taxes.

These earnings are equal to 70 cents for the three months and $1.82 for the six months on common stock outstanding. This compares with $8,441,212 for the six months and $3,606,444 for the three months ended June 28, 1930.

McConnell Resigns U Post

Fred J. McConnell, who has been Universal short-subject sales manager for the past four years, resigned this week. He plans to assume a sales post with another company as soon as his successor has been appointed by Universal.

LATEST WILLIAM FOX RUMOR ON SAME SPIKE

Report Bankers Slate Him for Return to Power Falls on Same Five-Year Agreement

William Fox, evidently, is blessed with a fairy godmother in the person of one who finds active occupation as author of reports that the former film leader contemplates reentrance into the motion picture industry. Fox's reported comeback is painted as one of impressiveness and colorful splendor and as heralding the return of Fox as a giant of the industry, dominating the enterprises with which his name has been mysteriously linked by the anonymous purveyor of rumors.

The Latest Rumor

In recent months, it has been said on various occasions that Fox had actually acquired control of Columbia Pictures. This was followed by a report that he was set to resume control of the Fox corporations. Then came a yarn about Fox's supposed negotiations with Carl Laemmle for the purchase of Universal, which preceded further rumors of assuming operating power of Fox Film and its subsidiary units.

All of these fanciful stories, however, and many others of like nature, have failed to materialize. And the reason is simple; they are highly improbable, practically impossible. But this, apparently, has failed to daunt the fearless author, or authors of the reports who this week, again under a cloak of anonymity, planted a "sure-fire tip" for everyone to jump aboard the band-wagon and buy Fox Film "A" stock because "the bankers are about to turn back operating power of the companies to William Fox!"

But the Agreement Is—

The truth of the matter is that Fox must stay out of the picture business, by the terms of an agreement made with the Harley Clarke interests at the time Clarke purchased the Fox companies from William Fox. This contract, a five-year agreement, still has 3½ years to run before its expiration, and Fox would forfeit the millions paid him for his controlling interests in the corporations if he participated in its violation. Which is unlikely.

Fox's re-entrance by way of the Fox companies, though not totally impossible, is so improbable as to border on the impossible. He would have to be placed there by Harley L. Clarke, president, or in the event that the Fox companies failed to pay quarterly dividend of $1 for four consecutive quarters, and if Fox held a majority number of "A" shares, the right to elect seven out of 12 directors would automatically pass to Fox or any other majority "A" owner. Both of which factors are more than slightly remote.

Wall Street observers of motion picture operations are of the opinion that since his exit from the industry, William Fox has, under assumed names, been buying large blocks of "A" stock, but repeated telephone and telegraphic requests made to William Fox for verification have gone unanswered.

Fox Midwest Seeks Kansas Referendum On Sunday Shows

Referendums in various cities in Kansas to determine the attitude of the citizens toward Sunday shows may be undertaken in the near future, according to information obtained from Fox Midwest offices in Kansas City.

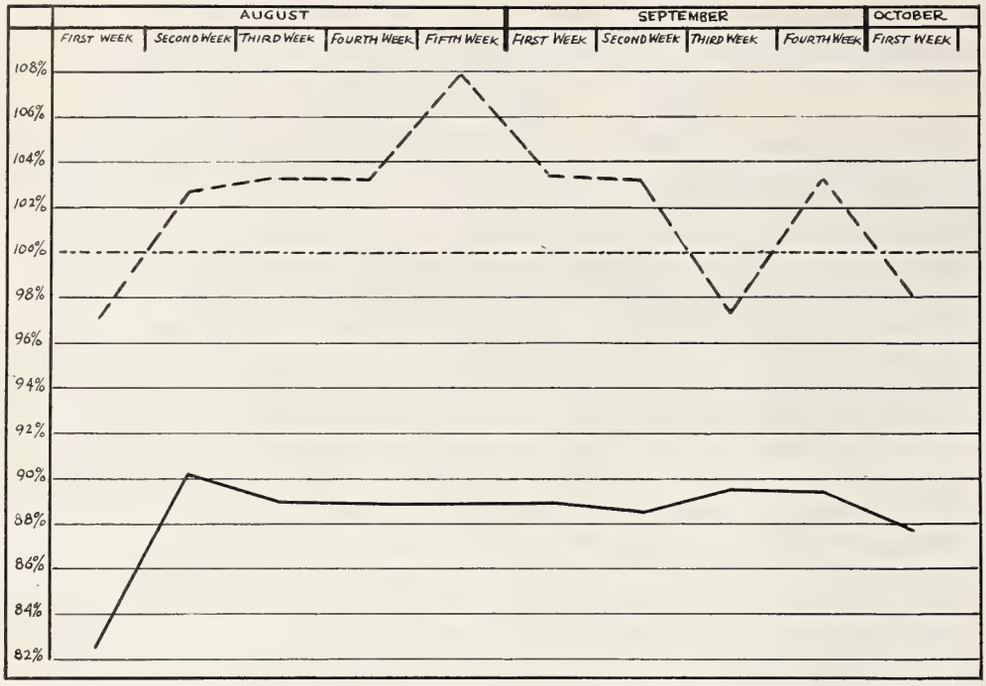
The position of E. C. Rhoden, division manager of the circuit, is that none of his houses will show Sunday unless public sentiment has crystallized in favor of this operation.

Hearing on Fox Midwest's petition to make the temporary injunction permanent will be Thursday before Federal Judge John C. Pollock in Kansas City, Kan. Roland Boynton, attorney general, and county attorneys named as defendants announce they will ask denial of this petition and dissolution of the temporary restrainer.

Regardless of the outcome of the hearing, the losing party will take the case to the United States court of appeals, from where it will go to the Supreme Court.

While the Wichita blue law sector is quiet for the time being, the fight is flaring in Barton county, where Warren L. Weber, owner of the Ellinwood Theatre, Ellinwood, Kan., is preparing a defense in an indictment charging him with 12 counts of violating the Sunday labor law. His operator was also arrested. Weber is determined to take the case to a higher court if convicted.

An attempt by Fox Midwest to open two theatres last Sunday in Ft. Scott was prevented when the ministerial alliance prepared an attack on the grounds that a local ordinance prohibited the move.



Mayer Invites Industry Heads to Academy Awards Dinner

Invitations to attend the annual awards dinner of the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences were extended to industry chieftains by Louis B. Mayer at a luncheon given in his honor at the Army and Navy Club, New York, this week by Will H. Hays. Among those in attendance were: Hiram S. Brown, Harley Clarke, Robert H. Cochrane, Jack Cohn, Earl W. Hammons, Col. Jason Joy, Jesse L. Lasky, Maurice MacKenzie, Lee Marcus, John E. Otterson, J. Robert Rubin, Joseph M. Schenck, Nicholas M. Schenck, Harry M. Warner, Albert Warner and Adolph Zukor.

The Academy awards will be made in Hollywood, November 10.

Larry Urbach With Eckels

Larry Urbach has become associated with Eddie Eckels in the publication of "How," West Coast periodical.

The chart shows the box office receipts in 26 cities for the 10 weeks including August and September and the first week in October. The unevenly broken line (—— — ——) shows the average receipts during the year 1930. The evenly broken line (— — —) represents the receipts for ten weeks period in 1930 and the unbroken line shows the receipts for the same length of time this year. These comparisons are drawn from the HERALD'S weekly compilation of theatre intake throughout the country.

Erpi, RCA Refuse Further Cuts in Service Charges

Neither Electrical Research Products nor RCA Photophone contemplate further reductions in service charges, it is understood, despite agitation of exhibitors. Both companies cut prices during the spring upon representations of the boards of directors of the MPTOA and Allied States, national exhibitor groups.

The companies contend that charges now are reasonable and that further reductions will impair the service rendered. They express the feeling that the service charge is better understood today than heretofore, and that it is not resented by exhibitors, despite the efforts designed to bring about its removal.

Further action by various exhibitor organizations either has been made or is understood to be contemplated in an effort to have service charges reduced by both Erpi and RCA Photophone. Units of both national exhibitor organizations are asking cuts, contending that repairs and emergency calls which were constant in the early days of sound are no longer necessary, which should be reflected in reduced service charges.

Pathe News Lab Sale Waits Closing of Legal Matters

Steps in the sale of the Pathe News Laboratory in Jersey City, by RKO to Consolidated Film Industries, were in assorted states of progress this week. It is understood that the business aspects of the deal had been completed but in the words of Ralph Poucher of the Consolidated offices, some legal matters were yet to be adjusted and closed.

The big Pathe laboratory at Bound Brook, N. J., remains the property of Pathe Exchange, Inc., as it was not included in the sale of sundry Pathe assets in last December's deal with Radio. The newsreel laboratory was, despite the efforts of Pathe to sell the Bound Brook plant, preferred by RKO. The sale of this week was negotiated by Frank O'Heron, vice president of RKO Radio Pictures.

Plant Shut Down

Upon the taking over of the Jersey City property by Consolidated Film Industries the plant was shut down immediately and all employees dismissed instantly without notice. Some of them had been in the service of the laboratory and Pathe News for fifteen to twenty years.

The quadruplex printing machine, a special Pathe device for rapid printing of news releases, evolved and constructed in the Pathe shops at Bound Brook, was removed from the news laboratory to the Consolidated plant in Fort Lee. Under the terms of the sale of the laboratory from Pathe Exchange, Inc., to RKO only shop rights, or the right to print Pathe News and Pathe Review, were transmitted with the sale of the plant. Some possibly significant aspects of the film developing machine patent situation are involved. Pathe's developing machines are among the oldest, if not the oldest, in the history of the industry and at various times have been reconstructed and improved under various French and American patents.

Move Begun Two Years Ago

H. J. Yates of Consolidated more than two years ago began moves aimed at getting control of the Pathe laboratories, which held something akin to an economy record in the production of quality prints.

The price involved in the sale of the news laboratory was not disclosed, but it is understood that the amount involved was determined in relation to a contingent contract by which Consolidated is given all of the laboratory work of all RKO interests, including Radio Pictures, RKO Pathe and Pathe News and Review. Under prior arrangements and relations Pathe News alone consumed something near to two millions of feet of Dupont positive film. The Yates plants use Eastman stock exclusively.

Induct Pep Club Officers

New officers were installed this week at a meeting of the Paramount Pep Club, organization of employees. They include: Dr. Emanuel Stern, president; Chris Beute, vice president; Homer S. Thaw, treasurer; Doris Meyer, secretary and the following board of governors: Fred L. Metzler, J. J. Doughney, Charles E. Gartner, M. F. Gowthorpe, Lillian Stevens and Ida Wolfe.

Al Steffes, Allied northwest general manager, has returned to Minneapolis from Chicago where he has been aiding independents in their battle for a one-man booth.

Britain Reduces Budget Tax Raise On Small Houses

Following trade agitation, the British chancellor of the exchequer has agreed to support a reduction in the increases proposed to the entertainments tax, under his crisis budget.

Particular trade objection was raised to the greater increase which he had proposed to levy on the lower paid seats, and as a result he has reduced the tax increase on 6d (12 cents) seats to 1d (2 cents) instead of 1½d (3 cents), and has exempted from tax all seats up to 2d. Previously only children's 2d matinees were to remain exempt.

The C.E.A. practically has decided to recommend its members to pass on the additional entertainments tax to the public, but in many districts the feeling exists that this course will be found impossible, without effecting a reduced patronage.—W. H. M., London.

German Sound Independents Fight The Tobis Monopoly

Independent German sound equipment manufacturers are centering their efforts in Berlin about an attempt to have the government issue a decree against the virtual monopoly which they claim Tobis-Klangfilm has established in the sound equipment field.

PASSING IN REVIEW

The department endeavors to set forth two lines of material of service to the exhibitor—first a showman's evaluations of the outstanding pictures—second, reviews of information

"MONKEY BUSINESS" has about everything a showman can ask for in a picture. By everything, we mean "box office" pull and tremendous "audience" value. To undertake a long and wordy discourse on a picture with so many outstanding qualities is a waste of both your time and mine, so I won't attempt it; I'll merely say what little there remains to tell you and then pass on to another picture.

Wherever the Marx Brothers have appeared before, this attraction will spell instant box office success. Where they will make this their first screen bow in some community that never had an opportunity of laughing at their antics, this one is still "box office," but will require some help in merchandising; with such help it should hardly require any worry about the results in receipts.

The title, in addition to the stars' names, is another excellent reason why they ought to come out as they rarely do. "Monkey" around with that title to your heart's content, but don't go spending a whole lot of money selling it. Just let them know you've got it at your house via your usual selling mediums, and just so long as you know that everybody will hear that you're playing it, so long can you rest assured that they will hardly pass up your theatre.

Regardless of the fact that much of the dialogue will pass over the heads of many a small town audience, they will nevertheless laugh their heads off at them just as the customers did at the New York Rivoli. The "wisecracks" fly thick and fast, but even with most of the dialogue eliminated, their acting and hell-raising would still create a riot of laughter anywhere.

But, here, I've promised to say very little about this "box office" natural and I'm getting as gabby as an old maid at a picnic. Just see how soon you can get it booked into your house and then find ways and means of squeezing in a couple a hundred standees more at each performance. No kidding, boys, here's money in your pocket. Don't pass it up. It would be a dirty trick on the theatre and the customers.

"GET RICH QUICK WALLINGFORD" has plenty of Jimmie (Schnozzola) Durante, not too much of William Haines, a neat slice of Ernest Torrence, plus the feminine appeal of Leila Hyams. Story? Well, it has been done to death ever since movies reached the grown-up stage of super-specials. But since our job is to talk about its box office value, we might just as well tell you now as any other time: it IS a peach of a box office bet because your audience will enjoy 'most every minute of it and even sympathize with poor Bill while he's trying to stall the stockholders off until the money arrives.

Durante will go big with patrons in the Loop or on Main Street because his humor is natural and he doesn't try to act at all. He's just himself, and though that may not mean much as an expression or description to anybody away from Times Square, it best describes what we mean. He'll grab off many a laugh and they'll be looking for him the next time he's at your theatre. That's why it pays to play him up strong. He's "box office" material for every house and to let him slip by without mention in this, his first, will be to hurt his box office value the next time he shows up.

There should be all the selling slants your heart desires in the title and stars. Being the kind of a picture it is, it offers many worthwhile angles to build up your campaign, either through newspaper advertising, exploitation, or both. Just create the interest and those who attend will tell their neighbors about it. That's the kind of word-of-mouth advertising it will start. And the audience will be all with the three swindlers when they put it over on the detective at the finish of the picture.

Being an "audience" picture means that the patrons will enjoy it, so don't worry about satisfying them. As for the kid slant, whatever is crooked about the story will hardly interest them. They'll be too busy laughing at "Schnozzola" to let the swindle angle sink in very deep. So if you want to play it on a weekend, go to it.

"SMART WOMAN." . . . "How would you like a sock on the nose?" . . . represents the single, solitary line of "mass appeal" in a picture jammed full of smart and sophisticated dialogue for the "classes." Yet, it is an interesting audience picture wherever you can appeal with any measure of success to the women of your patronage. Make no mistake, if your audience likes what the women patrons like, you'll bring home a goodly amount of receipts with "Smart Woman," but if they shy away from this kind of "dialogue fencing" between women, then you're sunk.

Selling angles are not lacking for the showman who knows how to sell the women a "bill of goods." You'll have as many as your brain can create, providing you tackle the task with some enthusiasm. The regular HERALD review will tell you enough about the picture to provide you with material, so I'll not attempt it here.

"Box office" appeal lies solely on your customers' likes for smart stuff of this kind. I suspect that the houses on Main Street will find that there's not too much b. o. appeal to this title. In "audience" value, I can see no reason why it shouldn't satisfy the majority of patrons except where Hoot Gibson is the favorite. Then, we're sorry for you.

So roll up your sleeves, read up all you can about the plot (such as it is) and try to put this over, more on the strength of the women appeal than its story value. Sell it to the women as much as you can in the hopes that the menfolk will trail along with them to see what it's all about.

One thing you can rest assured of: the audience will never suffer from mental fatigue because they followed the feminine duel for a man who didn't seem to possess any great amount of reason to duel over. In fact, two women sitting behind me thought Mary Astor should have married the Sir Guy and let the blonde have the husband. We were quite ready to agree.

Since we've told you it is "smart, sophisticated" entertainment, you know that it's not for the youngsters. They will be bored to death at the whole proceedings. Keep it for the middle of the week or wherever you spot your adult pictures.

"THE ROAD TO RENO" should prove good "box office" for the large towns and cities, but the smaller communities may find it tough selling in view of the worn-out divorce theme. Then again, no one will go into a song and dance over the finish where the darlin' son kills Mom's latest husband-to-be and then commits sewer-pipes. But, that's the movies all over.

As to its "audience" value; we should venture the opinion that it will please the average patron who is not inclined to pick his or her entertainment to pieces and see what makes the wheels go 'round. The chief task of every showman is to create some sort of a campaign that will live down the title and make the prospective customer feel that there is really worthwhile diversion in the attraction. We say this on the theory that if they can be pulled into the theatre, they will be satisfied with the picture.

Being the kind of a story it is, "Road to Reno" is not exactly the choice of the "Better Films for Children" movement, so try to shy away from the days when the youngsters flock to the house. That will eliminate lots of adverse comment regarding you and your theatre. It is strictly adult entertainment and should be sold as such. The stars are plentiful enough for a single attraction and without too much effort you can plug this one a little harder than usual in an effort to get them to the b. o. window.

Most of the foregoing comment is based on the small city angle. In the larger towns and cities you will find it a good box office picture with all the audience strength that you want. Selling it in such spots is going to be a lot easier than the smaller communities, so this is another case where the big-city boys get a break.

"FREE SOUL." In view of the fact that this picture has been released in so many sections of the country, this comment may be too late for any help. Nevertheless, for the benefit of those who are still to play it, and every house should play a picture like this, we venture these few remarks about a production that is really one of the finest of the year.

While the story has been built around the role played by Norma Shearer, it still remains Lionel Barrymore's picture in more ways than one. I say this without any desire to take away one iota of credit for Miss Shearer's wonderful work. But the patrons are going to go home talking more about Barrymore than Shearer. His acting is nothing short of marvelous, and coming along about the same time—in general release—as "Guilty Hands," it is going to boost his drawing power skyhigh.

About the only thing I didn't like about this picture was the title. The reason why I say this is because it makes you believe that you're going to see something different than it is. But smart showmanship and merchandising can overcome whatever drawbacks there may be to that title so as to give you every opportunity to cash in with S. R. O. as you should when you play a picture of this kind.

The very nature of the plot eliminates it from children draw entirely. Not that they would grasp the idea a hundred per cent, but it would be dangerous just the same. You have sufficient adult appeal in this outstanding picture to overlook the youngsters and if possible to emphasize the fact that it is not a picture for them.

As the old saying goes, "Better late than never." So that's what we must say about "A Free Soul." It's a great picture, boys, and should do business anywhere and everywhere. Sell it as strong as you want to. Promise them the greatest entertainment of the season. You won't be telling an untruth.

The Champ

(MGM)

Drama

(Seen at Hollywood)

For "The Champ," viewed at the Alexander theatre M-G-M may feel entitled to claim laurels for another fine picture, as it received a tremendous ovation from the audience. More blue ribbons go to Wallace Beery and Jackie Cooper, for their performances were the reasons for most of the applause. Irene Rich and Hale Hamilton also came in for their share, as indeed did every member of the cast. It might be said that there are two climaxes to the story, but it was termed so well directed and acted that these do not detract from the story value.

Beery has the title role of "The Champ." Though out of the ring for several years because of drink, Beery is still, in the eyes of his son, "the best fighter in the whole world."

Dink, the son, played by Jackie Cooper, believes that his father will make a comeback. Two promoters are about to sign the "Champ" for a comeback match, but he is discovered intoxicated. This disheartens Dink, but Beery gambles his last dollar the next day and wins a horse for the boy, who names the new pet "Little Champ."

"Little Champ" is raced at Agua Caliente. Irene Rich and her husband, Hale Hamilton, attend the races. She recognizes in Dink her son by a former marriage to Beery. Anxious to see the boy, she has Hamilton pay Beery to bring him to their home. Beery will not listen to pleas to send the boy to school until he finds himself in jail on account of a drunken brawl.

Dink is sent away with his mother to New York, but as the train stops at San Diego he jumps off and returns to his father, who, gladdened by his son's return, goes into training. Warned not to fight, Beery goes into the ring, and, because he wants to prove himself a winner to Dink, takes a terrible beating, but wins the match. As he goes into the dressing room he collapses and dies, leaving his son wild with grief. Dink's mother comes in and takes him into her arms as the picture ends.

The Yellow Ticket

(Fox)

Drama

(Seen at Hollywood)

Featured by acknowledged outstanding performances from Elissa Landi and Lionel Barrymore, Fox's production of "The Yellow Ticket," directed by Raoul Walsh, held a San Bernardino audience to close attention.

"The Yellow Ticket" is a story of Russia before the World War, in 1913, and concerns a Jewish girl who finds herself in possession of the dread "yellow ticket," carried by women beyond the pale and recognized by the police as admitting its holder anywhere as a passport. The girl in this case has obtained her ticket in order to get to St. Petersburg to see her father, who was in prison and who died there. Marya (Elissa Landi) does not return to her home because she learns that the police would inform her mother that she has a "yellow ticket," so she obtains a position with a perfume company.

On her travels she meets a young British journalist, who befriends her and, in return, she tells him the true stories of Russia which he writes for papers in England and America. These stories infuriate the czar's representative (Lionel Barrymore), who sets about to learn the source of the articles. Faced with the alternative of seeing her lover imprisoned, for she and the journalist have fallen in love, Marya kills the baron.

The Englishman, aided by the invasion of Russia by Austria at the beginning of the great war, takes the girl with him to England in a dispatch plane, eluding capture by the Cossacks in a breath-taking moment.

Produced and distributed by Fox. From the stage play by Michael Morton. Screen play by Jules Furthman. Dialogue by Guy Bolton. Edited by Jack Murray. Directed by Raoul Walsh. Cameraman, James Howe. Sound by Don Flick. Release date, November 15, 1931.

Are These Our Children

Drama

When a director makes a picture of epic proportions, an outstanding "big production" such as "Cimarron," he faces a problem in the selection and making of his next one. Every one, from the studio gateman to the film salesmen in the exchanges, expects him to make another big one, or, to flop.

Wesley Ruggles, who directed "Cimarron," has answered the old challenge by writing his own story and making a picture which is certain to provoke lively discussion. "Are These Our Children?" is likely to be hailed both as a masterful preachment against the "wild youth" of the day and, on the other hand, as a pessimistic picture of modern youngsters. But it will be talked about, and that makes business.

Ruggles was fortunate in the selection of his lead. Eric Linden's remarkable performance as the boy who gets into bad company and lands in the shadow of the electric chair, does much to give the story compelling realism. We will be seeing more of this Linden boy. He has the goods.

While the entire story revolves around the adventures of Linden, he is well supported by the reliable Beryl Mercer, by William Orlamond and a group of young people including Arline Judge, particularly effective as the jazz mad sweetie, Rochelle Hudson, Roberta Gale, Mary Kornman and Ben Alexander.

The story revolves around a boy who quits high school because he loses an oratorical contest. He gets in with a boisterous crowd of youngsters who play the public dance halls and the chop suey parlors. Gin and jazz begin to take their toll. Petty robberies follow. And then, his brain crazed by liquor, a murder. A novel idea lies in asking the audience, after the picture, what punishment the boy should receive.

Ruggles has done a sincere and competent job. And he certainly has brought to immediate attention a very fine juvenile in Eric Linden, who should go far. Whether Mr. and Mrs. Public believe them to be their children, or yours, will cause plenty of discussion, and there can be no argument against the moral lesson it teaches. The adaptation from Ruggles' story was done expertly by Howard Estabrook, who also shared with Ruggles the honors of "Cimarron." They make a very capable team.

Western

The particular western film fan should derive a sufficient amount of enjoyment from this latest of the Ken Maynard efforts for Tiffany, to judge by the representative members of that group of the public who witnessed the picture at a New York neighborhood house.

The audience voiced its approval when the action of the fast-moving western reached its suspensive moments or when humorous moments relieved the tension momentarily. Lina Basquette, playing opposite Maynard, was thought to have done a satisfactory piece of work.

The story has to do with a certain Captain Porter, who has a neat method of villainy. He buys cattle from wealthy ranchers, pays for them in cash, and then sees to it that they are murdered and robbed, causing the guilt to fall in some other direction. Maynard is shot by the gang, and comes on the scene of the robbing and murdering, but in a helpless condition, since he had been brought to the ranch by the daughter after being wounded. He is thought to be the murderer and becomes a hunted criminal.

The young rancher, however, though hunted, does a little hunting on his own account, with the result that he discovers the guilty desperado, sees him killed by his own methods, and returns to win the daughter, with whom he had fallen in love.

There is plenty of hard riding in the film, with Ken Maynard doing more than his fair share, and a wealth of the gun-toting which delights the heart of a western fan, whether young or old. Much splendid scenery of the western desert variety adds to the effectiveness of the film as a background and serves as a romping place for Maynard's unusual actor-horse, Tarzan.

Produced and distributed by Tiffany. Directed by Phil Rosen. Story, continuity and dialogue by John Francis Natteford. Release date, September 1, 1931. Running time, 64 minutes.

The Inn at the Rhine

(Tobis)

Musical Comedy

Another musical effort from German studios occupies the current screen at the Europa, one of New York's intimate cinemas, and as has come to be expected from this type of film from Germany, is strikingly melodious in its musical content, of which there is, naturally, much.

The story is incidental to the production as a whole, providing opportunity for numerous solo, duo and chorus, male and female, vocal efforts, all rendered most effectively, comment of the audience indicated. Featured were Kaethe Dorsch, German actress, making her screen debut and doing her work most competently. Her voice is excellent, and the dramatic ability which she displays goes far toward making her performance delightful. Opposite is Hans Heinz Bollman, opera tenor and radio singer, who appears to great advantage in his role, since vocally and dramatically he is every bit as able as his partner. The featured number which is carried throughout the film story, is particularly of the stuff, from the melody standpoint, of which "hit" songs are made. Rendered often by the two feature players and by the chorus in the closing scene, it is a striking number of the musical comedy variety.

The story concerns the attractive owner of a hostelry on the Rhine, played by Miss Dorsch, who falls in love with a new college professor, in the person of Bollmann. The attraction is mutual, but complications arise when an attempt is made on the part of the parents of a pretty young student (Maria Elsner) to conclude a match between the girl and the professor. But Maria is in love with another student, who happens to be the brother of Miss Dorsch. As a result of the effort, Maria and her student have a falling out and Miss Dorsch, seeing her professor with the young girl, leaves him in a huff.

It is all straightened out, of course, and principally through the good efforts of Oskar Sabo as the father of the girl, who, at the same time, contributes a good bit of comedy to the film. One sequence pictures a bit of the beautiful Rhine scenery, and throughout is the background of the German inn, the students, singing of course, and the filled beer steins which seem to be fundamental to any German effort. The balance of the cast was termed adequate, with Fritz Schulz, as the student; Hermann Schaufuss and Frigga Braut, as the German tourist and his wife doing particularly effective work.

Produced by Tobis. Distributed by Associated Cinemas of America. Directed by Georg Jacoby. Music by Michael Krausz. Settings by Max Heinbronner. Photography by Otto Kanturek and Heinrich Balasch. Release date, September 23, 1931. Running time, 90 minutes.

Girls About Town

(Paramount)

Another version of how smart little girls entertain big business men from Michigan (for a consideration) so they will sign fat orders, is rendered on a gorgeous scale by Paramount in "Girls About Town." Of course, one little girl falls in love and goes straight, while the other one sends the visiting boy friend back to his wife, and then returns to her "profession."

Lilyan Tashman and Kay Francis are the blonde and brunette who step out for $500 a night, or $1,000 the week-end, plus tips, or what they can dig. Needless to say, they are quite fascinating. There is a fashion-show ranging from the latest in lingerie and evening gowns to the smartest in bathing suits and yachting apparel. The sets are the last word in "moderne" as Lucille Gleason, in the role of the heartbroken mother back-home, puts it. Joel McCrea is potently convincing as the lover who won't fall for careless girls, unless they reform. Eugene Pallette does a most amusing job as the husband who is in from Lansing for no good purpose.

"Girls About Town" is strictly adult fare. Handsomely, lavishly mounted, with a cast thoroughly competent to extract every ounce of humor, satire and drama from the story, it sets a fast pace and keeps it. Very fast, at times. It is from a story by Zoe Akins, artfully adapted by Raymond Griffith and Brian Marlow. George Cukor directed it with skill and Ernest Haller's photography leaves nothing to be desired.

Experts who attended the preview said it was "box office."

Produced and distributed by Paramount. Story by Zoe Akins. Screen play by Raymond Griffith and Brian Marlow. Directed by George Cukor. Photography by Ernest Haller. Release date, November 7, 1931.

Once A Lady

(Paramount)

Drama

(Seen at Hollywood)

The audience which saw "Once a Lady" at the Ritz theatre on the Coast recently was much impressed with the fine performance given, but was hardly enthusiastic about the story, which they seemed to think had rather too much talk.

Those present were also very sympathetic towards Miss Chatterton, a player who, they felt, was entitled to better roles. The story of a Russian woman who marries into an English family seemed not to be the kind of a story most suitable to Miss Chatterton's talents.

When Geoffrey Kerr, an Englishman, is married to Miss Chatterton, a Russian, his family objects and makes her life miserable. Finally she leaves England, her husband, home and baby, and goes with Ivor Novello, an artist. Realizing her mistake, she returns only to be an outcast. Her husband divorces her and she becomes a woman with many lovers. Some years later, her daughter, raised in the strict English family, runs away to Paris to join her sweetheart, Bramwell Fletcher. Miss Chatterton is able to prevent them from doing something they would be sorry for and later gets Kerr to treat his daughter more reasonably.

Besides Miss Chatterton, Novello, Jill Esmond, Kerr and Fletcher give performances that met with favorable comment. It was felt that lack of action was somewhat detrimental to the production.

Produced and distributed by Paramount. From the play, "The Second Life," by Rudolf Oesterreicher and Rudolf Bernauer. Directed by Guthrie McClintic. Adaptation by Zoe Akins. Screen play by Zoe Akins and Samuel Hoffenstein. Photography by Charles Lang. Release date, October 31, 1931.

Terror By Night

(J. G. Buchman)

Mystery

A pet ape, murders under strange circumstances, false phone calls and a host of other happenings served to keep the preview audience at the Stadium theatre in a turmoil of tense excitement and appreciative laughter when they saw "Terror by Night," a J. G. Bachman production, directed by Thornton Freeland.

Una Merkel, Zasu Pitts and Purnell Pratt contribute what was termed sterling performances to head a cast of competent players. The story concerns strange happenings in a penthouse, a suicide leap by June Clyde, and the subsequent discovery of the body of Hooper Atchley, from whose apartment the girl had jumped. William Collier, Jr., the girl's brother, is caught as he breaks into the apartment below, occupied by Una Merkel. He is suspected of the murder, as are several others including Ralf Harolde, Nat Pendleton, Rita La Roy and the pet ape. All but Collier have good alibis, but Una Merkel is not satisfied. The lights in the penthouse go off and the engineer, Clyde Cook, is sent for. He is shot by some one in the room. This gives Una Merkel a clue and, after several adventures, she finally tricks the murderer into giving himself away by breaking down his perfect alibi. Rather than give up to the police, he kills himself.

The audience seemed highly amused at the antics of Zasu Pitts as the telephone operator who figured so prominently in the action. The settings were well done, and Robert Planck's photography enhanced the production. Thornton Freeland was accorded unanimous praise for the way in which he maintained the suspense and the deft manner in which he handled the comedy situations.

Produced by J. G. Buchman. Directed by Thornton Freeland. Story, adaptation and dialogue by Sam Spewack, from his novel, "Murder in a Gilded Cage." Edited by Ed Sackin. Photography by Robert Planck.

Medbury Series

(Columbia)

Travel, Curiosities

(Seen at Hollywood)

John P. Medbury, the well-known chatterist, has broken loose again under the management of Walter Futter. Three new travelogues show interesting scenes from Africa, Turkey and Death Valley, while Medbury does his stuff to put humor into the study of geography.

The funniest of the three is the burlesque on African adventures, which is riotous in spots. The Death Valley burlesque contains some trained animal shots that are unique and highly entertaining.

It seems a shame, however, that a man of Medbury's ability as a humorist should so often resort to humor in its lowest form, puns on words. The subjects merit better effort.

Walter Futter also has issued three more of the "Curiosities" subjects, and these, too, have monologues by Medbury. These are unusually interesting short subjects because they bring to us oddities and odd people from all over the world which are often both entertaining and instructive.

Futter is doing a good job with his shorts, which are released through Columbia.

The Great Junction Hotel

(RKO Pathe)

Only Fair

Despite a wealth of names and histrionic ability, this production of the Masquers Club of Hollywood, falls rather far short of good comedy. William Beaudine directed from a story by Lew Litton. Edward Everett Horton and Patsy Ruth Miller as a honeymoon couple and Harry Gribbon as the stupid house detective, have the leading roles, but they have little enough that is really funny with which to work. It all happens in a hotel, with a plenitude of chasing up and down halls and stairs and peeping into keyholes. The girl goes for a walk in her sleep and the husband is accused of murdering her. It is noisy and strong in slapstick, but not really an amusing comedy attempt. Running time, 18 minutes.

The Girl Rush

Good

A college campus comedy, and of course, co-ed. The two boys are thinking of the same girl, and both get mixed up in a midnight party in the girls' dormitory. Trying to evade, they are both in bad, and when one stages an elopement with the other's girl, the other goes after him, followed by the dean and the boy's father in an ancient automobile. The most amusing spot in the film is the wild car chase and the antics of the dean in the old car. Some good laughs.—Running time, 20 minutes.

THE INFINITE VARIETY

They come in assorted sizes and shapes, with various likes and dislikes. What's a passion for one is a poison for another.

You can't please the infinite variety with a type of entertainment based on a singular appeal. Load your box-office guns for a broadside. Shoot at the masses. Back your feature with comedies and novelties that balance your program.

It takes all kinds of people to make a world and several types of pictures to please them.

You need Educational's program for the big brother and the weak sister. Short subjects for every show, and a whole show in every one of them.

ANDY CLYDE in
"TAXI TROUBLES"
Produced by
MACK SENNETT
A Romeo driver who forgets his fares for the fair ones. Thrills and laughs with the brakes off.

"THAT'S MY MEAT"
with AL ST. JOHN
CAMEO Comedy
Athletic Al in a fun and pun hit from Hittsville.

"UP POPS THE DUKE"
with George Chandler and Helen Bolton
A MERMAID Comedy
Real whiskers! False whiskers! And laughs!

"THE GIRL RUSH"
VANITY COMEDY
An AL CHRISTIE Production
A bevy of co-ed beauties and a broadside of laughs.

"THE TRAP"
WILLIAM J. BURNS
Detective Mystery
Another thriller—and one of the best from the actual records of the world's greatest detective

FAST AS A MUSTANG! CLEAN AS A WHISTLE!

BILL CODY AND ANDY SHUFORD 8 WESTERNS

Two-gun, two-fisted Bill Cody and young Andy Shuford in a series of 8 six-reel Western Features tingling with red-blooded action and teeming with human interest and heart appeal.

"Big brother" type of stories rounded up from the glamorous places of the glorious West. They'll bring the kids on the run and keep 'em shouting with glee; the grown-ups will turn out, too, for the rip-roaring ridin' and six-cylinder clashes of wits and mits.

You've had "Skippy", "Tom Sawyer" and "Penrod and Sam" and now Bill and Andy come galloping across the screen to give you action—and plenty of it—at the box-office.

Finished

"DUGAN OF THE BADLANDS"
"THE MONTANA KID"
"OKLAHOMA JIM"
"LAND OF WANTED MEN"

Coming

"LAW OF THE NORTH"
"SO THIS IS TEXAS"
"MASON OF THE MOUNTED"
"THE GHOST CITY"

WABASH AVE

CHICAGO

When it comes to "naturals" there seems little room for improvement on the opening at the State-Lake theatre of Universal's "The Spirit of Notre Dame" on the eve of the big football classic between the Irish and Northwestern at Soldiers' Field. The State-Lake probably will get a couple of new change makers after the exercises the machines were put through the day of the big game.

Until some one else enters the field, Al Perritz of National Screen Service can lay claim to the distinction of being the industry's champion lobster consumer. Al won his laurels in Milwaukee the other day, when, on a bet, he stowed away three crustaceans weighing three and a half pounds each. Al is willing to prove his claims to any doubters provided they will underwrite the cost of the demonstration.

Bill Drake, Pathe booker, has resigned and has been succeeded by Nicholas Humm. Humm comes from the RKO office in Indianapolis, where he was booker.

Louis Breka has remodeled the Parkside theatre and is now operating the house under the name of The Gold Coast.

E. A. Laughlin has taken over the Erie on North Clark street. The house has been remodeled, equipped with new sound and given an almost highbrow name, Town Talkies.

A. Schnitzer, manager of the short-subject department of Pathe, visited the local exchange on the tour he is making to various branch offices.

Felix Mendelssohn, branch manager on the eve of becoming a benedict, found himself surrounded by consoling and well-wishing friends at a bachelors' party at Medinah Athletic Club last Friday.

And speaking of benedicts, there is L. G. Rorer of the Dixon theatre, Dixon, Ill., who is now on his honeymoon.

Out-of-town exhibitors spotted along Film Row last week included J. McSpadden of the West and Colonial theatres, Galesburg, Ill.: B. Hoig of Momence and Watseka, Ill.; Julius Goldberg of the La Porte theatre, La Porte, Ind., and J. Weece of the Galva theatre, Galva, Ill.

I. Edelson has reopened the Lakeshore theatre at Belmont and Broadway.

Budd Rogers, general sales manager of Sono Art-World Wide-Tiffany, held a conference in Chicago with William Weinshenker, local manager, C. Dresenforfer, Indianapolis manager, and J. H. Harris, Milwaukee branch head. Rogers has closed with B. & K. and Great States for his product.

Good pictures are beating the depression, in the opinion of Eddie Grossman, United Artists branch manager. The generally fine tone of the new season's product is bringing the public to the theatres. Grossman believes that good pictures lure patrons to the box office even though they may be financially pinched.

Educational Plant Is Active With Five Now In Production

Present production at the Educational studios on the Coast includes a new Mermaid number "Once a Hero," with Frances Dean and Jack Shutta and "Moonlight and Cactus" with Tom Patricola. Two others, as yet untitled, are starting in work, one featuring Andy Clyde.

A new Torchy number, with Ray Cooke and Dorothy Dix featured is being cut and edited. Title is "Torchy Passes the Buck." A third in the new Vanities series has also gone into production at the Metropolitan studios, under supervision of Al Christie.

New Type Frame Developed

A new-type low-priced card frame has been placed on the market by C. A. Jones, Kansas City film man, who intends to market the frame nationally. The innovation in the frame is that it stands or hangs perpendicularly or horizontally. It is adapted to any type of card, and is made in three sizes: 11 x 14, 14 x 22 and 7 x 11. Of 26-gauge steel, the frames are covered with a black enamel.

Babe Ruth On Coast

Babe Ruth has arrived on the Coast to make five baseball pictures for Universal, as a part of the Universal-Christy Walsh All America Sports series.

CONDUCTED BY AN EXHIBITOR FOR EXHIBITORS

You and Your Job!

HAVE you ever been out of a job? . . . Walked from office to office with your heart sinking deeper and deeper after each . . . "Nothing doing"? . . . And hopefully waiting for the mailman who never brings what you are waiting or hoping for . . . ? And trying to cheer up the "little woman" when all the time you are getting more desperate in your need for some sort of a job . . . ?

And did you ever have to go through an experience like it week after week . . . ? Month after month . . . ? Meeting the men who you were sure would help you to a connection . . . only to find that even though they would like to, they can do nothing . . . and those other "pals" who were always ready to ask for help . . . but seemed to forget when you needed a little . . . "fair-weather" friends we've heard them called . . . It's a tough thing to go through . . . but you'll never really appreciate how tough it really is until you've had a dose of it yourself . . . and we're hoping you never will. . . .

And that trek back to the family at the end of a long, dreary, discouraging, heartbreaking day . . . How you dreaded it . . . tried to smile and tell them that you would have better luck "tomorrow" . . . that tomorrow . . . tomorrow . . . tomorrow . . . which never became today.

Truly . . . an experience we wouldn't wish our worst enemy . . . even if we thought we had them any worse than they are . . . and the Lord only knows how we've had to try and smile and be optimistic when all the time we knew there was little hope for those dozens of managers who come in to see if by any chance we know of an opening. . . .

With this lengthy preamble we now devote the rest of our space to beg every showman in the business today to nurse his job along and do everything humanly possible to strengthen his connection . . . work as you've never worked before . . . never mind those extra late or early hours . . . the grind is worth every minute of it . . . beside carrying security from the nightmare of unemployment . . . it gives you the same chance every other man gets to advance yourself in salary and position . . . relatives can't last forever . . . ability must count in the long run. . . .

Temperament . . . ??? Forget it . . . quit nursing a grouch just because the boss overlooked that snappy display you spent hours on . . . don't mind the "riding" . . . if you can take it all with a smile and still deliver the goods you're going to get beneath the skin of the toughest boss who ever came down the pike . . . and once you've earned a rep . . . for being able to take the smacks with the pats . . . you'll find life much sweeter . . . bosses more amiable . . . advancement easier to get . . . Why not . . . everybody loves a fighter . . . but the kind of a fighter who can smile through defeat as well as victory . . . smile through criticisms as well as compliments. . . .

And showmanship . . . ? what a chance to show what you can do . . . pictures coming along—one after another—of the sort that would gladden the hearts of every real showman in the business . . . all pregnant with great exploitation angles . . . full of advertising possibilities . . . Sure . . . there's plenty of opportunity to show the kind of a manager you are . . . take advantage of these fine pictures . . . make your efforts count for money at the box office . . . it's just another way of showing the "higher-ups" that you're on the job and trying your gosh darndest to deliver the goods . . . thereby making your job all the more permanent. . . .

Don't leave a stone unturned in your effort to keep that job of yours . . . work like you've never worked before . . . get along with the grouchiest . . . lousiest boss in the world . . . thank God they're not all that way . . . Drop the dejected look from your face . . . if rumors start rolling . . . Laugh them off . . . have faith in your own ability . . . you must have the courage of your own convictions before you can convince others that your ideas are the right ones . . . experience will take care of that . . . No outfit in the world wants to drop a man who is worth anything at all to them . . . on the contrary . . . they are looking for the right kind of men all the time . . . no theatre owner can afford to keep changing managers . . . they are well aware of the risks they run when they hire new men all the time . . . the house suffers . . . business suffers . . . and they suffer . . . they want steady managers . . . they are willing to meet you . . . at least . . . half way . . . but you must go them one better . . . be willing to meet them three quarters of the way . . . or more . . . if it ever comes to a controversy . . . but better still . . . avoid controversies . . . keep them happy . . . and keep happy yourself. . . .

But for God's sake keep your head and your job . . . don't join the army of unemployed showmen . . . because you will never forget the terrible experience it may lead to . . . and . . . if you have ever been out of work for any length of time . . . then you must know by now that only one who has gone through it could possibly write this heart-to-heart chat. . . .

Business Humming Along Nicely For J. Gray In Hobart

Business has been humming along at the usual gratifying pace with John Gray, manager of the Oklahoman Theatre, Hobart, Okla., and for the benefit of other Round Tablers we'll describe a few recently-tried stunts which have materially aided him to increase box-office receipts on several pictures.

It may be a bit late to pull a bathing beauty contest in some parts of the country but there's still a chance of putting one on in certain sections, particularly if handled as interestingly and profitably as was Gray's.

It happened that the neighboring town of Elk City was opening a new municipal pool and this event was tied-in with the contest, about two-dozen selected girls from a number of towns participating in the finals. Local candidates were chosen by popular acclaim at the theatre and each girl who went to Elk City was sponsored by Hobart merchants. The whole stunt cost the theatre next to nothing for reason that the merchants not only furnished their contestants but donated bathing suits and incidental expenses. And by the way, a Hobart girl came back with the prize, a free round-trip by air to Galveston.

He used an old piano box in the lobby several days in advance of "Skippy," constructed to represent a kid "club house," names, etc., painted on it. An eight-foot tall cut-out of Skippy, portraying a dash to school with books under his arm, was also used along with various other props to carry out a scheme of a kid playground in the lobby. A bally, such as you see in the photo, was used through all nearby towns. The rear portion of the truck was dressed to represent a tent.

The other photo shows another bally used to advertise "6 Cylinder Love" and, as you may see for yourself, it consisted of an old wagon chassis. It was effective because of its marked contrast to present-day transportation.

When playing "Front Page" the distribution of a red-imprinted section of the local newspaper proved an excellent means of focussing public attention on this picture. Four boys were employed to pass out about 2,000 copies and as they did so they called attention to a boxed ad at bottom portion of the first page. This was also printed in red and carried a merchant's ad that offset every cost except that of distribution. A tie-up was also made with the newspaper for a contest on best sentences constructed from headlines in a current issue. Free tickets were awarded the winners.

Gray's monthly calendar has also played an important part the past season, particularly when other advertising effort had to be cut down. 3,000 of these are distributed in rural districts, house to house and by mail. All carry the two-for-one gag and ads take care of all cost except distribution.

All of which is evidence that Gray has been on the job selling shows in Hobart. That he stands in good with his newspaper friends we can see by the generous amount of space devoted to news of theatre, picture and other matters pertaining to his house. How is new season product coming along, John, and what are you doing to put it over? Let us hear from you again in the near future.

Cline Secured Lot Of Publicity When 'Gang' Star Visited

Quite a hullabaloo recently took place out in Mitchell, South Dakota, where Burr W. Cline manages the Metropolitan Theatre, on the occasion of a visit made the city by the diminutive "Our Gang" star, Jean Darling. The excellent results achieved through his advance campaign on a "name" amply testifies to what can be done along these lines to secure free newspaper publicity, co-ops and other tie-ups calculated to keep a theatre in the public eye. Without a doubt, every person in and around the town knew the little actress was there as direct result from his efforts.

Issue after issue of the local paper prior to this juvenile's arrival in the city carried on front page and otherwise cuts and stories in reference to the coming personal appearance of the attractive little youngster. Merchants combined to put over a full co-op, an auto dealer furnishing a late model car for her transportation and telling about it in his ad; a dairy quoted Jean's mother to effect that no other milk than its brand would be acceptable, and Jean announced that most everybody in Hollywood had a certain electric refrigerator. And so on and so on, including a most sincere declaration in a half-page ad in another issue that a local ice cream was the best she ever tasted.

To top the climax her mother conceived the idea of having the child adopted by a tribe of Indians and with the help of Burr Cline it was arranged to have a party of Sioux, 100 miles away, on hand to take charge of the ceremony. The photo here will show Chief Medicine Crow himself, and after all was said and done on the Metropolitan stage, little Jean was entitled to the name of "Winon-Waste" which, when translated, means "Princess of the Plains and All That Is Virtuous."

And so, Round Tablers, when the little miss visits your town, if it so happens, you can undoubtedly reap a lot of publicity and draw to capacity if you will go out after business the way Cline did. You may not be able to get bona fide Sioux, but that's alright. Dress up some of the local indians. Burr certainly put his campaign over in great shape and he is to be congratulated for attaining such splendid results. Business at the theatre was most excellent during the entire engagement and the theatre reaped a whale of a lot of free publicity.

Jim Dempsey Used Number Of Stunts To Sell New Film

A number of advertising stunts were recently used to introduce new season product by J. J. Dempsey, manager of the Strand Theatre, Lowell, Mass., and results were so gratifying that we are submitting an outline of his plan of campaign for the benefit of other Club members.

As a starter he got up an attractive four-page herald for distribution by mail and to theatre patrons, listing the new pictures. A border of star mats obtained from the press sheet on "Secret Call" greatly added to its appearance.

As a gesture to the children the birthday stunt was revived, screen trailer and newspaper story being used to announce the club. Children were requested to sign application blanks at theatre and guest tickets were mailed out every week to those whose birthdays fall the following week.

A mimeographed letter headed "Did You Ever Hear of a Whispering Campaign?" was distributed to all employees and it suggested that they make a point of telling all their friends about the new attractions. Post cards were supplied and about 500 were mailed out by different members of the staff.

Something new in advertising caught the eyes of Lowell citizens when a full-page ad tie-up was worked out by the advertising department of the local newspaper, the streamer across the top of the page being unheard of practice until this stunt was put across. The Mayor was also tied-in with the opening of "Politics" for a "proclamation" and this story, along with an account of a special matinee for newsboys, broke in the evening newspaper.

The lobby was attractively dressed for the occasion with a large display made from the pages of the Paramount announcement book and other displays, samples of which we are reproducing, did their share to capture public attention. While we are on the subject of these displays it is well to note that the art department saves all material used in the making for other displays and thereby effects a considerable saving in advertising costs. For instance, the large display frame pictured here was used any number of times for other announcements merely by change of copy.

There are many valuable suggestions in Dempsey's campaign which we feel certain will serve as a reminder to others in the matter of plugging forthcoming attractions and as a stimulator of public interest. Now that Jim has come to life again, as regards active Club membership, perhaps he will continue to keep headquarters posted on what's going on in his town. And we'll see that this information is passed along.

Post Card Mailer Aided Fred Meyer To Put Over Picture

A post card mailer materially aided in bringing about a record opening and splendid ensuing business on "Mystery of Life" when this picture was played by Fred S. Meyer, managing director of the Alhambra Theatre, Milwaukee, Wis. These were forwarded to all doctors and lawyers in town.

The reverse side of the post card was dressed with a cut of Clarence Darrow and his name headed the message in large boldface type. Copy read: "Hear This Famous Lawyer Plead His Greatest Case—See Mystery of Life (large type)—With Mr. Darrow and Dr. H. M. Ashley Arguing Their Ideas of Evolution As Submitted in the Famous "Monkey Trial" at Dayton, Tenn. (Small type) Playdate and name of theatre followed.

As you all know, Fred Meyer, in addition to being an enterprising theatre man, is head of the M.P.T.O. of Wisconsin and it's no new stunt on his part to crash the front page of his local newspaper with a yarn. The fact that he was at one time president of the Merchants' Association of Hamilton, Ohio, gave him an opportunity to endorse "Civic Dollar Day," a business boosting affair pulled off in Milwaukee last month. As usual, the story made the first page.

As busy as this showman is, he finds time to drop an occasional line to the Club and we hope that he will continue to keep his fellow members informed on what's going on in show business in and around Milwaukee.

THIS AD COST THE THEATRE—NOTHING!

Once again a smart showman cashed in on a tie-up with the classified section of his daily paper whereby the theatre grabbed off a two-column by eight inch ad without any cost other than what the box above the ad mentioned.

Maybe some managers will say that twenty-five free tickets is too high a price to pay for such an ad, but whoever takes that attitude is up the wrong tree. In dollars and cents, you are getting a peach of a break every time you pull a gag like this one and since it is far from new, others have had plenty of time to dope out it's value to the theatre both as straight advertising as well as special plugs for some particular picture.

Count yourself fortunate if you can promote similar stuff from your own paper. It will be worth making a try for if you are still rating a hundred percent at the business manager's desk of the newspaper.

Credit Bangor, Me., with this example of costless advertising.

Carroll Made Fine Lobby Display For "Huckleberry Finn"

An inexpensive lobby display which caused a lot of comment and is an original so far as the contributor and ourselves are concerned, was made for "Huckleberry Finn" by L. W. "Larry" Carroll, manager of the Flynn Theatre, Burlington, Vt.

He cut the heads of the four kids from the regular three-sheet on this picture and mounted them on beaver board. A fence was constructed from lath, sawed at the top to represent pickets, and nailed on 2 x 2's about five inches apart. Back of the fence the four heads were nailed, with faces just peering over. Real clothes, promoted from a store, were fastened on the figures, a dress on the girls, shirts and knee pants on two of the boys and over-hauls on "Huck." The title, cast and play-dates were fastened to the front of the fence.

The above display was placed in the lobby well in advance and from a short distance looked like the real thing. Not even a credit card was needed for promotion of the clothing as the merchant made the donation as a personal favor. Carroll's idea was based on the midget mat displayed in the press book and it worked out so well that he's passing it along to his brother members. It was a neat little stunt, Larry, and let's hear more from you.

Combs Now In Post, Texas; Gets Serial Started With Club

In addition to working like a horse to get his new show started in Post, Texas, where he has been transferred to manage the New Palace Theatre, J. C. Coombs found time to exploit a coming serial attraction, the "Vanishing Legion."

He got out a small card with copy reading: "I Am a Member of the Palace Theatre Vanishing Legion Club." Then a space for name, and below the copy, "And I Promise to See All 12 Chapters Which Will Permit Me to Bring My Father or Mother Free If I Have All Twelve Numbers Punched on My Card." The cards were distributed well in advance of playdate and the kids were instructed to be on hand for opening, when Coombs would see that the first number was punched for membership. When the last chapter is run it is planned to hold a picnic for the kids who hold cards with all numbers punched.

This certainly ought to be a corking plug for kid patronage on a serial and the attendant adult admissions should well offset the small cost involved. By this time Coombs undoubtedly has his new house running along smoothly and we will anticipate further information on how the new job is going along.

Waugh Revives Old Contest For Double Co-Op On New Film

Recalling that he successfully ran a "President's Contest" years ago when exploiting "America," Howard Waugh, manager of the Warner Theatre, Memphis, Tenn., revived the same idea for what we call a corking double truck co-op on "Alexander Hamilton," one of the new season pictures.

We are reproducing one of the two spreads of merchants' ads for your inspection even though you will be unable to read certain portions of the copy. In explanation, the first co-op carried a photo of a president in the corner of each ad with lines underneath to fill in name, year inaugurated, date of birth, date of death and length of term in office. The second co-op carried the answer to the questions. With the return of answers it was requested that the contestant submit a 50-word letter stating what president was thought to have rendered the greatest service during his administration. It was directed that all correspondence be sent to the Contest Editor of the newspaper.

It's hardly necessary to state that the merchants came through in a great way with support for Waugh's scheme. You can see that at a glance. The picture is a natural for a co-op of this kind and after this is printed we predict that many other managers will be making a similar move. Thanks, Howard, for sending this in and we're mighty glad to know that everything is running along so nicely. Keep it up and let your Club hear from you as often as possible.

Some of the suggestions already coming in to headquarters for exploiting this picture include previews for school boards; writing of essays on Hamilton and giving of book covers to pupils.

ROUND TABLE BIOGRAPHIES

Through acquaintance with a few theatre employees, J. Howell Luter became so interested in show business that at the age of 17 years he resigned a $30 a week job to accept $14 per week for ushering at the Fairfax Theatre in Miami, Fla.

J. Howell Luter

He started at the bottom of the ladder and has gone on up the line, acting as assistant chief usher, doorman, chief usher, assistant manager and manager. After the Fairfax closed he was transferred to the Olympia, Miami, where he held down the doorman's job. Then to the Hippodrome as doorman, or ticket taker, and seven weeks later he was promoted to the post of assistant manager of the Hipp. Several weeks later he returned to the Fairfax as assistant manager and in the early part of 1930 was assigned to his present position as manager of the Rosetta in Little River, Fla.

Luter was born in Birmingham, Ala., and received his education in schools in Gulfport, Miss., Anniston, Ala., and Atlanta, Ga. His date of birth was March 11, 1908, which makes him 23 years old at this writing. For the past three years he has been actively engaged in the business of selling shows and for three or four years prior put in part time. Says he's tried other lines, but that there isn't any of them as interesting as running a theatre.

Frank B. Hill Busy As A Bee; Opened New Yakima House

They've had Frank B. Hill on the loop lately, what with running up to Yakima, Wash., to help Arch Bartholet open the Yakima and taking care of his own theatres down in Walla Walla, but despite all this we've managed to get a line on what's been keeping him so busily engaged.

The Yakima opening was a gala event with considerable portion of the campaign centred on the return of the Mercys to the city, they having operated there prior to transfer of their holdings to another circuit. Some excellent newspaper cooperative pages were obtained through merchant tie-ups, all based on welcoming this veteran showman family back home. One page in particular, featured large photos of H. B. Franklin and Howard Hughes at top of page, with centre devoted to theatre opening and two columns on each side carrying congratulatory ads of merchants.

YAKIMA

When "Front Page" played Yakima it was arranged to reproduce a replica of a newspaper's first page with large mat of picture printed in red in the centre. We are showing a cut of it and it will be seen that it was worked out quite differently than the usual run of red imprints on this picture. Note that the mat is entirely surrounded by regular front page news stories of actual happenings.

But to get back to Hill's activities in his home town, where Mardi Gras Week has been extensively plugged as a booster for show business. For this occasion he got out a most attractive four-page program with photo of girl and a huge telephone on front cover. Copy stated that she was hearing about the pretentious programs at the Liberty Theatre. To advertise "Sporting Blood," one of the gags consisted of the distribution of Sweepstake tickets and copy stated that payment of from 35 to 50 cents would entitle the bearer to see the greatest horse race of them all at the Liberty Theatre.

While we haven't any details of his campaign on "Politics" the accompanying photo will give you an idea of how the theatre front was dressed for the occasion. Note the large cutout letters of the sign atop the marquee and the 24-sheet poster at right of the box office. That long marquee certainly permits the use of uncramped copy on any picture.

Lack of space is the only reason why you have not seen a fine collection of Hill's newspaper ads we have on hand but you can take our word that these will be published at the first opportunity we have to ease in an extra page. His ads are outstanding in appearance and as to copy, and we are sure that many Club members will benefit through seeing them in print.

"With product, weather and theatre business conditions more favorable now than they have been in many months, grosses will begin to climb. To get the most out of this period, however, we must put into play every bit of energy, ingenuity and showmanly experience that we have at our command. We must pledge ourselves now, to merchandise intensively every specific attraction we play."

Several Gags Used By Thomason When Selling A Serial

Along with his application for membership in this Club, W. F. Thomason, manager of the Carolina Theatre, Burlington, N. C., sent a couple of stunts he pulled to plug a serial.

One was a serial-attendance card with dates of chapters printed on the margins. In addition to title of picture, name of theatre, etc., copy stated that after the holder had attended five showings of the serial a free ticket would be awarded. Another gag consisted of a card bearing a certain identification mark linked up with another such mark in a merchant's window. Guest tickets were awarded to those who succeeded in matching the two.

He also tied-up with the newspaper for a parade of newsboys and a contest. In advance of picture showing he had the boys parade the main streets, carrying banners announcing that they were guests of the theatre; and the contest consisted of readers submitting stories on how the serial was going to end. The winners were awarded a month's free pass to the theatre.

That's the proper spirit, W. F., and the right way to introduce yourself to the rest of the boys. What's next on your list? Shoot along your ideas and we'll see that these are broadcast to your host of fellow showmen.

Letter About "Bad Girl" Was Big Help To Harold Kopplin

A little gag used in connection with the showing of "Bad Girl" was considerable aid in helping Harold A. Kopplin, advertising manager for Mometco Theatres in Miami, Fla., pile up gratifying business on this picture. An envelope addressed "Are You a Bad Girl" contained a message for distribution to all stores and offices where women were employed or congregated. The enclosed card read as follows:

"There are lots and lots of "BAD GIRLS" in every town. . . . But badness is like beauty . . . just skin deep. . . . Most of these so-called Bad Girls are good girls, after all. . . . They make mistakes now and then, that's true . . . but who doesn't?

"Naturally you will want to see the picture that tells the life story of the most famous Bad Girl of them all . . . the story that was written by Vina Delmar and now made into an all-talking picture that is said to be "the most human picture ever made."

"Sally Eilers is the naughty girl that gets talked about . . . and girls, James Dunn, who plays opposite her, is just too sweet for words. . . . We haven't a doubt in the world but that all your present celluloid heroes will be cast to oblivion when you cast your eyes on him.

"BAD GIRL" wants to see you and we want you to want to see her."

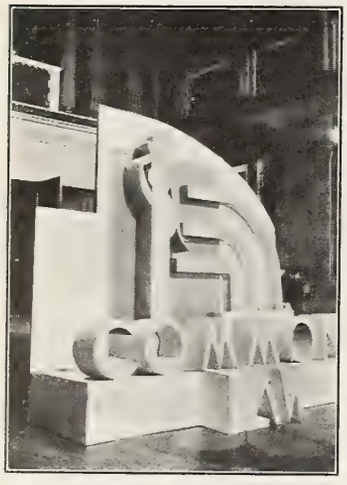
THE MANAGEMENT, CAPITOL THEATRE.

P. S.—"Bad Girl" begins its showing at Saturday Midnite Show, September 12th, and will continue through Wednesday, September 16th.

We also have some of his recent ads on "Transatlantic" and "Mystery of Life," but these are printer's proofs and will not show up clearly when reproduced. So all we can state is that the layout work is attractive and that we'll hope to be able to present other evidence of his work along these lines in the future. Kopplin has been doing fine work down in Miami and has made many valuable contributions to this department. We will look forward to hearing a lot more from him.

NOVEMBER HOLIDAYS!

Election Day, Armistice Day and Thanksgiving; plus numerous and sundry other dates, make November a strong month for the box office. Alert showmen will hardly let this slant get away from them and will make every possible effort to cash in or take advantage of these holidays.



Appropriate short subjects and trailers are available and ought to be included on the program of every theatre where these "little" things mean anything. Proper displays and settings for the front, marquee and lobby are also in order.

Watch the Showman's Calendar carefully and plan your November activities accordingly. Don't let your opposition get the jump on you.

Modernistic Type Of Displays Used By Paul Binstock

No, Paul Binstock has not been to China or some other faraway country since you heard from him through these pages as manager of the Astoria Grand Theatre, Astoria, Long Island, New York; he just moved from the Borough of Queens to the Borough of Kings, where he is managing the Fortway for the well known motion picture theatre team of Mr. Frisch and Mr. Rinzler.

Among other recent activities Paul has been treating the intelligentsia, and others, of Bay Ridge with some modernistic lobby displays, an example of which we are presenting by photo on this page. This particular one had to do with the showing of "Common Law" and we can well believe that it caught the eye of prospective patrons of this picture. The figure above the title letters, worked out with board cut in modernistic style, represents a lady apparently doing something and going places. You will not be able to discern the lower case copy at the left, but it reads, "He Was Her Master. . . . She Was His Masterpiece." The name of the star appeared across the first step of the pedestal.

Bay Ridge likes this sort of stuff, Paul states, and if Bay Ridge likes it there's no reason why it shouldn't make a hit in a lot of other places in these United States. Certainly, it was worked out very artistically, and if you want to treat your patrons with something different in the way of displays we are sure that Paul's set will furnish the proper inspiration. Now that we've located this Round Tabler, we will try to keep in touch with him as to future activities.

Rain Gave Johnnie Pival A Taxi Idea That Boosted Trade

It was not so long ago that we were telling you how John Pival, manager of the Senate Theatre, Detroit, Mich., was successfully plugging his Saturday matinee trade with broadcasts by a talented group of kiddies over a local radio station. Now we have a line on another little stunt he put over recently and we must admit that John is something of an opportunist, and quite on the job.

After watching a downpour of rain for several hours on matinee day, it occurred to him that the average number of humans would be out of doors without means of keeping dry. So he had his sign painter knock out a rush job of four signs, 12 x 20 inches, reading: "Free Taxi Service to the Senate Theatre. . . . See 'Gold Dust Gertie.'" Then, along with Ben Cohen, owner of the house, and three other friends who owned sedans likewise placarded with the signs, they rushed out on a hunt for rain-marooned pedestrians. Awnings and doorways proved to be the best hunting grounds, and after a three-hour campaign the net result was a total of 156 extra admissions.

John says it's a great stunt for the complexion and wants some other Round Tablers to try it out; hence, we're passing it along. Well, figures don't lie and you can't laugh off 156 new customers. Pival is certainly on the job at the Senate and this little trick shows he's not letting any opportunities get by.

Wooten Staged Big Bathing Girl Show That Drew Capacity

One of the largest bathing beauty contests we've heard about in some time was recently engineered by Jay Wooten, city manager for Fox Theatres in Liberal, Kansas. The account of it is his first contribution to the Club and although this sort of a stunt may be a little unseasonable at this time of the year in some parts of the country it's one that can be filed away for future use when an occasion to stage one of these shows presents itself.

Jay Wooten

Backed by the Retail Merchants Association he succeeded in getting a majority of the principal stores to lend cooperation, 33 of them entering girls in the contest to represent respective lines of merchandise. Each entrant was assessed $5 entrance fee to compete for the title of Miss Southwest and upon payment the merchant was furnished an 8 x 10 photo of his representative, and engraved cut for newspaper use. Enough money was collected to pay for engraving and photos and the $50 in prizes offered to the winners. In addition to the local entrants five came in from out of town communities a number of miles distant.

The newspaper gave splendid support to the event in return for a spread of merchants' ads and other individual ads, publishing a whole page of full length photos of all contestants and breaking with a front page story on opening night. The contest was a success from every angle and gave the theatre two nights of capacity business. At present Wooten is working on a community style show which will include tie-ups with several ladies' and men's stores. We'll let you in on this one just as soon as we get a line on how it turned out. In the meantime, the Club wishes him continued success with all activities.

Wynne Left Sound Engineering Field To Operate Theatre

A regular reader of this department for some time—in fact, ever since he left the sound engineering field to purchase the Ritz Theatre in Huron, Ohio—W. A. Wynne now promises to become an active member of this organization.

He starts in with an enclosure of a monthly calendar, different from the majority of these cards in that it is not too cluttered up with all kinds of blurry looking copy. Instead of looking like something on the order of a Chinese puzzle, the reader can actually tie up dates with coming attractions. And this is accomplished merely by using a large enough card and type that can be read without straining the eyes.

There will be a large number of Round Table members throughout the South, Southwest, Ohio and Michigan to whom Wynne's name will be familiar and he wants to be remembered to all the fellows he came in contact with during his travels with the electrical company. He's having a lot of fun learning theatre operation and has several good ideas for promoting attendance which he will send along at a later date. The Club wished him lots of luck in his new field and will watch with interest his rise in show-business.

Department Store Gave Out Heralds As Plug For Suggs

One of the many stunts used by M. S. Suggs in publicizing Maurice Chevalier in "The Smiling Lieutenant" playing at the Paramount Theatre, Bristol, Tenn., was having a department store distribute numbered heralds.

One week in advance, the store included one of these heralds in each package leaving the store. Of the 100 guest tickets to be given away, only 35 were actually given away. It was necessary to compare the numbers on the heralds to those posted in the lobby.

The largest filling and oil station in the city consented to the placing of four by five foot banners on the backs of their trucks. This gave the picture quite a break as these trucks are continually traversing the city streets all during the day. And this was without cost to the theatre.

Two weeks in advance, the theatre's organist who is also a musical director at the local radio station, featured several times daily over the station the song numbers from the picture as well as making picture announcement each time that it would be shown at the Paramount, etc.

Tie-Ups And Lobby Featured Campaign For "Street Scene"

Merchant tie-ups and an outstanding lobby display were the highlights of the powerful exploitation campaign used to usher in the showing of "Street Scene" at the Rivoli Theatre, New York City.

Under the supervision of Ralph L. Stitt, of the Rivoli, the campaign was started well in advance of the opening with ads and feature stories appearing in all local dailies.

A few days before the opening, the lobby of the theatre was decorated with electric displays, giant oil paintings and a special exhibit containing photos of the leading characters.

Merchant tie-ups were out over with Gimbel Bros., Grebe Radio, Lux Soap, Old Gold Cigarettes. A four-page newspaper tabloid gotten out on the picture was the means of effecting a tie-up with Gimbel Bros. on the Grebe radios. The entire back page of this tabloid was used for an ad with Sylvia Sidney endorsing the Grebe radio, which is distributed by Gimbel's. This resulted in 50,000 tabloids being distributed; 40,000 at the theatre and 10,000 at the store. The tie-ups with Old Gold and Lux resulted in a window streamer display; 4,000 on each product were placed on drug, cigar and grocery windows about the city.

A television interview was arranged for Sylvia Sidney by Louis Sobel of the "Journal" over the Columbia Broadcasting System while the "Graphic" ran an "Identify Yourself Contest." Other leading columnists carried articles about the picture and players.

So who says that the boys along Broadway don't put over exploitation campaigns any more? But then most of you are familiar with Ralph Stitt's work and it's hardly necessary to remind you that he's a most enterprising showman.

Hall Of Virginia Wins Out Against Local Opposition

It's been some time since we heard from R. Mason Hall, owner-manager of the Lee Theatre, Pennington Gap, Va., but when we tell you about what has claimed his attention over a considerable period, we feel sure that you will all agree that he's had a man's job on his hands.

Everything looked rosy when he first took over the Lee, but after the house had been operating only a short time it was hit by a tidal wave in the form of a committee of four clergymen who delegated themselves to save all Pennington souls by obliterating the allegedly iniquitous photoplay house. According to Hall, they had practically every citizen believing that they were all going straight to hell unless motion pictures were immediately discontinued, despite the fact that the theatre was making donations and cooperating in every possible way.

Tremendous pressure was exerted from various angles to close the theatre, but Hall patiently and diplomatically went about his task of sticking it out, even though he felt like packing up. He played along smoothly with the patrons, was extremely careful in reference to selection of pictures and methods of exploitation, and used discretion with the staging of all benefit performances.

The matter finally came to a showdown in the theatre office, with all four ministers and Hall in dramatic conference. Hall looked them in the eyes and said: "Gentlemen, there are four of you against one. I have a proposition. If either one of you can prove that this theatre is in any way injuring the morals of this community, or that any other theatre in the country has been instrumental in sending any one to hell, I'll gladly close the doors and join the Salvation Army."

To make a long story short, it was arranged to have three of the ministers attend each change of picture, and since this move was inaugurated perfect harmony has existed in both church and theatre circles. As a further testimonial to his diplomacy, Hall has been recently elected a member of Southwestern Virginia, Inc., an influential regional business organization, associated with the National Chamber of Commerce.

Running a theatre profitably the past year or so has been a man's job under normal conditions, but when important human factors in community welfare deliberately declare war on a theatre we are inclined to think that man is getting more than his share of trials and tribulations. The point is that Hall won out. Not by waging an offensive, but with patient and diplomatic handling of a desperate situation.

THEATRE POSTER ART!

Drawn by Benton L. James

This is the second of the series of posters to appear on the Club pages from the work-shop of Benton L. James of the Missouri Theatre in St. Joseph, Mo. If you just glanced at the Powell poster last week, look it over again.

We are reproducing these posters large enough so that you can project them through a balioptican machine and trace them for your own houses. Others will appear from week to week and we cordially invite other artists to contribute so that the burden will not rest entirely on the shoulders of James. Make this the clearing house for poster art ideas just as it is for exploitation and theatre operation.

FASHION SHOWS!

The supply of "How to Stage a Fashion Show" pamphlets are entirely exhausted and new ones will not be made up. Only a few hundred were available and they were snapped up within 10 days after the first announcement appeared on the Club pages offering them for the asking.

But that should not interfere with your staging one of the real box-office smashes. By no means. The formula is simple enough and all you need is the ability to go out and promote the right support from the newspaper and the merchants; either direct or through the local Chambers of Commerce.

These Shows are in order right through the present season, and if staged late in November can include plenty of winter styles, too. Why not start the ball a-rolling and then send us the "dope" on how your Fashion Show boosted the receipts to new records? Go to it.

Bolln Called Out A Portion Of Navy As Plug For 'Shipmates'

A portion of Uncle Sam's Navy turned out to help Gene Bolln, manager of the Starland Theatre, Los Angeles, Calif., exploit the showing of "Shipmates."

At the small cost of a few passes he arranged to have Naval Reserve squadrons parade the main streets on night of opening, the men finally winding up in front of the theatre. A drum and bugle corps preceded the squadrons and a bugler was also stationed on the roof of the theatre.

You may be able to note from the photo that he also had the added attraction of an acrobat performing his stunts on top of the theatre, if reduction does not blot him out of the picture; and that the orchestra was stationed in a balcony just over the marquee, playing Navy songs that tied up neatly with the picture theme. All this took place prior to start of the show, and for a costless ballyhoo it proved to be a real knockout.

Bolln is one of the Club's new members, and if we are any judge at all this department can look forward to receiving some worth-while tips from this Round Tabler. At least, so he promises, and we are going to take him at his word. Any time a manager can stage a bally like the above without any cost to his house except a few passes handed out to the right parties, we predict he can turn out a lot more stunts as well worth reading about.

Ben Cohen's 'Follies' Made A Big Hit With Fans In Hazelton, Pa.

A "Follies" show recently presented at the Capitol Theatre, Hazelton, Pa., a house managed by Ben Cohen, proved such a popular six-day attraction that it became necessary to play a return engagement the following week.

The show was presented by members of the Capitol Theatre Stock Company, augmented by additional talent and ran for 60 minutes. The first night this "first edition" was put on it was greeted by S. R. O. attendance and capacity audiences turned out for each succeeding performance. During the week Cohen arranged to hold a banquet for all members of the cast in the ballroom of one of the leading hotels. Newspaper clippings at hand testify to publicity the theatre received from staging the event.

Ben Cohen is a showman who knows how to put on these kind of shows and in this instance, when "American Tragedy" was the feature picture attraction, it would seem that the staging of a "Follies" was an excellent idea considering nature of the picture theme. He is an active member in city social affairs, recently being sought to sing a hymn during New Year services at the town's largest Temple. He has also been elected to the executive committee of the Hazelton Chamber of Commerce. And we might go on record with the statement that a portion of Ben's success in this field is due to the interest he takes in civic affairs. The Club will be looking forward to hearing from this member again.

Tom Edward's Wife Put Over Corking Bathing Girl Show

In addition to being a traveling film salesman for one of the major companies, Tom Edwards, assisted by Mrs. Connie Edwards, operates the Eldon Electric Theatre in Eldon, Mo. Peddling pictures keeps Tom's time well taken up but while he's away his wife carries on and when we tell you all about a bathing beauty contest she put over in a town of 3,000 population, we believe you'll agree that the stunt was pulled as efficiently as any he-manager could do it. As a matter of fact, Tom gives the Missus full credit, for he was away at the time the contest was staged.

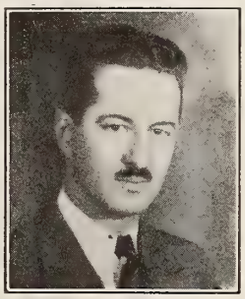
To begin with she canvassed the merchants and arranged with ten of them to be represented by girls personally selected by herself. Nine of the storekeepers agreed to furnish prizes running in value from $3 to $6.50 and the theatre had a first prize of $10. Take a look at that group of attractive girls in the accompanying photo and then tell us whether we're wrong in stating that Mrs. Edwards is some bathing-girl-picker! There are 36 entrants, 16 of them being eliminated the first night of the show. From the remaining 20 girls, 10 winners were picked on the final night, including "Miss Lake of the Ozarks," the girl in centre of the photo. At the extreme left is the Missus herself. Look her over.

The local newspaper gave strong support to the event and through efforts of Mrs. Edwards and the merchants was able to promote a corking double truck co-op, featuring ads of the ten merchants represented in the contest and many others who came in to get their share of attention. Newspapers in Kansas City and St. Louis were also apprised of the event and pictures of the winners were published in rotogravure sections of newspapers in these cities. As to theatre business, the house drew to capacity all week.

Another recent activity at the Eldon was a window tie-up made in connection with the showing of "Dirigible," which was put over at very small cost. It was arranged with the local Goodyear Tire dealer, who had on hand a small, motor driven model of a dirigible in a hangar, to place the machine across the street under a spot light. A small motor runs the airship in and out of the hangar and with the aid of the spot it made a very attractive display. The patriotic idea was carried out in dressing the theatre front, flags and red, white and blue crepe adding to the atmosphere of picture.

Still another stunt used for the above named picture was distribution of 3,000 handbills by airplane over six neighboring towns. Seventy passes were included in the lot and 26 of these were turned in at the box office, testifying to the fact that the bills received considerable inspection.

It would appear that Edwards can keep right on selling film just as long as he has such a capable partner to operate his theatre, for we believe you will all agree that the contest was well worked out. Tom tells us that he's been a regular reader of Club pages for some time and now that he and the Missus have become members of this organization, we'll be looking forward to further accounts of what's taking place at the Eldon.



JULIUS LAMM SAYS:

"I want to express my appreciation of the exploitation stunts which appear weekly in the Managers' Round Table Club section of THE HERALD. It certainly gives a manager good food for thought and gives one new ideas that can always be used.

Bryan and Coppock Exposition In Staten Island Theatre Wins Praise From Leading Manufacturers, Business Men and Theatregoers

"BUNNY" BRYAN

While calamity-howlers are doing their howling, others, who are too busy accomplishing great things, keep the ticket machines clicking to the merry tunes of "Standing Room Only." Furthermore, they are doing so consistently; and that is why we say: Publix may well be proud of such showmen as Bunny Bryan, District Publicity Director for New Jersey and E. S. C. Coppock, managing Director of the Paramount Theatre on Staten Island, N. Y. They are the two men who successfully put over the Industrial Exposition in conjunction with a score or more of manufacturers on Staten Island. As a result of this unusual tie-up, special newspaper editions were published, exhibits of a most interesting and instructive nature were held in the lobbies, foyer and mezzanine of the Paramount Theatre, and thousands of people traveled from all parts of Staten Island to view the exposition. Most gratifying to record, is the news that the entire campaign and Exposition was put over at practically no cost to the theatre. THAT'S SHOWMANSHIP!

"Chick"

E. S. C. COPPOCK

Full Co-operation!

An industrial exposition recently held in the lobbies of the Paramount Theatre, Stapleton, S. I., sponsored and promoted by Manager E. S. C. Coppock and District Publicity Manager Bunny Bryan, has been characterized as one of the most forward projects ever launched to acquaint Staten Islanders with the variety of product manufactured in the Borough of Richmond. We are presenting it for the reason that we believe a similar show is practical in many other communities.

Backed by the local Chamber of Commerce and a leading newspaper, the industrial show swung into action on a Saturday for a full week's engagement, primed by a well worked out advance publicity campaign. Seven days prior to opening and during run of show the newspaper carried editorial mention and gave generous space to stories describing the exposition to its 25,000 readers. On the day before opening six pages containing 16 quarter-page ads from as many cooperating industries broke in a section entirely devoted to exposition news.

Ten thousand heralds announcing and publicizing the show were distributed through a tie-up made with six laundries covering all parts of the Island and the theatre's mailing list of 2,000 and all other billing called attention to the show and picture attractions booked for the coming week. Boy Scouts were also pressed into service, through the inducement of free tickets, to distribute 200 window cards, and all luncheon clubs and several other business organizations made it a point to give mention to the affair.

Among the nationally known exhibitors who were represented were Procter & Gamble, United States Gypsum, Associated Gas & Electric, Sireno, Richmond Railways, New York & Richmond Gas, and several other foremost manufacturers; in fact, the group was classed as the "16 most important industries located on the Island."

Many Interesting Exhibits!

Exhibits were aligned in the lobby, the main floor foyer and the mezzanine promenade, each exhibitor having an expert employee present to answer all questions and explain the manufacture of their individual products. A number of the exhibitors varied their displays the middle of the week and the Procter & Gamble Company displayed an interesting model of the St. George Terminal done in Ivory Soap.

Another exhibit in which the public displayed keen interest was installed by the cooperating newspaper, showing step by step process of casting linotype, to the finished semi-cylindrical matrice ready for the press. The intricacies of the modern newspaper plant are more or less mysterious to the average citizen and the occasion gave this paper an excellent opportunity to explain the working of its plant, plus the advantage of being able to set forth other facts dealing with the manufacture of a newspaper.

There were many other interesting displays ranging from gas and electric refrigerators to fire extinguishers, and in paying tribute to the Chamber of Commerce for its part in making the exhibition possible, a representative of one of the leading manufacturers said: "Possibly many industries, because of the very nature of their methods and products, seem isolated from the community . . . the 'Made on Staten Island' show will undoubtedly open the eyes of many. . . . If you are not a manufacturer and so not an exhibitor you will be able to spend pleasant hours seeing the various exhibits and enjoying the show on screen and stage."

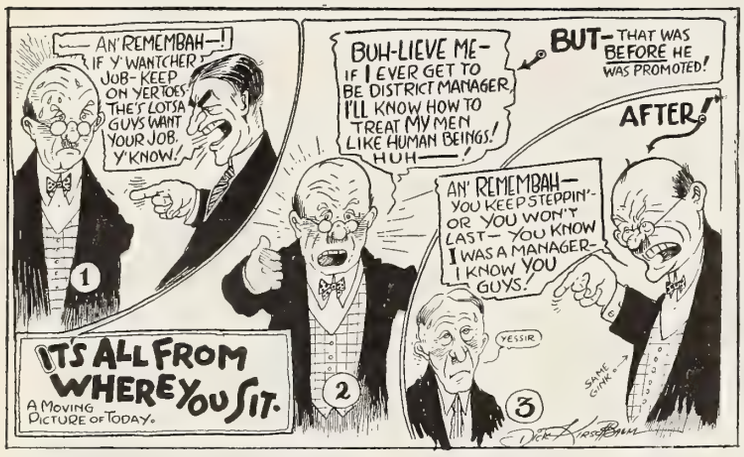
A "Natural" for All!

To sum it all up, the combination exposition and show was a pronounced success from every angle. It was a natural for the Chamber of Commerce and the newspaper and gave the theatre a splendid opportunity to not only impress the entire community with its importance as a local institution, but enabled the house to hang up record attendance for the entire week. Fourteen days' consecutive mention of theatre and attraction, by way of special stories, ads, etc., cannot fail to leave an impression with newspaper readers, and when the extensive circulation of the paper is taken into consideration, the coverage represented quite a sum in dollars and cents.

This ad is typical of the announcements paid for by all the manufacturers who participated!

Adaptable Everywhere!

As stated before, this is a scheme which ought to prove adaptable to any community where there is manufacturing on any practical scale. Do as Coppock and Bryan did. Contact your Chamber of Commerce; your Rotary Club; your Lions Club; your newspaper, and any other organization which can be tied in with the move, and if you work along the same lines as these two showmen the net result will be a vast amount of valuable publicity, lasting good will and last but not at all the least, a large increase at the box office at practically no cost to the theatre. In this particular case all costs of the show, including exhibits, etc., were defrayed by the cooperating manufacturers, with the exception of one lobby card, a four frame advance trailer and an electrician's overtime.



"Sure-Fire" for the B. O.!

A show of this nature also has the added value of bringing a group of manufacturers together on the same footing for perhaps the first time in their business careers. It also gives patrons and customers a chance to discuss merits of the various exhibits and to receive first hand information concerning articles which they may have in mind to purchase. Thus, an appeal may be made to concerns that actual sales may result from cooperating in such a move. It may also be mentioned that quality of picture entertainment was not overlooked in staging the event, such pictures as "My Sin" and "Personal Maid" being booked for the week.

Coppock and Bryan are by no means strangers to readers of this department, their splendid efforts in publicizing theatres and pictures being cited from time to time. It seems that these two are always putting over some worthwhile stunt and to our way of thinking this Industrial Exposition was a corker from all angles. So why not cash in on this idea Round Tablers, while the iron is hot? If you are in an industrial community and conditions warrant the move, make that call on the C. of C. today and we predict the directors will lend willing ears for YOUR EXPOSITION.

Programs Play An Important Part In Blumenthal's Work

Programs play an important part in the advertising methods employed by A. Blumenfeld, manager of the Fairfax Theatre, Oakland, Calif., both monthly programs and pocket editions of same being distributed house to house and followed up with an attractively gotten-up weekly.

The institutional copy on the back covers of the weeklies will serve as an excellent pattern for any one who contemplates a house plug of this description and we are therefore reprinting several of the ads, admitting that mere reprint will not do justice to the well laid out type.

1. Comfort (large u. c. type) . . . the feeling of being in friendly surroundings . . . of being welcome . . . of knowing that every wish is cared for . . . this is the comfort . . . the pleasure of a visit to Oakland's most popular theatre. Comfort in furnishings . . . comfort in happy entertainment . . . comfort in atmosphere . . . plus Service (large u. c. and paragraph) attentive . . . unassuming . . . careful and cheerful . . . service ever at your command. Service of sincerity . . . without affectation . . . is the watchward of the Fairfax Theatre (paragraph and large u. c.) Sound Pictures at Their Best (medium size type).

2. Entertainment Plus (large type). Today the motion picture screen is presenting such a marvelous variety of entertainment that it becomes more and more the divertisement of the masses.

Programs of unprecedented brilliance . . . world famous artists . . . the latest musical hits . . . the voices of great men and women of this and other countries, provide entertainment as never before, entertainment that lifts you out of the sphere of every-day monotony and carries you away to romance . . . adventure . . . excitement . . . happiness.

And the cost is small . . . so small that you should never lose any opportunity to seize all this. . . . It may be found every evening at the Fairfax Theatre. (Name in large type.)

3. Relax! (large) Brush the cobwebs from your mind. . . . Erase the cares of home, workshop, office. . . . Relax . . . in the Fairfax. . . .

A ticket changes the scene. . . . You step into adventure . . . romance . . . to glorious peace and relaxation.

The modern wonder of the talking screen brings you all this. . . . Vibrant, arresting stories. . . . Played by live, vivid personalities . . . and produced with intelligence and care.

Comedy, travel, drama . . . may be found daily at the Fairfax Theatre (name large).

4. Compare the Value (head, large) of today's entertainment with the old silent movie. . . . Today, the talking screen is bringing you entertainment never before possible . . . entertainment worth many times the price of a Fairfax admission ticket.

Gayety. . . . Youth. . . . Captivating beauties . . .. brilliant stars. . . . They'll stir your heart and thrill your senses.

The finest in talking picture presentation is the daily offering of the—Fairfax Theatre (name large).

5. Entertainment (head, large) must be diversified to be worthwhile. There must be happy combination of screen, comfort and service. There must be personality . . . variety. Here you will find every attribute of the perfect performance . . . comedy . . . drama and world events. Here you will find the ultimate in entertainment . . . the best the screen affords . . .the result of a careful study of your talking picture wishes . . . the best show in town . . . at popular prices. Fairfax Theatre (name large).

We've attempted to indicate where large and small type and paragraphs were used, but the programs must be seen to be appreciated. We have a half-dozen at hand and will gladly send a sample if any other Round Tabler makes the request, or we will take it for granted that Blumenfeld will mail one if you will drop him a line. In any event the excellent copy can be used in various advertising mediums whenever an institutional drive is being planned.

Delis Used Local Girls To Pass Out "Plugs" On Picture

Always an active Club member, even though his name has been missing from these pages for a while, George A. Delis, manager of the Capitol Theatre, Steubenville, Ohio, presents along with a terse letter evidence that he's been a busy showman out in his town. He hasn't time to go into detail so he picturizes his activities. We'll have to do likewise.

When playing "Night Nurse" he used two girls, as per photo, for a street ballyhoo during engagement of picture. Dressed as nurses they passed out imitation capsules with copy on one side reading "Dope," and the other side with copy for picture. These were distributed to pedestrians and in various business establishments. The other photo shows a portion of the parade staged when "Singers Midgets" played the house.

Quite a fuss was made on the occasion of the visit of Cab Calloway and His Orchestra, a local colored group of players being engaged to street ballyhoo the act by the playing of all latest Calloway numbers. A truck was promoted for transportation, decorated with banners and paper tinsels. The leader made announcements with each number. Large attendance during engagement of the orchestra testified to interest aroused by the gag.

Other recent activities include distribution of a reprinted letter from the local Chief of Police and Safety Director, endorsing "Young Donovan's Kid" as a picture that did not glorify criminals; a herald "police order" presenting traffic violations which if indulged, made a person "A Public Enemy," and a personal endorsement issued in herald form, from Delis himself on "Waterloo Bridge." Another stunt that brought crowds to his theatre was a drawing for a new sport roadster, but he doesn't explain just how this was promoted so we will have to pass this one up.

Delis' work is always interesting and we're glad to be able to present some of it to his brother Round Tablers. Keep it up, George, and let us hear from you some more when you can spare the time. Lots of luck for the new season.

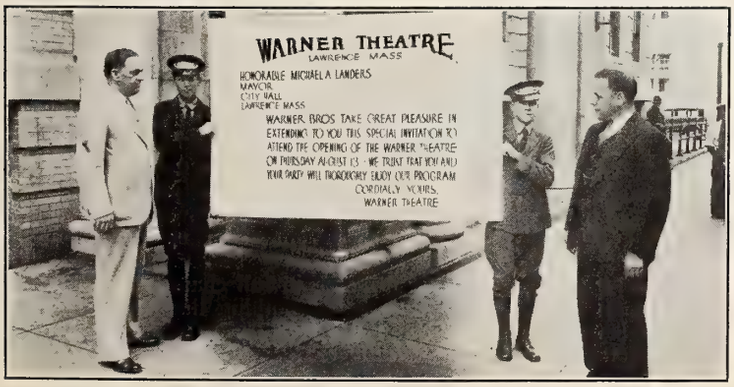
Melincoff's Street Car Stunt Was Big Aid To Box Office

We are presenting some photographic evidence that among other Massachusetts Round Tablers, Max Melincoff, manager of the Warner Theatre, Lawrence, is still alive and kicking and very much on the job in the business of show selling in his community. It's been some little time since we've been able to get a line on his work, but we think the following will convey a pretty good idea of what's been keeping him busy.

Take a look at the photo of a street car he rented for an entire day to advertise "Huckleberry Finn" for a four-day engagement. Note the large banners and the cut-out figures of characters taken from a three-sheet for placement in the car windows. He had the house artist make up some additional ones so as to give the appearance of a car full of young "Huckleberry Finns." Another photo will show the winners of a contest he ran in conjunction with the local newspaper for best costumes of the main character in picture. Cash prizes were offered in connection with this stunt.



Still another photo shows Max himself presenting the Mayor of Lawrence with a huge pass on the occasion of reopening the theatre. This card stunt not only crashed the two local papers with a three-column cut and story, but a Boston paper also gave the story a good break. Your fellow Round Tabler is standing at the right.

For a sidewalk attention-getter when playing "Murder by the Clock" he had the artist construct a clock with one of the hands painted to point to 12 o'clock. On top of the clock was a handle which pedestrians had opportunity to turn. If one handle covered the other at exactly 12 o'clock the person so turning was entitled to receive a free ticket to the picture. In four days the box office gave out 30 tickets. We are explaining this just as we got it from Max and will have to admit that it's not quite clear. Maybe the handle worked with a ratchet movement, one turn at a time. Anyway, we know that Max will be glad to forward additional information if other members will drop him a line.

Two selling gags that materially helped ring up gratifying business for "American Tragedy" consisted of the distribution of a newspaper size herald with scare head in huge type reading "Girl's Body Found," and newspaper style stories on picture and principals; and the sending of letters to members of the local Bar Association, stating in them that the greatest legal minds in the country had recommended the picture as one for the entire profession to witness.

We're glad to be informed that business is humming along so nicely for Melincoff and again glad to be able to tip off his brother Club members as to some of the show selling stunts he's been using. That Max is on the job we know you'll all agree and we will anticipate further information on what he's been doing since the new season started off.

Holden Shows Club A Neat Looking Ad Made on "Flatbed"

Who said a small town newspaper using a flat bed press can't set a decent looking ad? Earle Holden wants to know, and directs that you cast your eye over the specimen reproduced on this page. It's hardly necessary to recall to your memory that this Club member is City Manager for the Sparks Circuit down in Ocala, Fla., and that he's one of our most active Round Tablers.

The ad which you see here was published by the "Ocala Banner" only a short time ago, and printed on the regulation flat bed press, the kind that cannot use mats and prints directly from type face. For the cuts it is of course necessary to use half-tones or line cuts with the proper screen for newspaper work.

You members who may be having difficulties with small town newspaper ads, go down and get friendly with your make-up man. Slip him a pass or two occasionally and watch the reaction. Play ball with the fellows who do the dirty work around the plant, the boys that set the type, and we'll venture the opinion that you'll get places and be able to do things. If we're wrong, let us know, but we are very much inclined to think that Earle Holden is working along these lines. In any event, we think this ad is a neat piece of work to be turned out with the facilities described above.

Armistead Issued Schedule Card For New Football Games

As the football season gets under way we want to call attention to a little gag being used by one of our recently elected members, Harold Armistead, who with his brother E. A., operates the Lyric Theatre down in Easley, S. C.

He issued a blotter card containing fill-in dates for the local High School's football schedule for the new season. At the top of the card were two boxed announcements of two coming football pictures, "Touchdown" and "The Spirit of Notre Dame." These cards were given to every student in the school and as further evidence of good will it was stated on the card that the entire team would be guests of the theatre on the occasion of each victory. A little ad on bottom of card tied up with the local newspaper, so we guess that cost of printing was covered in this wise.

This is good seasonable stuff and as long as the games continue Armistead's stunt can be used to excellent advantage. These two brothers promise to become active contributors to this department.

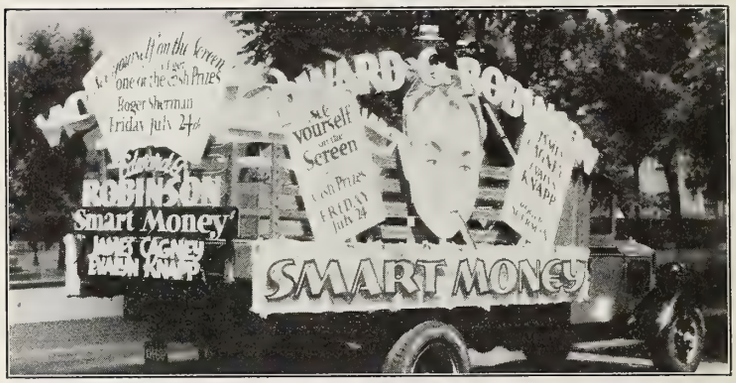
Kennedy Captures Ladies' Attention With A Novel Adv.

Theatre news from Montgomery, Ala., has been a little scarce of late but we can at least tell you about a little gag used by R. M. Kennedy, manager of the Strand and Empire theatres in the Capital City.

In advance of "Secrets of a Secretary" he ran an ad calculated to catch the ladies' eyes and from what we hear it accomplished this very thing. The accompanying cut will tell the story but in case you cannot make out some of the copy, let us state that readers may enter a contest to submit answers to the excerpt in shorthand from Claudette Colbert's diary. They are instructed to transcribe the message and for the most original and unique answers on what they would do under similar circumstances, are entitled to compete for 8, 10 and 30-day guest tickets. Ten pair of guest tickets were offered for the next ten best answers. It was also stated that answers must be sent in to the newspaper office.



For any city which has among its population a goodly percentage of stenographers this ad stunt would appear to be one that will carry distinct appeal because of the spirit of contest it will arouse. So go to it fellows and credit the show tip to Kennedy. If any of you use it let the Club know if it worked as well for you as it did for him.

Harvey Made A Deal With Merchants For Best Blonde Contest

"Are You a Blonde and Can You Use $100 in Gold" was the line used by E. J. Harvey, manager of the Roger Sherman Theatre, New Haven, Conn., in working up an enormous amount of interest in "Smart Money" when he played this picture a short time ago. It went over in a big way in his town.

He arranged with several local merchants to enter the best looking blonde in their employ and a voting contest was sponsored by the local newspaper, the latter agreeing to run front-page stories and pictures of the contestants. A dozen or more tear sheets testify to the support given by the newspaper, the campaign finally ending with a photo of the winning girl. The winner was announced on opening night of the picture, together with a motion picture shot and personal appearance of the winners of additional prizes in the shape of vacation trips awarded by a transportation company.

For a street bally on the above mentioned picture he had a bannered truck driven on the main streets of New Haven and outlying towns with a cameraman taking pictures of people as they emerged from factories, office buildings and other places of business. One person's head was shown in each reproduced photo, with line explaining that when attending the theatre they might identify themselves and receive a prize.

Cost on both the above stunts was practically negligible, expense on the former amounting to only the courtesy line on the screen, while on the latter expenditures were confined to hiring the cameraman as the truck was donated by a local auto dealer in lieu of advertising received. The Best Looking Blonde Contest fitted in nicely with the picture inasmuch as the star is a blonde and there can be no question but that the stunt went over ace high. There are many other pictures to which this same scheme may be applied and that's the reason for Harvey passing along the idea. Also, the taking of pictures of people for identification either in lobby or through a tie-up with your local newspaper is another good bid for attention providing the stunt has not been recently used in a community. On behalf of his brother Club members we thank E. J. for sending in these ideas and will await his next letter.

ROUND TABLE BIOGRAPHIES

C. T. Kraegel, manager of the Crystal Theatre, Dodgeville, Wis., was born in Niagara Falls, N. Y., May 7, 1901, and while in this city attended the DeVeaux Military School and also applied himself to the study of music.

C. T. Kraegel

Music and the screen being closely affiliated, his advent into show business was a natural step for him to take when he forsook the Empire State to become a resident of Wisconsin. He started right in at the top of the ladder, taking over management of the Boscobel Theatre, Boscobel, Wis., at the age of 28 years. Later on he and his associates sold this house and purchased the Metropolitan Theatre in Prairie du Chien, Wis., a larger and much finer house. When the Crystal Theatre in Dodgeville was taken over the Metropolitan Amusement Company was organized of which he is secretary-treasurer and general manager in addition to being in full charge of the Crystal.

He likes show business and there's nothing that will ever tempt him to leave this field unless it be a chance to make a great deal more money in some other line of enterprise.

A Revue And Style Show Brought Good Results To Seabold

As a get-acquainted contribution to this department John W. Seabold, manager of the Centennial Theatre, Warsaw, Ind., states that a revue and style show recently staged went over in a great big way with the local fans, even the hard-boiled newspapers in his town devoting generous space to publicizing and reporting the event as outstanding entertainment.

We don't happen to have any details of the show at hand, but newspaper clippings indicate that John supervised the entire production and that the whole revue was recruited from local talent.

The program consisted of a newsreel, feature picture and the style show, the latter including musical and dancing numbers, selections by the orchestra and the presentation of new styles in feminine attire. Models were, of course, obtained through tie-ups with the leading shops. A special orchestra was secured in lieu of advertising received, and the program for the occasion paid for itself with ads from the stores taking part in the show.

The accompanying photos show a front he made for "Skippy," and a Skippy Party held at the City Park. Over 1,200 boys and girls were entertained with a variety of games and prizes were awarded to the winners of certain contests. A local ice cream company donated 20 gallons of its product and the entire party only cost the house $5. Note that crowd of kids in the photo if you have any doubts about the success of the affair. The other photo of the front speaks for itself. While on the subject of kiddies, let us mention that the Centennial also has a real live Kiddies Matinee Club, members being provided with cards numbered from 1 to 10. When the tickets are fully punched free tickets are handed out. Three fully punched cards entitle the holder to a free two-weeks pass.

His monthly calendar of attractions is a bit different from regular run of these cards in that it is made up for folding and mailing. The space for stamp carries a post office permit and name of the city and state appears in print. All necessary in reference to mailing is the insertion of the prospect's name above address.

We particularly call your attention to the success of Seabold's revue and style show, for this is surely one of the seasons of the year when an event of this kind can be successfully put over. In view of their scramble after business merchants should be doubly susceptible to suggestions along this line, and as far as the theatre is concerned it can only result in wide publicity and increase in attendance at very small cost.

That's the way to get acquainted with your fellow showmen, John, and we are all obliged to you for passing along the above suggestions. Incidentally, let us state that this new member arrived in Warsaw last July to take charge of a house that was not doing the business it should have attracted. Nothing much in the way of advertising and exploitation had ever been used. Seabold exploits every picture and as a result the house has been doing exceptionally well since he was placed at the helm. We know that he will continue to build patronage and will expect to receive further accounts of how business is progressing.

FALL FESTIVALS!

A special week under this title might give you a good opportunity of emphasizing the quality of the new season's product and also to surround the week with many added attractions—plus a florist's tie-up for some autumn foliage.

Staged early in November, it may work right into your layout so as to really make the week outstanding in many ways, including receipts. As we recall from last year's Club pages, hundreds of these Fall Festival Weeks were engineered with fine results by showmen all over the country. Some combined the Fall Fashion Revue with the Festival and thereby added more pull for the box office.

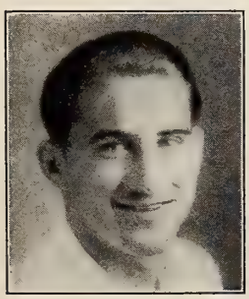
There are many interesting and worth-while slants to special weeks of this sort, and those who have never given the idea much thought or consideration ought to investigate the possibilities of them.

After we get into the winter months the Club pages will probably carry many Fall Festival campaigns; but then it will be too late to carry through the idea, unless you revamp it for a Winter Festival.

Tri-Weekly Radio Broadcast Is A Big Aid To Fred Weiler

A radio broadcast Monday, Wednesday and Friday over a Metropolitan station is proving a real live plug for the Victory Theatre, Bayside, L. I., N. Y., a house managed by Fred Weiler.

During the allotted fifteen minutes on the air a full description of current and coming attractions is announced and it is usually managed to work in about three orchestral numbers and an organ solo. The broadcasts are made under the personal supervision of Weiler and from time to time he also renders a number on either the organ or piano.



The Victory is the only theatre on the north shore of Long Island that broadcasts a program so it will be seen that this house is getting its full share of publicity from this source. As a further means of publicizing this attraction, attention is called to the broadcast on the front cover of the house program and on mailing cards, 3,000 of the former and 1,500 of the latter being distributed each week.

Weiler is getting excellent results from this broadcast chiefly because his house is the only one rendering such a service along the entire north shore of the Island. It is assumed that the station grants him the fifteen-minute period in lieu of the musical numbers rendered but even if a theatre finds it necessary to pay a low wholesale rate for a short period, a house similarly situated might find this a worthwhile method of publicizing theatre and coming attractions.

Fred is located in a fine and hustling residential community just far enough from New York City to make picture-going one of the town attractions. He should have many worthwhile tips for his fellow showmen and we'll be looking for further accounts of Bayside theatrical doings.

ROUND TABLE BIOGRAPHIES

When Clarence J. Olbrich decided to ultimately become a theatre manager he started in at the bottom of the ladder and after taking a shot at every conceivable task in house operation, from janitor to chief executive, we find him today at the helm of the Liberty Theatre, Kennewick, Wash.

Clarence Olbrich

Olbrich was born in Spokane, Wash., January 18, 1909, and was educated in the public schools of Kennewick. He became an operator at the age of 16, choosing the theatre as a calling because of "some sort of unexplainable fascination," to use his own words. His reason for familiarizing himself with all phases of theatre operation was because he thought he should have first-hand knowledge of everything that went on in order to groom himself for a manager's job.

He has been connected with the Inland Theatre Circuit practically all of the time spent in show business and at the present has no thought of ever discarding his present profession for another. He's a member of the Modern Woodmen of America and is still a bachelor.

GROWING STRONGER EVERY DAY!

N. W. HUSTON is the owner-manager of the Liberty Theatre, Columbus, Kansas, and we are mighty glad to introduce this new member to the rest of the boys. He has been operating this theatre since 1916, which is quite a long time for a theatreman to stay in one place. The fact that he is an owner is the answer. Huston in addition to being engaged in show business also holds down the job of Postmaster in his town and therefore manages to keep pretty busy. His experience in this business dates back to 1909 when he used to run General Film two-reelers and we believe that we all can look forward to receiving some interesting contributions from this new Round Tabler.

ROLAND K. VANDERBURGH has the job of assisting E. C. Lackey with the management of the Kerrisdale Theatre in Vancouver, B. C., Canada. He is also a new member of this Club and prior to being assigned to his present position was a member of the service staff. His boss states that he's on the job 100 per cent and predicts that he's going somewhere in show business. The Club would like to hear from both assistant and boss as to what they are doing to send the Kerrisdale over the top.

LOCKWOOD JENNINGS assists G. H. Foster with the management of the Kenton Theatre, Kenton, Ohio, and G. H. has sponsored his application for membership in this organization. Jennings is 20 years of age and has been with the Kenton for eight months, acting as doorman before being promoted to his present position. He's on the way toward the goal of full-fledged manager and we trust that headquarters will hear from both him and Foster as to what is going on at the Kenton.

HAROLD McCARTER is the assistant manager of the Odeon Theatre, a house managed by Bert Korbel and located on West 145th Street, New York City. McCarter has been with the Odeon for 18 months and prior to this association was a member of the staff of the Roosevelt Theatre. He has advanced to his present position from the bottom of the ladder and is well on the way toward attaining a managerial post. What's the matter with you and Bert disproving the assertion that New York City managers don't exploit shows any more, Harold? We'll be awaiting your reply.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

M. PAUL BEAN manages the Colorado Theatre in Denver, Colo., a house exclusively devoted to the running of Western pictures. Attractions are changed often in this theatre and Paul tells us that he finds Club pages mighty useful in thinking up new ideas. We are glad to enroll him as a new member and hope that he will do his part in the matter of making contributions to this department.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

WALTER H. WOODMAN manages the Strand Theatre in Waverly, Mass., and while he's been on the outside looking in for a long time, at this writing he's a bona fide Round Tabler. Walter admits that this department has interested him ever since it was started and has signified his intention of becoming one of the Club's active members. This means that you will have an opportunity to test his showmanship recipes in the near future.

GEORGE GEMMING is the assistant manager of the Webster Theatre in Rochester, N. Y., a house managed by Max Fogel. While he has been with this theatre but a short time his experience in show business dates back six years, having acted as assistant manager of the Lafayette Theatre in Batavia, and the same position at the Liberty, Riviera and Madison theatres in Rochester. Give our best regards to Markus Myers when you meet him, George, and now that you are a member of this organization, do your bit by sending in some tips for your brother showmen.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

L. S. BACH has charge of the Alpha Theatre in Atlanta, Ga., and we are glad to extend the Club welcome to this new member from the South. What are you doing in your neighborhood to sell shows, Bach? Next time you write headquarters, jot down an account of some of those live-wire stunts you've been putting over so we can pass the information along to your fellow showmen.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

L. P. BOUDREAUX manages the Crescent Theatre in Dade City, Fla., and we are in receipt of his application for membership in this Club. This organization is well represented in his state and we hope that this new Round Tabler will help keep up the standard set by brother showmen down his way. Shoot along your ideas, Boudreaux, and we will do the broadcasting.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

J. I. SIMMS has charge of the Reliance Theatre in Orangeburg, S. C., and he's another new member of this organization. Simms, in order to give you a real introduction it's necessary to present some examples of your work as a showman, so don't forget to send along an account of that fashion show you intend to stage.

ARNOLD N. GATES has the job of filling the 2,500 seats of Loew's Granada Theatre out in Cleveland, Ohio, a house on a straight picture policy with two changes a week. This ought to give you something to occupy your mind, Arnold, so why not take a little time off at the first opportunity and tell your fellow Club members what you do to send the Granada over the top. Now that you've become a member of this organization get the Spirit and let the rest of the gang in on some of those live-wire ideas.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

JOE HERMAN is the manager of the Parkside Theatre, Flatbush section of Brooklyn, N. Y., one of the houses in which the well known Brandt Brothers got their start in show business. Joe is a new member of this organization and we'd like to hear what he's doing to keep his theatre up to mark. We can well remember when his house had a lot less competition than it has at the present time, so will look forward to receiving Joe's recipe for combating the present situation in his neighborhood.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

CHARLES L. OSWALD is at the helm of the Apollo Theatre in Martinsburg, W. Va., and it's a pleasure to extend a welcome to this newly elected Round Tabler. His house is one of the Warner chain of theatres in his state and we will anticipate hearing all about what Charley is doing to sell shows down his way. Shoot along your ideas, C. L.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

JAMES T. GRADY is in charge of Loew's New Rochelle Theatre in the thriving Metropolitan suburb of New Rochelle, N. Y., and by the time this appears in print he will have received his certificate of membership in this organization. He operates a 2,600-seat house devoted to picture policy and managers up his way know how to let the public know what's going on in their theatres. So let the rest of the gang in on how you put them over, James.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

CHARLES McLEARY manages the Century Theatre, Baltimore, Md., and now that he's on the job again after going through an operation for appendicitis, we predict that he will become a regular contributor to this department; particularly when we let you in on the fact that he is a newly elected member of the Round Table Club. Lots of live showmen down in Baltimore and soon we'll be telling you about the live-wire stunts that he is putting over.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

WALTER W. PENCE is the assistant manager of the Virgina Theatre in Harrisonburg, Va., and is sponsored for membership in this Club by his manager Charles H. McKinney. Walter has been with the Virginia for nine months and gave up the job of teller in a bank to engage in show business. His boss states that he is on the job and to "watch his rise in our business." Need we say more except to state that we'll certainly keep an eye on this newcomer.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

ERWIN E. MARTIN is the manager of the Barnum Theatre in Bridgeport, Conn., and he is another new member in this large organization of showmen. We are mighty glad to have Martin with us and will look forward to hearing from him regularly as to what he is doing in the show-selling line. Send along some show tips for your fellow Round Tablers, Erwin, and we will pass them on.

SOUND REPRODUCTION

The BLUEBOOK School

By F. H. RICHARDSON

BLUEBOOK SCHOOL QUESTION NO. 101—(A) Describe a simple demonstration of a "tuned circuit." (B) What is the first requirement in stabilizing motor speed? (C) By what device is the driving motor enabled to govern its own speed? (D) Describe the action of the speed governing motor.

(Note—These questions are taken verbatim from the index of Vol. 3 of the Bluebook.)

Answer to Question No. 95

The answers are not all yet in, I believe, but by next week we will be back to normal after the late mixup. I shall divide the answer into two sections, because of the fact that while many have answered A and B correctly, many frankly gave up on the special question, while many made a rather wild stab at it.

Question No. 95 was: (A) What attention should be given the pickup optical system each day? (B) Suppose that, after starting, the sound blurred, became sharp or fairly so and then an instant later blurred again. Where would you seek the trouble and just what would you do to remedy it?

Special—The theory of action of a D C motor is that a current carrying conductor placed in a magnetic field will tend to move in such direction as will embrace the greatest number of lines of force. Query: What is the theory of action in an induction motor?

While the time still is too short for all answers to have arrived, still many have come across with satisfactory answers to questions A and B. They are as follows: Kroll & Van Buskirk, N. D. Garling, G. E. Doe, Henry Edwards, R. B. Whithnath, Bill Doe, D. Fausett, Robert Banning, Andrew T. Schofield, Nic Granby, A. F. Boe, H. D. Cole, N. Lathrop and B. Spaulding, L. Goldman, Larry Tipton, George Hendershot, Chas. G. Nielson, Dave Granby, Leroy Bates, Seth Emmerson, Tony Zirl, Dick Hand, Thomas D. Kitt, William Williams and Frank H. Battersol.

I have given the reply of Chas. G. Neilson preference on A and B. He says: "Examine the exciting lamp each day before starting projection. Make sure that (1) its filament is perfectly straight, (2) its globe is clean, (3) its light is properly centered upon the slit, though I do not regard this latter as necessary each day. Assuming the light to be properly centered and the lamp adjustment to be unchanged, if the filament remains straight there could really be no change in the spot at the slit. (4) In addition to this the outer surface of the condenser should be kept perfectly clean, as well as the lens surface at the front end of the slit barrel, and the projectionist must be sure the light is in proper adjustment at the sound gate aperture. (B) In such a case it would be evident that the sound gate had not been closed, or, being closed, was not properly fastened. I would immediately move the fader to zero, close the gate and advance the fader to normal position as fast as possible. If the sound gate be closed without retarding the fader, the effect might be a roar of sound for a second or two."

Note—Messrs. Evans and Rau, Victoria, B. C., made excellent reply to question No. 94, but it arrived late. The same was true of P. A. Dolman, A. Trueax, Mike O'Malley, D. Broker, G. L. Lennox and Pete Garvy.

Later: After all the foregoing was prepared, the answer of Evans and Rau to No. 95 came in and I am of a mind to print their answer to section (B), for although they fail to even mention the gate being open, still they set forth several possible causes of such a trouble which friend Neilson did not mention and which your editor for some cause did not himself "get," though he does really know such things could happen and have happened.

Rau and Evans say:

"(B) . . . If, after starting, the sound blurred, then was perhaps sharp, or fairly so for an instant and then blurred again, it would be wise to immediately examine the sound gate aperture to see if a very small piece of lint was caught in the aperture so that it interfered intermittently with the light beam. If that is the cause it may be cleared by using a small bellows or, if very tightly caught, it may be necessary to quickly bring the fader to the 'off' position, open the sound gate and clear the lint out of the aperture by using a pick or bellows, and then shutting the sound gate and returning the fader to the running position.

"Oil on the sound track would cause a blurring of the sound and if certain portions of the film were oily and other portions were clean, which might be possible, this may be the cause of the intermittent blurring of the sound. The film, in that case, would have to be carefully cleaned.

"Emulsion and dirt on the sound gate will throw the film out of its normal position, thus throwing the film out of its proper focal plane, which will cause blurred sound. It may happen that the dirt or emulsion moves somewhat because of the movement of the film, and thus the blurring of the sound may be intermittent. The remedy is to keep the sound gate thoroughly clean.

"It may be also possible that the objective lens is a trifle loose, this, by the vibration of the machine, thus throwing the beam of light on the film intermittently out of focus.

"The above are the most common causes of an intermittent blurred sound trouble but it would be wise to examine the electrical connections at the exciting lamp and photoelectric cell in case this was the trouble, though in that case the usual result would be an intermittent crackling sound instead of an intermittent blurred sound.

"(C) . . . The theory of action in an induction motor is that the armature has a tendency to follow a rotating magnetic field."

That (C) answer gave me a laugh. It is literally correct, I would say, but it's more or less an expert sidestep just the same. Right?

As to the special question, the best answer comes from a theatre manager, formerly a projectionist, Robert R. Brumett, Jellico, Tennessee, who says:

"Usually when applying the term 'Induction Motor,' it is generally accepted to refer to an alternating current motor—however, correctly speaking, such is not the case or true, for the ever-present induction principle is present in direct current machines as well as any alternating current machine.

"In order to understand the application of theory from the wellknown and familiar direct current machines, and the A.C., a simple comparison and analogy can be readily made and must be thoroughly understood, if the alternating current principle is conceived.

"The D.C. machine consists of two separate windings, each serving a special purpose:

"(1) The field (stator) member whose function is to set up a magnetic circuit or field.

"(2) The armature (rotor) coils which constitute the electric circuit carrying the working current. In addition to this working current, the armature coils also act as generator coils, generating a voltage which prevents more current from flowing than is required in the armature. This generation is very important and is known as back electromotive force—or, as usually termed, as back E.M.F. The value of this back E.M.F. is usually near that of the impressed voltage. As an example, take a 5 H.P. 230-volt motor. If there were no back E.M.F. to oppose the impressed voltage, then there would be a sudden rush of current which would burn the motor—a current according to Ohm's law of about 767 amps. would be rushed through the winding. Instead, as in the actual conditions, only about 20 amps. will flow as the armature, in addition to carrying this 20 amp. working current, generates a voltage of 224. Therefore 230 minus 224, six volts, is required to handle this 20 amps. through the coils. The 224 volts are absorbed.

ANSWER TO NO.95 AND A DISCUSSION

"This same back E.M.F. will be referred to later in connection with transformer action in the induction motor. A back E.M.F. then may be understood to represent a voltage that is set up and opposes the impressed voltage. This voltage is ever present in transformers, motors, etc., and is an important factor.

"The theory as to what makes the armature in a D.C. motor rotate will not be attempted—instead the purpose of the windings, that can be applied to the A.C. machine in actual use. The similarity of the D.C. machine to the A.C. is very close, not by actual outside appearance but by inherent conditions.

"As we all know, there is a true A.C. in all D.C. machines and oftimes A.C. is taken from the D.C. armature for commercial use. Contrary to usual practice, if the armature of a D.C. motor were locked, and could the fields be caused to rotate, then we would have by comparison a modern alternating current motor, which would have no brushes and is one feature of an A.C. machine.

"This leads us up to a point where we might leave the D.C. principle and apply same to the A.C. machine. The essential working parts of the A.C. machine are:

"(1) The stator winding (in the A.C. machine this winding is stationary, therefore is the armature) also known as the primary winding and is that to which the line voltage is applied. It is in this winding that the back E.M.F. is set up.

"(2) The rotor which is the secondary and carries the working current, and is the rotating member. The rotor is sometimes a wound rotor, and then the usual solid squirrel cage rotor is used, which has the necessary copper bars to carry the current. The rotor as well as stator is laminated so that the iron will not heat. Points that should be known before going further as to inherent working conditions within the motor or windings:

"(1) There are no electrical connections between the stator or rotor, or the primary and secondary as it is sometimes termed. It will be well to recall the transformer principles.

"(2) There is a rotating field within the stator. An interesting experiment is to remove the rotor entirely—apply about one-fourth rated voltage to stator winding, insert a tin can through the center of which a rod has been inserted. The can, when placed inside the stator bore, will be seen to rotate at such speed as the rotor itself. This experiment proves the secret of the A.C. motor, that there is actually an invisible rotating field.

"(3) There is a transformer action between the stator and rotor.

"(4) There is a back E.M.F. being set up in the stator winding almost equal to the line or impressed voltage.

"Therefore, there are actually only three things going on in the winding after the voltage is impressed. First: a magnetic current is set up; second: a working current transformed to the rotor; third: a back E.M.F. set up which is opposite in direction and slightly less than the impressed voltage.

"So much has been said for the stator, but why does the rotor rotate? If one will take as an example a piece of tin and place some on a piece of thin paper and pass beneath this tin a permanent magnet, it will be noted that the magnet attracts the tin and tries to draw it to its base. If the magnet is drawn across the paper the tin follows it, by virtue of the magnet's tendency to attract and drag the tin. This condition is equally true in the electric induction motor. The stator winding sets up a rotating field and if a metal of any kind is inserted the winding will draw the metal to its bore. If it is of such size and shape and properly suspended, the metal will readily be caused to rotate with great speed and force. Therefore with proper inter-connection of the windings most any speed can be obtained and power developed.

"It may be seen then that with D.C. the armature is caused to rotate by a push principle of the lines of force. This is not true with A.C. for it can be readily seen the rotor is caused to rotate by the iron following the lines of force which are rotating around the periphery of the stator."

In order to be entirely certain of this answer it was submitted to John Hertner, than whom I know of no better authority in such a matter. He returned the manucript with the following comment:

"The answer is all right, except I believe exceptions might be taken to the statements concerning the paper and tin.

"It is true that a magnet applied under a piece of paper supporting a bit of sheet steel will draw this after it. The action of the rotor is somewhat different.

"If a motor were made having in it a solid steel rotor, this rotor would revolve with a certain degree of pep. Were this rotor now laminated in the usual way the chances are it would not revolve at all until a squirrel cage of conductors is inserted. The action is essentially between the primary field and the currents set up in the squirrel cage. The iron simply makes it possible for the magnetic flux to be enormously greater than were it not present and without the use of excessive magnetizing current in the primary.

"I don't know whether this is as clear as it might be, but it is not simply theory—it is actual experimental fact. Take a wound rotor type of motor. Excite the primary by closing the operating switch, but leave the secondary open. I have in mind a wound rotor motor with a resistance for speed control. With this resistance open and the rotor well laminated there is not enough pull to turn it over. On closing the rotor winding through the resistance the motor begins to run since current is now flowing in the rotor winding. A motor could be made with no iron in the rotor. It would operate, but would take an excessive current because it would require so much magnetizing force.

"Using the D.C. motor as an analogue. If the armature is short-circuited and the field excited it will be found hard to turn the shaft. Now suppose the frame of this motor is supported so that it can revolve. Upon turning the frame the armature will follow it with considerable force as long as it is short-circuited and the field on, for in this motor we now have a revolving field and a short-circuited rotor.

"It also is stated that most any speed may be attained by the revolving part. It might be well to explain that there is always a limit to this speed, which is the speed of the revolving field. It can go no faster."

Here is how John Hertner himself makes answer to the question itself:

"I believe what you say about direct current motor theory, that is, 'a current carrying conductor-loop always places itself in a position to enclose the greatest number of lines' is called fundamental largely because it is convenient and concise.

"Fundamentally a conductor sweeping across a field has created within itself an E.M.F. This, if the circuit is closed, produces a current. A current flow always is surrounded by a field caused by itself. Then of course there will be the field already present and the one caused by the current. The reaction between these is such as to cause motion on the part of the conductor. Its motion ceases when the cause for such motion is removed, that is, when no lines are being cut, and that occurs when the motion and lines are parallel or the loop is enclosing the largest number of lines.

"The above is long winded, but is, I believe, the true sequence and covers the action of the induction motor as well as any electro-magnetic action.

"In the induction motor a revolving field is produced by the action of the two or three-phase current. It is precisely what would be produced by mechanically turning the field of a D.C. motor on its axis.

"When the squirrel cage is introduced into this field, its conductors cut the lines of the field and current is produced. The interaction between this current and the field is to cause the squirrel cage to turn with the field and at a speed just enough slower to be able to produce enough E.M.F. and consequently current to overcome the friction or resistance to this motion."

Out of some hundreds of attempts, only the following others made acceptable answers: Kroll & Van Buskirk, James DeVoy, Bill Doe, Harry Lidding and C. Frank L. Streator.

Adjusting Simplex Single-Bearing Movement

Henry McWay, chief projectionist of Walkers Theatre, Rockdale, Mass., wants to know how to adjust a Simplex single-bearing movement. I have given friend McWay the necessary information by return mail, but have also directed his attention to the fact that all such instructions are set forth in the Bluebook.

For example, on Page 708, Vol. 2, instruction No. 2, tells in full detail exactly how to remove a Simplex intermittent movement as a unit. On Page 709, instruction No. 3, advises in full detail just how to go about replacing the movement, and this operation is not quite as simple as might appear unless you tackle it in exactly the right way. On Page 711, instruction No. 4 tells how to adjust a Simplex intermittent movement so as to eliminate excess circumferential movement in the intermittent sprocket, and so on. These instructions are completely and fully illustrated by photographs, in which each part is lettered or numbered. It would seem to me to be very foolish for the projectionist of today to fail to have the Bluebook, which same is standard in projection matters literally all over the English speaking world. The United States Government itself has purchased several hundred copies for use in its battleships, barracks and other places where motion pictures are used. They paid the usual price too, except for the regular discount on a large number of books.

MUSIC AND TALENT

COMPETITION ADDS ORGANIST JOBS

STAGE SHOWS

New York Capitol

Week ending October 15

The entire show at this house is chock-full of entertainment this week. The main attraction is William Haines (in the flesh and on the screen). Beside being on the screen in his latest picture, "New Adventures of Get-Rich-Quick Wallingford," Haines makes his stage debut in an 11-minute playlet.

The stageshow is called, "Great Guns," and is a Louis K. Sidney production, staged by Arthur Knorr. This pretentious show opens to a surprisingly realistic scene, depicting Riverside Drive in which a number of sailors and the 24 Chester Hale Girls sing the opening chorus. The next scene depicts the deck of a battle-cruiser and for the balance of the show this scene is used. The Capitolians, conducted by George McKay play appropriate tunes for all the acts. Milton Berle, traveling master of ceremonies works in and out throughout the show, getting most of the laughs with his witticisms and smart chatter. The Jewish version of "Roll On Mississippi," which he sings earned a great hand and plenty laughs. The Four Monitors, singing quartet, are undeniably good singers but are permitted to do very little in this show. Maureen Rio, who hasn't much of a voice, sings "How's Your Uncle," and sells it with a lot of showmanship, getting herself a fine hand. The 12 Navy Steppers, six girls, six boys, show good ability with their tap dance routine as do the 16 Chester Hale girls who do an authentic "Silent Manual of Arms Drill." Both of these turns get good applause.

William Haines' act opens with a motion picture of him being the butt for sympathy from his fellow stars, who all tell him how sorry they are for him. The last scene shows Buster Keaton putting a lily in Haines' hand, and that is how he appears on the stage after the picture ends. While talking, he is interrupted by someone in the audience who continues to ask for his autograph and finally comes on the stage. The lady is Cupid Ainsworth (weighing 265 pounds). Cupid helps Haines along and finally they join in a little song and dance for a finish. There is no doubt of Haines' popularity with these patrons and though he is not a finished stage performer, his own personal appeal help him across the tough places and earn him tremendous applause.

Mystery and magic were the keynotes of the presentation act centering around Raymond, who claims to be the world's greatest living magician, assisted by the Sunkist Beauties.

The Sunkist Beauties in orange and black with long golden trumpets heralded the advent of Raymond, who appeared from a cabinet in a cloud of smoke, with an effective oriental setting. A series of the usual tricks of producing objects from thin air proved that the hand is quicker than the eye. Oranges appeared in glass dishes and were thrown to the audience, white doves were captured from the air with nets, and white ducks hopped out of

WILD OSCAR

Professionally known as "Wild Oscar," this smiling, congenial fellow has a real name and it is Lloyd Hill. He was given the moniker of Wild Oscar in 1926 when radio was in its infancy and when there were precious few organists featured over the air. He was the first organist to put on a burlesque radio broadcast in a theatre and since that time he has worked up his own type of entertainment until he stands alone in this particular field. Wild Oscar opens Saturday, October 17, at the RKO Albee theatre, Albee Square, Brooklyn, New York, and will present his own inimitable style of work to Brooklyn audiences from now on. This is his first assignment with RKO. He was with the Loew circuit and Paramount heretofore.

Two-a-Day for Moss' Broadway

Overhead of B. S. Moss' new Broadway theatre in New York suggests a change to a two-a-day policy. Moss' weekly bill for big-name acts is too much to permit of a grind at popular prices.

Moss opened the house a few weeks ago with a big-name vaude and picture policy.

To Manage Radio Station

Bill Clark, former publicity man for the Libson Cincinnati circuit and Loew Pittsburgh houses. has been named manager of the WFBE, broadcasting station sponsored by the Cincinnati Post.

Trying Straight Vaudeville

Skouras Brothers' Ambassador in St. Louis, Mo., will try straight vaudeville with pictures and if successful will eliminate the former master of ceremonies stage show policy.

Circuits See Soloists As Box Office Boon

Success Based on Audience Singing; Theatres Use Music to Compete For Patrons in Community

By ED DAWSON

Competition among circuits, recognizing the importance of the organ to the well-rounded program, is bringing more work for the organists in spite of talking pictures. Circuit managements are learning the necessity of overcoming the handicap to their box offices presented by the drawing power of outstanding organists in rival theatres.

Brooklyn is a case in point, and it all started when the Paramount theatre was built there in 1929. There were organists working in Brooklyn theatres at the time but they had not meant a great deal at the ticket window. Then came the Paramount, and a craze for audience singing was inaugurated when Bob West was brought in. He built up community singing fests so successfully that other theatres found it advisable to put on organists who could give programs that would make the patrons feel like singing and becoming part of the performance.

Wild Oscar at RKO Albee

The latest move is the introduction of Wild Oscar (Lloyd Hill) to the RKO Albee. The wellknown radio and theatre organist will feature his entertaining type of presentations.

The keenness of the competition that brings this development is reflected by the geographical situation, Detroit has more organists working at present than any other city in the country, with Brooklyn running a close second. Brooklyn and immediate vicinity had 18 organists at work, nine of them being in theatres within a four-block radius.

The Result of Competition

At the Brooklyn Paramount Merle Clark and Elsie Thompson are featured at the twin consoles. At the Fox, Ron and Don feature their baby console. There is Johnny Winters played up at the Warner-Strand, and Marlin is at the console of Loew's Metropolitan. The only other house in the vicinity is the RKO Albee. Harold Grayson has been the house organist but he has not been featured since he has been there. Now comes the introduction of Wild Oscar to the theatre patrons to feature his own presentations.

Bill Cody On Stage

Bill Cody, Monogram Western star, will play two weeks at the Lyric in Tulsa, Okla., coincident with showing of his film, "Oklahoma Jim."

dishes and baskets and walked about the stage.

Raymond then demonstrated his famous "wardrobe of girls" trick, in which eight of the Sunkist Beauties in succession stepped out of an apparently empty cabinet which was rapidly opened and closed. The eight girls in orange blouses and hats with black velvet doublets and large drums gave a drum drill, at the conclusion of which Raymond extracted from the drums a dozen white doves, which he enclosed in a box, then in plain sight of the audience took the box apart piece by piece, showing that it was empty.

The socalled "divorce machine" was a clever trick in which Mrs. Raymond seated herself in a chair suspended between two ropes. Raymond stepped in front of her, took deliberate aim and fired. When the smoke had cleared away she had disappeared. He offered to disposed of any unwanted husbands or wives in the audience in the same way.

In the "haunted house" trick various shadows appeared on the transparent paper walls of a miniature house which was shown to be empty.

The trunk mystery, which he claimed to have performed before various crowned heads and also before seven presidents of the United States, was his crowning achievement. With the assistance of several of the audience, Mrs. Raymond was securely handcuffed, tied in a sealed bag and placed in a trunk, wearing the coat of one of the men from the audience. The trunk was locked, tied with ropes and placed in a tent. Almost immediately Mrs. Raymond emerged and in a very short time the trunk was brought to the front of the stage. When it was opened, Raymond stepped out, handcuffed and wearing the coat which Mrs. Raymond had worn when she was placed in the trunk.

Omaha Orpheum

Week ending October 8

RKO vaudeville offered on this week's bill includes acts by the Lee twins, dancing girls; by the trio, Annie, Judy and Zeke; Jack Worth and, as a headliner, Ann Codee.

The Lee twins appear first in colonial costume, dancing Paderewski's minuet. In quick change of costume they wear white satin trousers and carry swagger sticks, for a light soft-shoe tap. The curtain used in the next scene is oriental. Five girls, with staccato movements, form pyramids with silhouette effect. Then the twins present an athletic dance. Another scene, in which six girls are in the chorus, portrays a Roman arena locale. The twins appear in white costumes.

Jack North opens his act by singing "Just One More Chance." He jests with the house about its applause and then describes various applauses, as by people of different nationalities, Jewish, Scotch, etc. Another song, "Oh, Why Don't We Get Along," follows. A medley of song titles follows, to which he plays his own accompaniment on the mandolin. His act closes with his introducing the trio, Annie, Judy and Zeke, as the bashful kids from the farm.

The trio amble on to the stage in the awkward way befitting the occasion. Popular barndance melodies of 20 and 30 years ago, sung by Zeke, and chimed in by Annie, augmented occasionally with her rhythmic keeping of time by tapping a foot, get the act into full swing in a hurry. Annie's antics, aside, while Zeke sings, keep the house giggling. Judy ably plays a piano number, and more of the rustic humor follows. In a closing number the two girls play the accompaniment—one at the piano and the other at a xylophone—while Zeke sings. In the meantime, Annie has sung "Nobody Cares for Me."

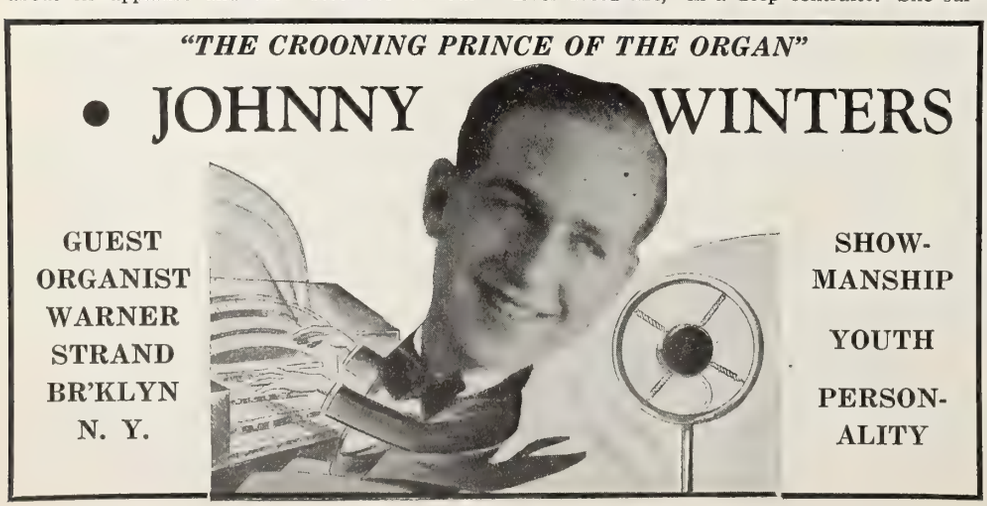
Ann Codee, the French girl, sings "You, Just You." Assisting her are two men—one introduced as Maurice Chevalier—the other "Claude," her would-be suitor. Her act centers around her desire to find a real man. "Claude" tries to sing—but continually is ridiculed by the other man. Finally he does sing "Wabash Moon."

Brooklyn Fox

Week ending October 15

The Fanchon & Marco Idea this week is "Carmenesque" and makes use of seven different people to introduce it. Sam Jack Kaufman, from the pit, first introduces the show, the The 3 Matadores introduce it in Spanish and then the 3 Madrinas interpret what they have said in English. This is a fast-moving unit and one in which the Sun-Kist Beauties are to the foreground, performing specialties of their own which should rate them as much billing as some of the featured acts. The show opens to a "fiesta" scene in which the line-girls do a snappy routine as the 3 Matadores offer an authentic tambourine dance. Next the girls offer one of the outstanding bits of the show. This is a routine on huge wooden balls, on which the girls maneuver to form patterns and other difficult formation. The 3 Matadores, in "kid" suits, next offer a comedy tap routine that gets a good hand. Ray Sacks entertained the customers with saxaphone, clarinet and xylaphone playing. The outstanding part of his act was the playing of "St. Louis Blues" on a clarinet and tenor sax while dancing and while standing on his head in a backbend. He earned a good hand for this.

Rose Valydo, who sings in two voices, is nicely set off with an atmospheric fan dance by the line-girls as she sings "If You Should Ever Need Me," in a deep contralto. She surprises the audience on the second chorus by singing in just as pleasing a soprano voice. Melino and Davis are next on the bill. Miss Davis first does a good comedy dance routine that gets a good hand and is followed by Melino, who is dressed in grotesque full dress, minus the trousers. His appearance, apparently, was the only thing this audience saw amusing. Most of his cross-fire and wisecracks fell away short, some of them not even getting a snicker. The next scene is one in which the line-girls do a cape-twirling routine and then do their second surprise bit of this show. This is a high-kick and jazz dance routine, which they do on six-foot stilts. At the finish of their dance the entire company join on the stage for the finale.



Detroit Michigan

Week ending October 8

Ed Weisfeld did a nice piece of work in producing this stage show, tying up a handful of local radio favorites with Gus Van for some radio frolics. The travelers open to disclose a huge radio set, through which the voice of the announcer gives the patrons an idea of what is to follow. The curtains then part to reveal Eduard Werner directing the Michigan orchestra on a high set of parallels, with the decorative scheme showing "the works" on the inside of a radio cabinet. For the first number, Werner leads his 24 musicians in a splendid rendition of Gershwin's "Rhapsody in Blue," assisted by six attractive girls. The girls are seated at baby grands, and rise into view on the orchestra lift. Plenty of novelty, and really fine music. Bob Nolan, master of ceremonies, then starts the ball rolling with his own inimitable singing of "Ol' Man River," the piece which established him locally. Charlotte Meyers and Mary Tudor, two of the most popular radio singers in these parts, set the audience on fire with three numbers and an encore. Gus Van, who lost his partner in this man's town a little over a year ago, sings the same familiar tunes he used to do with Joe Schenck at the piano—and how the patrons go for it. Frank Gill, Jr., known hereabouts as "The Phantom Announcer" and "The Fireman's Child," makes his appearance in a raincoat and a rubber hat, dragging a red fire engine. Frank works a la Groucho Marx. A dancing unit of 12 girls in two numbers, one a most effective radium offering, completes the show. It has color, pep and punch, and if this policy is continued, should add to the popularity of the Michigan.

Vaudeville Back at RKO House

Vaudeville will be reinstated at the RKO Keith's in Dayton, O., on October 17, it has been decided. Unit shows will be featured.

ORGAN SOLOS

WILL GILROY (Brooklyn Pitkin) introduced a number of wellknown songs for the audience to sing and they all did full justice to them. Mr. Gilroy opens his solo with a slide bearing the words, "Sing a Song with Will Gilroy," and then goes into the playing of "Walkin' My Baby Back Home," "I Surrender Dear," "Two Hearts" (this song with German lyrics). Then a really funny tongue-twister about "Susie's Shoes" (written to the tune "That's My Weakness"), and a final chorus of "Love Letters In the Sand." The audience sang every number and though they muffed on the comedy number they apparently enjoyed the solo very much. Mr. Gilray, since his inaugural program here, has been presenting entertaining novelties which have made him very popular.

MAC BRIDWELL (San Antonio Majestic) offered the following song numbers on song slides: first, "Vacationary Rhythm," next a clever parody on "I Want to Sing About You"; followed by "When the Moon Comes Over the Mountain"; "Let Me Call You Sweetheart"; a specialty to the tune of "Moonlight Saving Time"; "Two Little Blue Little Eyes"; a tongue twister on "Please Don't Talk"; and a travesty on "Smile, Darn Ya, Smile," and "Lazy River." Mac Bridwell also used the concert violinist, Dave Smason, in a combined musical solo and Smason played two river sketches, "By the River Sainte Marie" and "Up a Lazy River." Both Bridwell and Smason received a nice round of applause.

BERNIE COWHAM (Flushing Keith's) opened his solo last week with the playing of "Voice of the RKO," and then tells the audience, in his inimitable, intimate and natural fashion, about the love songs he has for them to sing. He first offers "Love Letters in the Sand," then "In Your Arms," and "Kiss That You've Forgotten." This audience has learned through Bernie's efforts, to look forward each week to the singing of an oldtime song. Cowham never disappoints them. This week they sing "Old Black Joe" (not only a few, but everyone in the house). For the last half of each week, Bernie always gives the audience the latest news of the day in his own paper, the "North Shore Daily Journal." In this, he writes the latest news of the day to the tune of a popular song and always finishes up with the important baseball scores, which he writes to the tune, "Take Me Out to the Ball Game." Cowham has gained so much popularity since he has been here that he is now considered an institution in this suburb.

ESTHER LEAF (Omaha Paramount) produces "My Diary" from her console this week. The words projected upon the screen begin with "My secrets I'll now tell you" and the verse concludes with "No one can sing like you." The audience then is requested to join in the song chorus, singing song-titles, projected upon the screen. "Moonlight," "Kiss Me Again," "Some Of These Days" and "Girl of My Dreams" are in the medley. Her program concludes with the presentation of Tschaikowsky's Marche Slave.

MR. & MRS. JESSE CRAWFORD (New York Paramount) present their first organ concert together in many months and prove that they are still great favorites here. The solo opens to Mr. Crawford's playing "My Best Girl," as a slide, headed, "Dear Paramounteers" tells of Mrs. Crawford's return. For the balance of the song, special slides are used. Mrs. Crawford, making a stunning appearance in a black and white gown, is seated at the twin console and plays "The Boy Friend and Me," as slides carrying special lyrics are flashed on screen. The next slide announces that the Crawfords have had a musical argument, Mrs. Crawford claiming "Sweet & Lovely," as the best tune and Mr. Crawford sticking up for "Guilty." The audience are to offer their decision by applauding their favorite, after Mr. Crawford plays "Guilty," and Mrs. Crawford, "Sweet and Lovely." Mrs. Crawford's number proves the winner so a duet of it is played for the closing. So much more can be gotten out of the playing of both organs that this reviewer for one hopes both Mr. and Mrs. Crawford are featured together hereafter.

BOB WEST (Philadelphia Fox) called his solo "The Old Fashioned Movies." An old Mary Pickford film was thrown on the screen, accompanied by West at the organ and with the words supplied by him. He played a number of oldtime melodies such as "In the Shade of the Old Apple Tree," "Just a Song at Twilight," and "Carolina Moon," which the audience joined in singing, ending with "I've Found a Million Dollar Baby," which they sang with real enthusiasm.

OVERTURES

RUBINOFF (Brooklyn Paramount) and the Paramount Pit Orchestra presented an outstanding overture this week entitled "Romantic Rivers." Opening with "Deep River," and following with "Beautiful Ohio," "Waters of Minnetonka," "By the River Ste. Marie" (of which Rubinoff played a violin solo), "Roll On Mississippi," and "Old Man River." These "river" numbers always make a good overture and when they are presented in the showmanly manner in which Rubinoff presents his, the audience reaction is very favorable.

FRED SCHMITT (Denver, Denver) and His Denver Grande orchestra, composed of fifteen musicians, presented an overture appropriate for the season and mighty pleasing. "Harvest Time" was the name, and with harvest time scenery the setting was perfect. Parts of the following were played: "Turkey in the Straw," "Old Mill Stream," "Arkansas Traveler," "Down on the Farm," "Trees" and "Sweet Apple Cider." Corn shocks and colored leaves decorated the front of the orchestra lift. Hens cackling, roosters crowing and cowbells ringing added to the atmosphere. An especially enjoyable feature was the singing of "Shine on Harvest Moon" by a trio composed of Maurine Bryant, Louise Carpenter and Celoa Carpenter. The overture is one of the principal drawing cards of the house.

SAMUEL BENAVIE (Detroit Fisher) and his orchestra, regarded by this reviewer as one of the best in town, offered a group of three popular numbers, assisted by Del Delbridge, former Fisher M. C., singing "I Don't Know Why."

YASHA BUNCHUK (New York Capitol) and the Capitol Grand Orchestra, present an overture entitled "Broadway Melodies." This is an overture, especially arranged by the Capitol Music Staff, and one in which the musical ability of this huge aggregation of musicians has a chance to be prominently displayed. Bunchuk does his usual good job of conducting.

MAX BRADFIELD (Philadelphia Fox) and the Fox Orchestra played "A Highland Rhapsody," including a medley of familiar Scotch airs, such as "Comin' Through the Rye," "Annie Laurie" and "Blue Bells of Scotland," with Willard Singley, baritone, singing several Scotch melodies.

MAURICE BARON (New York Roxy), directing the Roxy Symphony Orchestra of 75 musicians, this week presents an epitome of the renowned "Lucia di Lammermoor." The highlights of the opera are acted on the stage by the Roxy ensemble as they are played by the orchestra. The production overtures in this house incur a huge expenditure but have proved of such entertainment value that the expense has been found justified.

CHARLES B. STEIN
MASTER OF CEREMONIES AND MUSICAL DIRECTOR
. . . .
Now Featured at the RIDGEWOOD THEATRE
BROOKLYN, NEW YORK
Under Contract With
FANCHON & MARCO
Personal Direction—PHIL BLUM

CHARLES B. STEIN (Brooklyn Ridgewood) and his New Augmented Orchestra of 12 musicians present overtures of the type that are outstanding in much larger houses than this neighborhood house. This week Mr. Stein, who is not only popular as a musical conductor but also as master of ceremonies, has prepared a special arrangement of "Rhapsody in Blue," and presents it in a high-class manner to an appreciative audience. This reviewer has never heard an orchestra as small as this one do so well with so difficult a composition. Mr. Stein is not only a very fine leader but is personable and a very good extempore speaker. His orchestra is a big feature of this house.

JOE JORDAN (Brooklyn Pitkin) and His Orchestra presented an overture of "river" numbers this week that proved highly entertaining to this audience. Opening with a special arrangement of "Ol' Man River," and using good modulations between numbers, the orchestra then followed with "River Saint Marie," "Volga Boatman," "River and Me," "Blue Danube," another chorus of "Ol' Man River," and closed with a special "hot" chorus of "Roll On You Mississippi." During the entire presentation, a pleasing "river effect" was used on the screen, enhancing the program and lending the proper atmosphere to an enjoyable presentation. Joe Jordan is a capable leader and also an accomplished musician.

VOICE OF THE INDUSTRY

Teachers Study "School and Screen"

I AM EXTREMELY INTERESTED IN having the teachers of Quincy, Mass., continue the use of your "School and Screen" this coming year, and I am writing to learn if you will continue to send this to the individual teachers.

In addition to sending this to Quincy, I would be very glad to distribute these to the students who are taking my course in the Use of Visual Aids in the Classroom, at Boston University. These students are primarily teachers of various school systems in the state, and probably they would use it in their own teaching and make it known to others in their school system.

This latter set I would like to have you send to me at Boston University School of Education, 29 Exeter Street, Boston, Mass.—Abraham Krasker.

Pictures for Small Theatres

WE ENJOY AND LOOK FORWARD TO each issue of the Herald—it's the best out. Each issue is better than the last, so keep it as it is.

Now for a word about business and how it is. Business is dead. What has happened to the comedies we used to laugh at, the good old belly-busters of just a few years ago. When you ask a salesman about them, he will tell you this is the day of suppressed laughter, and you are not supposed to have a good hearty laugh at the theatre any more. But for ourselves, give us the good old comedies without the smut and we'll have better results at the box office.

And that is what counts to any showman in the large town or small town. And after all, could the producer make money if he caters entirely to the de luxe houses?

But there must be a change soon, or there will not be any small town theatres. And millions of dollars will not be coming into the producer.

There are plenty of theatres in the small towns here in South Dakota that have kept running and losing money every day they are open. For instance, I know of several that have kept open because the manager of them had an income to live on from some other business. I know some who are grocers, postmasters, depot agents, doctors, dentists. In fact, most small town theatre owners have some other profession by which they live and can stand going in the red side of the ledger once in a while on a show, but they cannot stand it long if it is going into the red on nearly every show they run.

Count the really good shows that are on this year's program, shows that you can depend on to make money for the small town exhibitor. You will find there are very few. These shows may go over in the cities, but the small town patrons will not care about them.

More power to J. C. Jenkins and his column. The old boy is there and sure knows his stuff. Am sorry I have never had the pleasure of meeting him.—L. C. Campbell, Princess Theatre, Miller, S. D.

An Air Picture

FIRST NATIONAL'S "MEN OF THE Sky." Every sheet of paper on this show stresses action in the air. The title indicates it and the only shot in the picture of any air work was the taking of a plane for about fifty feet of film.

Plenty of criticism of the picture for the lack of what was shown on the paper. Why they will try to fool the public and the exhibitor is beyond the average mind.

"Too Many Crooks," RKO, Bert Wheeler, Dorothy Lee and Roscoe Ates. Roscoe Ates steals the show with the little that he had to do. The picture is slow and at times tiresome, which goes to show that when you split up a good team like Wheeler and Woolsey, the box office suffers.

"Transatlantic," very unusual with a good cast that made the picture very good entertainment. The settings on the liner are fine. There is action, good story and altogether a picture that you can lay to, and it ought to get money at the box office, if you can get the idea over to them that it takes place over five days at sea with a lot happening in those five days.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia City Theatre Co., Columbia City, Indiana.

Proposes New Listing

I WOULD LIKE TO SUGGEST THAT you list the feature pictures in the Release Chart, according to their release date, with a space between each month, instead of alphabetically, as you are now doing. This department would then become much more serviceable to the exhibitor.

A sample of what I mean appears below:

Misses Film Buyer

WE GREATLY MISS THE FILM BUYER and would like to receive it again. However, presume this is impossible due to the added expense.

Since you have dropped the Film Buyer, you can make up for it in part and greatly improve your service to all exhibitors by revising your Release Chart and again designating the type of each feature picture by the use of Symbols, as you formerly did in the Film Buyer, such as "CD" for Comedy Drama, etc. This information ranks equally in importance with the running time and the cast, especially in double billing and also in the selection of shorts. In either case it is very important to know the type of picture in advance.

The Release Chart is the most important section of your book to any exhibitor and trust you will see fit to improve your service by restoring the use of these symbols after each feature picture title. We appreciate your listing the running time and the casts. The crying need is to know whether it is a drama, a mystery melodrama, a romantic comedy or whatnot.

Thanking you for your attention, and trusting you will see fit to heed this little suggestion, we remain—H. C. Cochrane, Manager, Plaza theatre, Lansing, Mich.

New Name for California Allied

Allied Amusement Industries of California, headquarters at San Francisco, has changed its name to California Theatres Association. The change was found advisable, owing to the confusion which has resulted from the similarity of the name with that of another organization of theatres. Membership is made up largely of theatre circuits operating in Northern and Central California.

Brown Is Defying MPPDA, Universal

Roland Brown, Universal director, has asserted that he will re-purchase his original story "Gallows" if Universal refuses to produce it without modification. The company suggested revision after the Hays office had considered the story unwise in its present form, in view of the national public revulsion at the moment where definitely underworld themes, of which this is understood to be one, are concerned.

Brown was promoted to a directorship by Fox, but his contract there was mutually cancelled. Shortly thereafter, Carl Laemmle, Jr., understood to have been impressed by Brown's direction of "Quick Millions," Fox film, signed him as director for Universal. He has not directed a picture for Universal since he was signed.

Quebec Awaits Developments Before Deciding Quiz Plan

Quebec has taken to watchful waiting in the matter of the prosecution of film exchanges and theatre circuits under the Combines Act by the Province of Ontario and allied government.

Premier L. A. Taschereau of Quebec expressed the opinion that it was preferable to await developments in the prosecutions planned by other Canadian provinces, believing it "useless to pile up proceedings." Previously Quebec had declined to co-operate with other provinces in adopting a line of action.

House Building, Acquisition Flurry Hits San Francisco

San Francisco and its environs at the moment is experiencing a sudden flurry of theatre acquisition, building and remodeling. Charles E. Peterson has added a fifth house to his group in San Francisco. The Golden Gate circuit is about to open the Granada, also in the city.

The El Ray, new house, will be opened in the near future; Allan Levy has taken over the old Sutter and Irving Ackerman is negotiating for the acquisition of the American in Oakland, 2,500-seat house.

New Independent Distributor

The Consolidated Productions, Inc., has been organized with exchanges in Denver, Salt Lake City and Butte, Mont. C. C. McDermond is president and general manager. Firm will distribute independent product.

Takes Minneapolis House

United Artists has taken over the Pantages theatre in the loop section of Minneapolis, which has long been vacant. Eddie Cantor's "Palmy Days" opened the new theatre.

Named District Manager

Harry D. Graham, named district manager of Universal's new southwestern division, will continue as exchange manager in Kansas City in addition to his division duties.

THE RELEASE CHART

Productions are listed according to the names of distributors in order that the exhibitor may have a short-cut toward such information as he may need, as well as information on pictures that are coming. Features which are finished or are in work, but to which release dates have not been assigned, are listed in "Coming Attractions." Running times are those supplied by the distributors. Where they vary, the change is probably due to local censorship deletions. Dates are 1930, unless otherwise specified.

J. C. Jenkins—His Colyum

Rawlins, Wyo.

DEAR HERALD:

You can always tell "Where the West Begins." It's where you begin to run into Jap porters in the hotels. The line is just as marked as the Mason and Dixon line; south of that they are colored but out west they are Japs, and north and east of these lines you are apt to find anybody.

Today we drove here from Casper, a distance of 150 miles, and, not counting the few cars we passed, about the only living things we saw that moved were a band of about five thousand sheep, six horses and a dozen or so of cattle; everything else seemed to be stationary. You may not believe it, but even a Quaker State oil sign along the highway relieves the monotony and inclines one to the belief that life is not entirely extinct, that somewhere down the highway some guy has a filling station.

When you are touring Wyoming you will find that she has more country that you should stay out of than any state in the Union. When you want to go anywhere you must stay on the highway or you won't go anywhere. If you take a by-road you are apt to drive over the top of a mountain down into a deep gulch and you are lucky if you get out, but you have to be lucky, so take your rabbit's foot with you when driving the by-roads of Wyoming. But for all that, there is something about Wyoming that gets in the blood, when once you are here you hate to leave.

Maybe it's the vast expanse of the country. Maybe it's because you can see the mountain ranges covered with snow in every direction, and maybe it's because out here you feel that you are just as good as anybody on earth. We can't define it ourself but somehow we like this country and we like the people.

So far as we know, outside of Cheyenne, Sheridan and Casper, there isn't a traffic signal in the state. What would cows and sheep know about a traffic signal? You run into a band of sheep and they will clog up the highway and stand and look at you. You go into the Yellowstone Park after the tourists are all gone and there is no garbage for the bears to eat and the durned whelps will get right out on the highway in front of your car and rear up on their hind legs and try to stop you to see if you have any of Swift's bacon or premium hams in the car. They will try to flag you just like the cop does on 16th and Farnam in Omaha.

Why They Laughed

Last night in Casper we went around to the Rialto theatre to see if it was being run as it should be and when we got inside the foyer we heard such a commotion we couldn't tell whether they were having a dog fight or the carpenters were tearing the seats out, but when we got inside we found the reason for the uproar to be the Four Marx Brothers in "Monkey Business" on the screen, and the laughter was so loud and prolonged that we missed some of the dialogue, but we are not going to ask the Marx Brothers to refund us the money because we were there as a guest of Mr. Schulte, the manager. We don't know whether it was due to the Marx Brothers that Mr. Schulte had to hold 'em out for the second show or that it was an ordinary Saturday night business, but anyhow, it was the first time we have seen them stand in line for the second show for some considerable time, and it looked pretty good. Maybe they do it in lots of places, but we weren't there when they did it.

It is really surprising what memory some people have. When we walked into the office of the Fox Strand theatre tonight to call on Mr. J. E. Bangs, he got up and shook hands with us and called us by name, although it had been three years since he had seen us. He couldn't have remembered us by our clothes because the suit we wore at that time is in dry dock for repairs and we had on something else, as the law required outside of Hollywood. Maybe it's our pan. We have tried to have it photographed for publication purposes but it has always been a failure, which proves that photography is still far from a state of perfection.

The Fox Strand is a very fine theatre with all modern equipment including Mr. Bangs, the manager, who, by the way, showed us every courtesy for which we feel very grateful. It's a pleasure to meet such managers as he and we hope the Fox organization appreciates him as much as he is appreciated by the patrons of the Fox Strand here in Rawlins.

Kemmerer, Wyo.

Wyoming is the only state in the Union that is wider than it is long. If you don't think so, drive it both ways as we have. It is 145 miles from Casper to Rawlins. It is 112 miles from Rawlins to Rock Springs and 93 miles from Rock Springs to Kemmerer and not a theatre between these points, in fact there is no need for one, for all they would have to show to would be gophers, prairie dogs and an occasional sheepherder.

Rock Springs was built after the plans and specifications of an angle-worm, it tapers off at both ends and does not bulge out much in the middle.

This is the town where the famous Rock Springs coal comes from, which coal, by the way, is as good as any coal mined in any man's country.

The town boasts of a population of 9,000 people and looks like a right snappy burg. Both theatres in the town are owned by the Fox organization and are managed by Mr. Barta. We called to see Mr. Barta but couldn't locate him.

At Green River we tried to find Mr. Burt, who operates the Iris theatre, but couldn't do it, which was unfortunate for both of us.

If you have ever driven the Lincoln highway north from Granger to Kemmerer and you were still in the car when you got there, you could ride any broncho on the range and bet your last dollar on it, and if you didn't use language that is not listed in the text books then you don't belong to this generation. We are thankful that Lincoln never knew that this highway would be named for him.

This gulch where Kemmerer is located is just one coal mining camp after another and it is where the Kemmerer coal comes from and one shovel full of it will keep you warm all winter provided it doesn't get below 100 in the shade.

Two Reasons for Good B. O.

In the Fox Victory theatre tonight we saw the best Monday night business we have seen in a long time. This was no doubt due to two reasons, Maurice Chevalier in "The Smiling Lieutenant" and Mr. Williams, the manager of the theatre. We had a delightful visit with Mr. Williams and he informed us that the better part of his life has been spent in this locality and the most of it in the theatre business, which gives him a wide acquaintance throughout this territory, which is a mighty big asset at the box office of any theatre.

It's a pleasure to meet such gentlemen as Mr. Williams and we are not surprised that the Victory is enjoying good business under his capable management, for personality will tell at the box office, and at no point of contact with the public will it count for more than at the theatre entrance. Every man, woman or kid in Kemmerer can tell you who the manager of the Victory is, and this is worth dollars to any theatre.

We have found spots where the man next door to the theatre couldn't tell us the name of the manager. When we find that condition we seldom waste time in looking him up for he wouldn't know MOTION PICTURE HERALD from Jayne's Almanac.

While Wyoming has but few theatres compared with other states, we have found them well managed by capable managers which proves that Wyoming is out beyond "Where the West Begins" and where courtesy rises with the sun and sticks on the job until the lights go out. HURRAH FOR WYOMING.

"A MAN FOR THE AGES"

Motion Picture Herald is proud to present the following reflections upon Thomas Alva Edison and his career by his friend, Terry Ramsaye

Martin Quigley, Editor-in-chief

by TERRY RAMSAYE

THE end of an era has come. Thomas A. Edison is dead. With him the greatest personality, the most stellar figure, of the strange, high-colored and fantastic story of the art and the industry of the motion picture has passed into history. He is now at one with the Aristotle who first saw that the sun cast an image, with Leonardo da Vinci, who strove so valiantly to make the picture live, with Peter Mark Roget, who found there was a "persistence of vision." He and they belong to the ages.

Edison, a blithe, robust young adventurer, came forth armed with zeal and energy in a day when the womb of the laboratory was large with theory and proceeded to make delivery of fact, commercial and economic fact in the terms of Things that Work. He made research a servant of civilization, and so doing was the ablest single instrument in making a new civilization of it, freed from the flickering shadows of eons of oil lamps, freed from the limitations of time and space in communication, freed from the whimsies of fickle memory and equivocal word in the recording of sight and sound.

Long he was known as "the Wizard of Menlo Park," because frail humanity likes to believe in wizardry and magic and the easy royal road. Edison was no wizard and dreamed no dreams of magic. He worked. He hated hazy mysticism and guesses about the unknown. "Try and see" was his test and formula of action. He smiled at the growing tradition of wizardry, in the tolerance of knowing the human mind.

The motion picture which he brought across the borderland of laboratory strivings into the realm of accomplished fact, was a little incidental playtime task in the perspective of the day and time he did it. In after years he saw the greatness of the screen, but made no pretense of having foreseen it. Some thousand and odd other things he invented, developed, perfected and delivered to the world to work out their own careers of service and success.

Now is the end of an era, because with the tremendous impetus given to research, and the vast organization developments in research, typified by such concerns as General Electric, Western Electric and Westinghouse, staffs and armies of experimenters are carrying on in the pattern of scientific endeavor which Edison, beginning more than half a century ago, traced alone. Institutions have succeeded the man, just as institutions are succeeding the individual in so many phases of our scientific, social and economic structure.

It has often been said, and repeated somewhat acidly, one fears, since his death, that Edison was an empirical worker rather than a scientist. There is a little smile of irony to be had in this for those who know the picture. It is to be recalled that when Edison set to work on the dynamo as the promise of a source of cheap electricity, he was confronted with the scientific dictum, then said to be a law, that the internal resistance of the generator had to be as great as the external work done. It sounded axiomatic and inevitable. It was Holy Writ therefore that the dynamo could be but fifty per cent efficient. Presently Edison, the unbeliever, brought forth dynamos of which this was not true, and in time dynamos which were more than 98 per cent efficient. "Thereupon," observed Edison with dry satisfaction, "the 'law' was rewritten." The story is amply told in a life of Edison by Frank L. Dyer, the famous patent expert and for years Edison's personal attorney.

Edison was empirical, as he so often himself observed, in the same terms that Luther Burbank was. Burbank planted a thousand or a million seeds and bred from the most likely offspring. Just so Edison worked with matter, and the properties and nature of matter are, and were, certainly through most of his day, nearly as much in mystery as the hereditary potentialities of unsprouted seed.

The passing of Edison has come in the fullness of his eighty-four years as a sadly solemn world event, not a tragedy, but as the ripening of the grain, the browning of the prairies and the falling of the leaves of this mellow October. He had a youth of adventure, a career of rich attainment, and an old age illumined with the suffused splendor of fame and the high esteem of the whole human race. He left a better, brighter world than he found. The lights of Broadway and the beacons of all the world shall be for him a finer, more enduring monument than ever hand of sculptor shall carve of stone.

WHAT THE PRESS SAYS

The TENNESSEAN of NASHVILLE has found a picture that it likes and feels that it has discovered a principle of production, according to this editorial:

. . . The impression seems to be general at Hollywood that its talent, no matter how fine, has to be hung about a pretty-faced girl and a handsome young man in order to get over to the public. Evidence that this is not so is given in "The Star Witness." This play contains no love story and the leading part is that of a Civil War veteran, played by Chic Sale. Except for two children, there is not a part in it that invokes any sentiment approaching love from the audience, yet it holds you in a vise from near the beginning to the end.

The LEE THEATRE of DAWSON in GEORGIA thoughtfully encloses a clipping from some newspaper of that region setting forth notions not entirely new, but important to the industry because they reflect what a very great many persons think about motion picture production and Hollywood. No matter if they are wrong, the opinion came from somewhere.

Of course, everyone has some plan for puncturing the depression and restoring prosperity.

These plans have ranged all the way from outlawing cotton down to the adoption of indestructible toothpicks in hotels and restaurants and forbidding the use of any heavy, slick paper in mail-order catalogues.

But I have a suggestion to make which it seems to me would plug up a considerable drain on the financial resources of the people of America.

I have in mind the deflation of Hollywood. Anyone who has given any careful study of the financial operations out in Hollywood should realize that there is where a large part of the money we no longer have is gone.

Take one of these fellows who happens to have a face like a collar advertisement and who gets $1,000 a week for draping his arms around a beautiful girl and kissing her by the foot. Figure up how much he gets per foot for that kind of business and see if you do not agree that he ought to have that salary not only cut but slashed. Why I know plenty of fellows who, in spite of the depression, would pay good money for the privilege of holding a job like that.

And when you consider that a child in its teens drags down something like $250 a day for going through a few kid antics on the screen, you will agree that Hollywood is the place where we can get a big start up the hill we have got to climb to reach prosperity.

The whole country has been bled almost white in order that Hollywood stars may live in palaces which put to shame the villas of the Roman emperors, when Rome was in the height of her power, palaces where they pull parties that would make even Nero hang his head in shame at the very cheapness of his entertainments when all he could afford to do was to burn up a town.

Why, those Hollywood stars spend more money getting mated and unmated than would be necessary to keep a hundred families living in ease, even comfort. It's all wrong. And the sooner something is done about it the sooner this country will begin its recovery. Those stars should be taught to deny themselves, to get along with only one or two husbands and wives a year, to eat some other fish besides goldfish and to drink ordinary corn like the rest of us have to imbibe.

The TRUTH of ELKHART in INDIANA appears to suspect that the motion picture industry is more full of promise than performance concerning moral aspects of the product. It says:

. . . It is well that a protest is being made, and it should grow louder. In spite of Will Hays, movie czar, who about once a year issues a public statement pledging that the producers are going to observe rules on behalf of morality and law observance in determining the nature of the screen showings, Hollywood seems to have improved very little.

The NEWS of ST. PAUL in MINNESOTA admits that there are agencies responsible for influence on youth and the young idea other than the motion picture, remarking, editorially:

. . . Ask yourself just how many gangsters or criminals you ever heard of who got their start in a movie.

This paper holds no brief for the gang film. Propaganda has a great deal to do with crime, but the real effective kind is emanating from more intimate and subtler sources than Hollywood. It's emanating from parents who violate the law, and laugh when children ask them to explain. It's emanating from the report that men in blue coats have directed boys to speakeasies. It's emanating from a surprising lack of honesty all along the line—from the older student who cheats and gets away with it, from the whispered tales of adventure and romance that go the rounds wherever young folks get together, from the unwillingness of older people to take their boys and girls around with them because it interferes with their pleasure, and many other habits and customs which seem unimportant. . . .

The PRESS of SPOKANE in WASHINGTON entertains us with a little potshot at the international political aspect of the motion picture as unintentional propaganda, saying:

There is something appealing to us in the modest request of the viceroy of India for a complete revamping of American movies for the benefit of the British empire. . . .

British prestige—and profits—it seems, depend on a maintenance of the fiction that the white man is a vastly superior being and that all colored races are put on earth merely to be exploited for his benefit.

So, the British ask, will you crude Americans please fix up your cinema plays so that the white male is dominant, lording it over the white female, clubbing her about occasionally and generally displaying himself as the cock of the walk?

Great idea, eh? They must get a great laugh out of it in Hollywood.

The STANDARD of NEW BEDFORD in MASSACHUSETTS, city of tradition, whale oil and scenery, thinks that the golden goose is worth the price, saying editorially:

. . . One can at least hope they are right in believing the public fed up on nastiness and anxious for a return to clean romance.

The exhibitors further complain of extravagance in producing organization. . . . If Dotty Dimple receives twenty-five thousand dollars a week it is not the producer who pays her, but the theatre patrons who are goofy about her. Why not pay her twenty-five thousand if the fans want her that bad? . . .

REDUCTIONS OF ADMISSION PRICE ADOPTED IN MOST LARGE CITIES

New Device To Regulate Sound Receives Patent

Eugene S. Hayford, New Orleans engineer, has recently patented a device called the Rototone, which he claims can facilitate the means whereby sound may be accurately taken from or added to a motion picture and which can control sound volume at specified points, allow additions in sound without increasing the length of the film and provide the director with a chart whereby he has a record of each one-hundredth inch of film taken, which, when turned over to the cutting room, may serve as a guide to piecing scenes together.

The device consists of a cylinder, over which is placed a chart divided into squares by closely spaced lines; an electric stylus on an arm, which moves over this chart governed by an electro-magnetized sleeve. The stylus is also electro-magnetized and the chart is cut away in place to allow contact which governs the starting and stopping of sound recording devices, amplifiers, volume controls, or extraneous sound or light effects at a predetermined position in accord with the images of the film.

The patent, it is understood, has not yet been disposed of, nor is early marketing of the device anticipated. Hayford began the invention before the advent of talking pictures. The basic principle is that of the range finder on war vessels.

Distributors Are "Stalling" On Contract, Says Lightman

A demand that distributors immediately advise exhibitors of the status of the 5-5-5 standard licensing agreement by announcing when it is their intention to make the contract effective, was voiced by M. A. Lightman, president of the MPTOA, at the Omaha convention this week of the MPTO of Nebraska and western Iowa. Lightman charged that the distributors were merely "stalling" in the matter of the uniform contract.

Charles E. Williams was re-elected president of the organization for the twelfth time.

Politics Enters Operator-Owner Kansas City Dispute

Political differences in Kansas City entered into the exhibitors'-operators' dispute there this week when James R. Page, county prosecutor, refused to place charges against a union picket who had been arrested on suspicion of having tear-bombed a suburban house. Page indicated, however, that a relentless war on racketeers and terrorists would be pressed by his office.

A Fair Share

Dr. Plugge, German film authority, has estimated that German composers and authors annually take from the industry there in the form of salaries and for film rights 15,000,000 marks, or some $3,750,000. Of this amount, composers receive from 6,000,000 to 7,000,000 marks in copyright, and authors 5,364,000 marks. The foreign market is also pointed out as a source of profit for German composers and authors. This estimate is seen as refuting the complaints that authors and musical writers do not get a fair share of the industry's proceeds.

B. S. Moss Offers Theatre Program With Television

An experimental television program was presented to an invited audience by B. S. Moss in association with Sanabria Television Corp. and William Morris, at the Broadway theatre, New York City, Thursday.

The program consisted mainly of a short scene from "The House of Connelly," with Franchot Tone and Margaret Barker, from the stage of a nearby theatre. An interesting forecast on television was presented in person by Waldemar Kaempffert, science editor of The New York Times. Carveth Wells acted as master of ceremonies, and a short address was made by Theresa Helburn, of the New York Theatre Guild.

The televisioned program was an interesting scientific experiment. It appeared, however, to emphasize the viewpoint that television at this time is still in the status of that of a scientific curiosity. This experiment differed from earlier ones, principally in the fact that a larger screen was used. The figures depicted on the screen were exceedingly faint and indistinct, leaving the spectator convinced that, as far as theatrical entertainment is concerned, television has not shown anything which warrants serious consideration.

Exhibitor Denied Hearing In $3,500,000 Damage Suit

The $3,500,000 damage suit filed against national distributors and the Hays organization by Nick Paper, Lincoln, Nebraska, exhibitor, suffered a setback when the federal court at Omaha sustained demurrers of defendants and refused Paper a hearing. The complainant was given ten days in which to file an amended petition.

Significant Gains Made In Patronage Volume

Film Rentals and Other Theatres' Business Unaffected for Most Part, 30 Towns Report

Reduction of 5 to 20 cents in admission prices, in keeping with the lower values throughout the country, have been made, or are in progress, in virtually every leading city, a study of admission schedules now in effect in the theatres of the nation reveals. The theatres of 30 cities were interrogated to determine the trend in admission scales.

The reduction of admissions is being accomplished without evident loss to the industry, it was indicated. Exhibitors are finding, in most instances, that reduced admissions result in patronage increases which not only maintain average previous grosses, but frequently exceed them. In consequence, film rentals have been unaffected for the most part and distributors, likewise, have felt no ill effects.

Call Move Inevitable

The opinion of exhibitor leaders on admission reductions is that the move is inevitable, in view of prevailing economic conditions, and that greater harm would be done the industry by any concerted effort to maintain prices for entertainment which the public is unable to pay today.

This opinion is strengthened by reports from numerous theatres which indicate that significant gains in patronage volume were made following admission reductions. At Charlotte, N. C., where 25 theatres are now playing at 10 cents admission, business is reported good and many of the 10-cent top houses declare that persons who never attended picture theatres before are now numbered among their patrons. These same theatres report that, in this way, their patronage increases have been made without taking anything away from theatres operating at higher admissions.

May Be Healthy Sign: Myers

Abram F. Myers, president of Allied States Association, declared that he regarded reductions not only as "inevitable," but also as a "possibly healthy sign, inasmuch as motion pictures, as entertainment belonging to the people, cannot prosper if held beyond the public's reach."

"I had hoped for a maintenance of price levels in this and other industries," Myers said, "but I now believe that a reduction in admission scales is in keeping with the decline in the value of the dollar and the accompanying lessened spending power of the public and, therefore, cannot be prevented.

"Undoubtedly, there are communities in which only a 10-cent policy will fill the houses, and under those circumstances such

U. S. EXHIBITORS BREATHE EASIER AFTER CLEVELAND ZONING DECISION

Three Loew Subsequents Set Back in Time

Circuit Had Advanced Seven Later-Run Houses Into 42-Day Protection Class of First-Runs

The Cleveland exhibitors' committee, which met in New York this week with E. A. Schiller of Loew's, Inc., and Dave Palfreyman of the Hays office, on their return to Cleveland denied that a "settlement" of the local zoning difficulties had been effected.

"The slight progress made," said Myer Fine, chairman, "was more than offset by the reopening of Loew's Stillman theatre (first-run) at a straight 25-cent admission, including Sundays and holidays. Legal proceedings may have to be instituted."

To this Col. Schiller, reaffirming the announcement that a settlement had been made, said in New York Thursday night: "All complaints were adjusted and the agreement was signed by all the Cleveland exhibitors before they left New York."

The controversy over protection which has raged in Cleveland for the past several months, gaining national attention in the meantime, was settled at a conference between exhibitors and distributors in New York this week. Concessions made by Loew's Cleveland theatres, by which three of the circuit's subsequent runs are set back in playing time, were accepted by complaining Cleveland exhibitors as the solution for the city's major protection problems.

Created National Problem

Loew's first-run theatres, the Allen, State and Stillman, have been accorded 42 days' protection, but the practice of the circuit had been to utilize this protection period by advancing seven of the Loew subsequent-run houses in such manner that these, too, had completed their playing schedules within the 42-day period. In this manner the circuit's subsequent-run houses, the Park, Circle, Granada, Dome, Liberty, Alhambra and Mall theatres, were all embraced in the 42 days' protection originally accorded Loew's three first-run houses. It was this situation which created protection problems which aroused Cleveland exhibitors to protest and which drew the attention of exhibitors and distributors nationally.

The situation created in Cleveland by Loew's utilization of its first-run protection period to embrace playing time for its subsequent-runs resulted in permitting the Park, Circle and Granada theatres charging 10 and 15 cents admission, to play ahead of a number of competing theatres charging 25 and 30 cents admission. By the terms of the protection agreement arrived at in New York, Loew's has agreed to exclude the Park, Circle and Granada theatres from further inclusion in the circuit's 42-day first-run protection. Hereafter, those three subsequent-runs are to be held back until after the expiration of the first-run protection period. The Dome, Liberty, Alhambra and Mall will be permitted to continue playing within the first-run protection period, although still classified as subsequent-run houses, due to the fact that the established admission scales in these theatres are not in conflict with admission scales in competing subsequent-runs.

Feared General Practice

The Stillman, one of Loew's Cleveland first-run houses, was closed recently by the circuit.

Numerous exhibitors, particularly circuits, in other cities watched the Cleveland situation with interest. It was regarded as a certainty that in the event Loew's persisted in including their low scale subsequents in the first-run protection periods similar attempts so to utilize first-run protection would have been made nationally.

The Cleveland protection agreement was reached in conference with E. A. Schiller of Loew's. They were attended by Cleveland exhibitors and Dave Palfreyman of the Hays office.

Give Him a Lift

"Give Him a Lift" is the slogan which has been adopted for the industry in its unemployment relief efforts nationally. The slogan will be featured prominently on placards and posters for use in theatre lobbies all over the country. The emblems will portray an outstretched hand offering aid to another outoutstretched for assistance. A corner of the design will announce National Motion Picture Week, November 18 to 25, the week scheduled for the playing of benefit programs for the relief of the needy. The "Give Him a Lift" slogan will also appear, it is planned, on all theatre tickets sold during the industry's relief week.

New Jersey Owners May Close During Unprofitable Periods

Elimination of unprofitable playing time by shutting down theatres during those periods when income is too slender to show a profit for operations is being considered by Allied Theatre Owners of New Jersey. All theatres, under this plan, will operate over the week-ends, but many will be closed Mondays and Tuesdays, it is believed.

300 City Groups Aid Unemployed; Best Ad Men Busy

More than 300 exhibitors' city committees are now at work perfecting plans for observance of National Motion Picture Week, November 18-25, during which nationwide benefit performances for the aid of the unemployed will be given.

The advertising committee serving the industry's national campaign has in preparation a press book and exploitation campaign which will be forwarded immediately upon completion to all exhibitors to aid them in bringing individual theatre efforts before the public. The advertising and exploitation plans are being turned out by the industry's "crack" advertising men, who comprise the advertising committee.

Charles O'Reilly, chairman of the motion picture industry's New York City committee, obtained the consent of all circuit theatre heads and independent exhibitors to display New York's official unemployment relief poster in all city theatre lobbies. In addition, New York theatre programs will carry flood lines of New York's campaign slogan, "I Will Share."

Generous praise is being accorded the entire industry by the press of the nation for its impressive efforts in fostering and conducting National Motion Picture Week.

Skouras Reorganizes Staff Of Fox Managers in East

Reorganization of the managerial staff of the 47 eastern theatres taken over from Fox by Spyros Skouras was begun this week with the appointment of two new divisional managers and prospects of sweeping changes in theatre managers' assignments.

Cullen Espy, formerly with Skouras in Indianapolis, was placed in charge of the Long Island theatre division, and Maurie Stahl, formerly with Warners in New Jersey, was assigned to head Skouras's Jersey theatre division.

Wisconsin Allied Unit Names McWilliams President Again

Frank J. McWilliams of Madison was re-elected president of the Allied Independent Theatre Owners of Wisconsin at the Milwaukee convention last week.

Other officers include: Charles Washicheck, vice president; Ed Maertz, secretary; L. K. Brin, treasurer. Directors are: McWilliams, Washicheck, Brin, John A. Laudwig, O. L. Meister, Kames Zanias, Neil Duffy, O. V. Kelly, J. P. Adler, Percy Palmer.

NEW SOUND-ON-FILM METHOD NUCLEUS OF NON-THEATRE PLAN

Independents and Operators Effect Peace in Chicago

The union projectionist labor war which has hung like a pall over Chicago's entire independent theatre situation for many weeks has finally been lifted, with independent theatre owners and the operators' union reaching an agreement this week.

The peaceful settlement followed a six-hour conference on both sides with State's Attorney Swanson, after Mayor Cermak had threatened drastic action and possible closing of all houses unless a settlement were reached immediately.

Principal among the terms of the agreement were reduction of 20 per cent in wages of operators and discharge of imported projectionists in favor of members of the Chicago local.

Theatre bombings have been frequent in recent weeks, seen as a part of the serious labor situation. On Sunday, police arrested Peter Mooney, ex-convict and bomber, when a bomb exploded in his lap at the Colony theatre, causing a near-panic. His arrest was thought by police to have broken the back of the numerous theatre outrages, and was followed the next day by the announcement of the settlement between operators and independent owners.

10 Per Cent Tax on Tickets Is Planned For Rhode Island

A 10 per cent tax on tickets to all theatres, football games and all other amusements is faced by theatre owners of Rhode Island following tentative approval by state and other officials of a new assessment bill to obtain funds for unemployment relief in the state. The tax on amusements alone is expected to bring in $500,000 annual revenue.

Kurtzman, Roxy Head, Resigns; Theatre May Go to Skourases

Charles E. Kurtzman, operating head of the Roxy and for two years personal representative of Harry Arthur in charge of de luxe operations, has resigned, effective December 1. No successor has as yet been named.

It is expected that the 6,000-seat New York house will pass into the hands of Skouras Brothers, who have just completed negotiations for the balance of the Fox houses in and around New York. The Fox Brooklyn is expected to go over with the Roxy. Kurtzman will open his own advertising agency on the Coast.

A Good Reason

The Fox theatre in Detroit has bought Radio films for the first time, four having been booked for early showing, as Radio is selling away from its own house, the RKO Downtown. It is understood the latter is not returning enough money and higher revenues can be grossed at the Fox than at the Downtown. The reason assigned for the situation is the poor location of the RKO house, which is located on an obscure side street. The Fox, on the other hand, is on Woodward Avenue, principal thoroughfare.

Loss on Broadway Runs Prompts Plea For Tax Reduction

Advertising value and not profit accrues from the showing of pictures on Broadway in New York and the cash surplus comes from the showing of Broadway-advertised films on the Main street of a thousand towns.

Admitting that the great majority of pictures given first-run showings on New York's "main stem" makes sales for the red ink manufacturers, Fox Film Corporation this week filed with the United States Board of Tax Appeals at Washington a protest against a deficiency income tax of $154,564 assessed against it by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue for 1928.

Out of more than 50 pictures shown on Broadway, the board was informed, only two showed a profit. In fact, the company's petition set forth, Broadway runs are undertaken with the full expectation of incurring a loss from each picture shown, and it has been the experience that a profit from a Broadway showing is practically impossible.

The company filed a tax return showing an income of $4,125,647 for 1928. Refusing to allow a deduction in the amount of $437,682 for a credit issued Fox Theatres for securing authority to exhibit new pictures at the Roxy theatre, the internal revenue bureau increased the income to $4,596,666, and held that instead of the $372,837 paid in income taxes the company should have paid $527,401.

Losses on Broadway showings run into real money, the petition for a review revealed. On four pictures alone the company lost something like $425,000. The heaviest loss was $96,919 incurred in the showing of "What Price Glory," "Four Sons" being second with a loss of $82,401 and "Sunrise" a close third with $82,115. "Seventh Heaven," it is shown, lost $54,214 on its Broadway run.

Claimed First Theatrical System in Field

Revival of Darkened Houses As 16 mm. Newsreel Theatres Seen by Jones Research Company

Exclusive publication last week in MOTION PICTURE HERALD of the Fox-RCA deal brought out information of secretive laboratory work of technicians of Jones Research Sound Products, Inc., which announced that it had ready for the non-theatrical field what it claims to be the first practical 16 mm. sound-on-film projector. Other companies, including RCA, have been at work on narrow-film sound equipment, but so far as is known, none has reached the marketing stage.

Newsreel Organization Considered

Although the immediate concern of the Jones organization, the headquarters of which are at 729 Seventh avenue, New York, is the non-theatrical field, the company's representatives already have developed an elaborate skeleton operating organization which, it is claimed, will be prepared to handle theatrical activities in the event that developments in the 16 mm. field make them possible. Among the theatrical activities considered probable in this field is the development of a newsreel organization which may be utilized to supply subjects to hundreds of 16 mm. theatres which may be reclaimed from houses now darkened, according to Jones' representatives.

The Jones 16 mm. sound-on-film development, for which all basic patents have been allowed, runs 40 frames to the foot, with standard 16 mm. double rows of perforations. The sound track has a width of .025 inch overall. Sound is optically recorded with a specially excited light, an entirely new process developed by the holders of the patents.

Raw Stock Saving Seen

Due to this method of recording, it is claimed, it is possible to record not only at the old silent speed of 60 feet per minute, but also as slowly as 32 feet per minute without loss of volume or perfect musical quality. A raw stock saving of one-third thus would be made possible. The sound track is a variable density type recorded on a bias, permitting greater width of the frequency band without increasing width of the sound track. This also would achieve greater sound volume, and appears to substantiate the makers' claim that the volume attained compares favorably with standard 35 mm. sound on film.

The Jones film may be used with any standard 16 mm. reproducing apparatus, it is claimed, and any standard sound head may be used with but slight adjustment. The makers further declare that any standard

Cable Address "Edison, New York"

From the Laboratory of
Thomas A. Edison,
Orange, N.J.

January 3, 1930.

Mr. Martin Quigley,
Quigley Publications,
565 Fifth Avenue,
New York City, N.Y.

D ear Mr. Quigley:

It is pleasing to learn of the achievement in screen trade journalism represented by Motion Picture Herald.

The motion picture has been aided in its trenendous development by an aggressive trade press closely related to the important phases of the industry's evolution.

It is well, I think, that you are preserving the essence of the tradition and experience laid down by the old journals which now become components of the Herald.

Yours very truly,

Thos A Edison.

MOTION PICTURE HERALD is honored to present here the letter which Mr. Thomas A. Edison addressed to Mr. Martin Quigley, publisher and editor-in-chief of Quigley Publications, on the occasion of the announcement of the newly constituted weekly journal of the industry. This is the last of Mr. Edison's expressions with reference to the motion picture upon which he began his labors forty-five years ago.

EDISON WHIMSY FOUNDED INDUSTRY

Inventor of the Motion Picture Wanted a Seeing Machine As Accessory to Hearing Machine

By TERRY RAMSAYE

Death came for Thomas Alva Edison last Sunday morning at his home in Llewellyn Park, New Jersey, and Wednesday he was buried in the family plot of the Rosedale Cemetery in the Orange Mountains.

President Hoover was represented by Mrs. Hoover. Harvey Firestone and Mrs. Firestone and Henry Ford and Mrs. Ford were among the four hundred mourners in attendance.

Dr. Stephen J. Herben, former pastor of the Orange Episcopal Church, read a scriptural passage, and Dr. Lewis P. Perry, head master of Phillips-Exeter Academy, read a tribute to Mr. Edison written by Arthur J. Palmer, long connected with the Edison plant. The ceremony included two of Mr. Edison's favorite songs, "I'll Take You Home Again, Kathleen" and "Little Grey Home in the West."

Industrial plants across the country stilled their wheels for two minutes as Mr. Edison went to his grave. And at night for two minutes Broadway, the "Great White Way," went dark, while the whole nation dimmed its lights in tribute to the man who gave the world the incandescent lamp.

Mr. Edison was born at Milan, Ohio, February 11, 1847. His parents, Samuel and Nancy, named him Thomas and when in his teens he decided on Thomas Alva Edison, because he had read enough to discover that the Duke of Alva generally got what he wanted. His education was mostly at his mother's knee. In later years a number of universities distinguished themselves by conferring degrees upon him. He is survived by his wife, Mina Miller Edison, and five children, of whom his son Charles has been mostly closely associated with his work. It is understood that the structure of the Edison business enterprises will be unaffected by the death of Mr. Edison. He was chairman of the board of Thomas A. Edison Industries. Charles Edison is president. The office of chairman of the board will be discontinued.

As nearly as one man may be the inventor of anything, Thomas Edison was the inventor of the motion picture. With his Kinetoscope evolved in the years between 1887 and '89 he bridged the gap between the laboratory labors which began with Peter Mark Roget in England in 1824-25 and the attainment of a reduction to practice and commercial practicality. The whole of the world art and industry of the screen has been builded upon Mr. Edison's playtime whimsy of evolving a seeing machine as an accessory to his hearing machine, the phonograph. And, happily enough, strangely evolved from other then apparently unrelated discoveries of his laboratory labors, he survived to see some thirty-five years of motion picture evolution bring to the perfection of a new art from his original conception of the sound and talking picture.

That would in itself have been enough of attainment for one man, but Mr. Edison was in very truth foremost among founders of an era, an engineer of a new civilization. In sum he gave to the world the first efficient dynamo, the incandescent light, the carbon transmitter which made the Bell telephone a commercial instrument, the multiplex telegraph, the system of alignment which makes the typewriter upon which these words are sadly written today an instrument of accuracy and precision, the phonograph, the motion picture, the radio valve, and an endless array of inventions, refinements and betterments of processes in metallurgy, industrial chemistry, cement manufacture—world without end in science and industry.

Through all this amazing lifetime of labor Mr. Edison was a happy, strenuously interested, eternally optimistic philosopher with a ready wit and a kindly sense of humor and a tremendous tolerance.

It was my exceedingly good fortune to establish contact with him many years ago and to enjoy increasingly down the years his confidence and friendship. Coming first into the field as a young engineer evolving into a writer, mayhap a shade bitter and exacting, his influence was to prove warming, encouraging and in a degree mellowing. He admired reportorial relentlessness—and was amused by it.

In the last ten years Mr. Edison sent to me many writers and interviewers who wanted to ask him questions, mainly about his part in the motion picture, saying always: "That damned Scotchman will have all the facts and details, and if you want something looked up get a Scotchman to do it."

Writing this today for MOTION PICTURE HERALD, I am minded that my last important communication with Mr. Edison was to bear to him the tidings of the new organization of Martin Quigley's enterprises into QUIGLEY PUBLICATIONS, unifying in this journal all of the older publications from those days when there were Edison pictures. This was considerably before it was contemplated that I should leave motion picture production to return again to journalism, and so it was pleasant indeed to have Mr. Edison write the letter of appreciation to Mr. Quigley which appeared in the second issue of the publication of which I am now the editor.

It is interesting and somewhat a measure of Mr. Edison that with all the interviewing of him and and writing about him and his work that I have done he had no concern about coloring the story. His mistakes, which seemed ever to be commercial mistakes, he admitted with something akin to glee, or otherwise with the same sharp candor with which he would total a column of laboratory figures. Facts, in his philosophy, never needed apology. He never wanted anything said, or anything left unsaid. And there was no milk and water about it. He could and did damn his enemies and those of whom he disapproved with a gorgeous vigor and a completeness worthy of his pungent genius.

For the art and the technology of the motion picture as it had grown after it left his controlling hand Mr. Edison had a vast admiration. For much of its commercial structure, its ethics and conduct he felt rather less admiration, and said so in confidential moments, in terms that indicated both his patience and his impatience.

It was early in 1887 when Mr. Edison set himself and his research staff at the prob-

Among the hundreds of industrial leaders making comment on the attainments of Mr. Edison and the significance of his passing, are the following from personages of special interest in the amusement world:

WILL H. HAYS, president of the Motion Picture Producers & Distributors of America, Inc.:—To the men and women of the motion picture industry the death of Thomas Alva Edison means much more than the passing of a great inventive genius. He was the father of the motion picture. To the very time of his passing Thomas Alva Edison remained a staunch friend and champion of the art that was founded upon his own great achievements. The world owes much to Thomas Alva Edison. And no debt of gratitude to his memory will be more deeply felt than by the host of men and women in the motion picture industry whose careers, whose progress and whose service were made possible by the greatness of his vision.

GEORGE EASTMAN:—Thomas A. Edison did more than any other man to make this world an easier, pleasanter, better world to live in. The world has lost one of its greatest men of all time.

LEE DE FOREST:—With the passing of Thomas A. Edison humanity has lost its greatest single benefactor. Were all the world's light and power cut off tonight a single hour in reverent commemoration of its debt to Edison, we might perhaps glimpse some faint appreciation of the immeasurable debt we owe to that glorious immortal.

lem of making a machine which should "do for the eye what the phonograph does for the ear." In truth it was his conception that a motion picture device should be evolved as an accessory to the phonograph—which now in these days of the talking picture it has, in a large measure of accuracy, become.

Mr. Edison called to his assistance on this job a number of men, conspicuous among them William Kennedy Laurie Dickson, a young Englishman who only a few years before had grown excited about "the Wizard of Menlo Park," after reading popular science stories in the London journals. Dickson wrote Edison for a job and got a letter, written in the hand of the inventor, telling him not to come to America. By way of response Dickson applied at West Orange, letter in hand. Edison looked at it with a snort of surprise.

"Now that you are here, you might as well go out in the shop and go to work," he decided. So Dickson got the job.

Edison devoted a vast deal of personal attention to the picture problem. His first conception was to make pictorial records in tiny spirals on a cylinder like his phonograph records, and to view the pictures through a microscope. This was early abandoned, after the construction of some working models, and he set about building mechanisms which would handle rows of pictures made on strips or tapes. He made films of sheets of collodion varnish dried on plate glass. They worked well enough to demonstrate the principle, but they were far too fragile.

Meanwhile since at least as early as 1884, George Eastman of Rochester, seeking to popularize amateur photography, was also seeking a strong, flexible, unbreakable support for photographic emulsions. This was needed to simplify the operation of his Kodak, which in its early years was loaded with a roll of paper coated with an emulsion which had upon development to be stripped off and mounted on glass. The process was far too complicated and made it necessary to return the Kodak to the factory for the operation of finishing the pictures. When Edison heard in August of 1889 that Eastman had solved the problem of roller photography with a flexible picture base he sent Dickson posthaste to Rochester for a sample. That first purchase was of a roll of film one inch wide and fifty feet long. On September 2, 1889, as the Eastman records show, the Edison Laboratories remitted $2.50 in payment of that first great film purchase.

When Dickson showed the material to Edison the inventor was excited:

"That's it, now work like hell!"

The mechanisms for the use of the film were already well near complete. Only the material of picture making had been lacking.

Edison, happy, went off to Paris and a brief tour of Europe. It was Sunday morning October 6, 1889 when he returned. He was in hot haste to see the new machine which had been assembled in his absence, and he went racing off from the pier direct to the laboratories at West Orange.

Dickson snapped on the light and Edison peered through the peephole in Kinetoscope No. 1. It worked. There was a living picture in it of Mr. Dickson tipping his hat.

CARL LAEMMLE: It may be trite to say that Edison will continue to live in spirit and as an inspiration to millions yet unborn, but it is unusually true in the case of this great man. What impressed me as the most outstanding thing about him was not his early struggles nor his middle-life triumphs but rather the fact that he never permitted old age to mar his usefulness, his ambition and his optimism.

M. CHARLES DELAC, president of the Chambre Syndicale Francaise de la Cinematographie, Paris, cabled to Will H. Hays, president of the Motion Picture Producers & Distributors of America, Inc., in New York as follows:

Profoundly moved by the death of the great Edison, the entire French motion picture industry joins in mourning with the American nation and begs you to be its interpreter on this sad occasion.

MERLIN H. AYLESWORTH, president of the National Broadcasting Co.:—Thomas A. Edison was the greatest force in electrical progress since the discovery of Faraday.

DAVID SARNOFF, president of Radio Corporation of America:—Thomas A. Edison left his record in the truth-seeking spirit of his time as much as in his great works. His life was full. The inspiration that it gives to others is perhaps his greatest monument.

The basic motion picture problem had been solved. But Mr. Edison viewed the device as but a laboratory plaything, and he was further sufficiently busy with much more pressing problems.

More than two years later Norman C. Raff, a western banker, with connections with the coming Columbian Exposition at Chicago, discovered the idle and waiting living picture machine in the Edison laboratories and induced Mr. Edison to contract to manufacture a battery of the machine for display at the Fair. Laboratory delays intervened and the machine never arrived at the Fair, contrary to the tradition of decades. However, under the ministration of the firm of Raff & Gammon the machine did reach the market, in peepshow parlors, beginning April 14, 1894, at 1155 Broadway in New York.

It was then that the commercial history of the motion picture began. The Kinetoscopes, scattered over the world, inspired numerous inventors to a race for a projection machine. Mr. Edison was not enthusiastic about projection and hoped to delay the arrival of the screen until after the commercial values of the peepshow device had been exhausted.

The arrival of the projection machine is another and vastly complex story. The first commercially important projection machine, and the one upon which the industry of today is based, was the Vitascope, evolved by Thomas Armat of Washington, D. C., and manufactured by Edison at West Orange. It was the Vitascope which began the world's business history of the screen with the now memorable opening on the night of April 23, 1896 at Koster & Bials' Music Hall, in Herald Square, on the present site of the R. H. Macy department store.

It is a curious, and, I believe, an unrecorded fact that despite the significant inter-relation between the labors of Mr. Edison and Mr. Eastman, they did not become acquainted until most recently. For thirty-six years of the development of the motion picture from Edison's machine and Eastman's film these tremendously and conspicuously successful joint contributors to this great industry were just names to each other.

Their acquaintance came about by chance. In 1925, the late George Kleine, who had been a friend of Mr. Edison from the beginnings of motion picture activity in the '90's, organized a movement to get the industry to recognize and honor the inventor. The result was that the industry decided to pay its debt by inviting Mr. Edison to luncheon at the Ritz, in New York.

At Mr. Edison's instance I was chosen to tell something about his work. Three persons arrived at the Ritz for that luncheon on time, including Mr. Edison and Mr. Eastman. They were checking in their coats and hats when it was to be observed that there was no sign of recognition between them. They were then and there introduced.

Edison looked at Eastman thoughtfully for a moment.

"Oh, yes—George Eastman? The film man?"

Mr. Eastman looked back with a grin and said crisply "Yes."

"Well," Edison beamed, "I've certainly heard a lot about you."

"Yes, and I know about you, too," Eastman responded. "In fact, I bought a dynamo from you once—about 1885, I think."

"Was it any good?" Edison demanded.

"Pretty fair," Mr. Eastman admitted. "Anyway it will still work."

"That's fine," Edison agreed. "And you know that film of yours turned out pretty good, too."

Then they went up to the Crystal room, where the flashlight photographer was so busy getting Roxy into a picture with Edison that he forgot about Eastman.

Mr. Edison never made much of a pretense of being a business man, despite the billions that his work added to the wealth of the world. Also he was ever willing to tell stories on himself. He often whimsically remarked to me that it was no wonder he did not maintain control of the motion picture, "because there is so much money in it."

A case in point is the very true story of his dealings with the British telephone company in the early days. It will perhaps be remembered that the Bell interests had to acquire the Edison carbon button transmitter before the Bell instrument could be made commercially practical. Now it chanced that in one period of controversy between the British and American telephone companies the British held it desirable to have control of a transmitter which did not infringe upon the patents covering the device which Edison had sold to the American company. They cabled Edison asking if he had another transmitter. He bethought himself of a curious experimental transmitter using a wet chalk pencil contact. He had discarded it at once because it had a very narrow scale of frequencies, distorting the voice excessively, and because it was far too loud. This, however, he deemed would suffice for the purposes of the patent controversy and he shipped it to London. In due time he received a cable inquiring the price.

"DESTROYED BRITAIN'S PRIVACY"; SHAW

"Will you take thirty thousand?" they asked.

"Thirty thousand accepted," Edison replied.

A fortnight later Mr. Edison's downtown banker notified him at West Orange that a remittance of $150,000 had been made to his credit by the British telephone company in London.

"What the, etc.!" observed Mr. Edison, "I only asked them thirty thousand."

The banker was quite dry about it. "They thought you meant pounds," he remarked.

Mr. George Bernard Shaw was in those early days an employe of the British telephone company. He was among those who heard the demonstrations of the wet chalk transmitter for which they had inadvertently paid thirty thousand pounds.

After Mr. Shaw listened to the thunderous performance of that instrument, he took his pen in hand to relieve his feelings in a letter to Mr. Edison.

"I have the honour, sir," he wrote, "to inform you that you have now destroyed all the privacy in Great Britain."

When the Brooklyn Edison company was to be organized a delegation of the investors called upon Mr. Edison to ask him to permit the use of his name.

"Make me an offer," was his response.

"How about a hundred thousand dollars?" they proffered.

"That will be all right," he responded, after a pause, "but don't give me all that money at once, because I'd just go spend it. Give me five thousand a year for twenty years."

And so the deal was made.

"It was a good many years afterward that I woke up and discovered I could have had the $100,000 and collected the $5,000 a year in interest," Mr. Edison observed with a grin, and not a woeful grin.

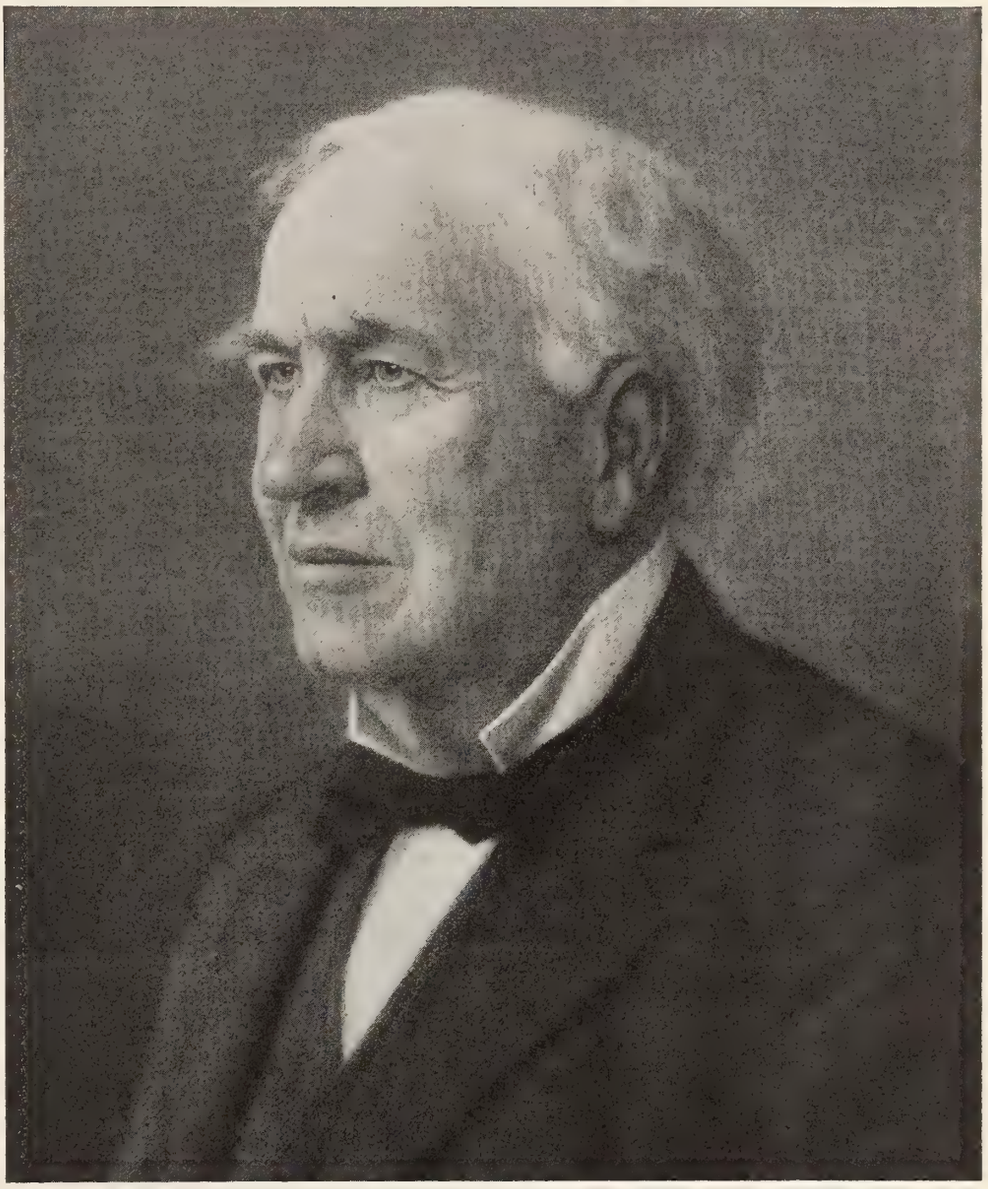
It was in the remote days when Mr. Edison was working in a little shop building in Newark that he got a notice from the county authorities to the effect that his taxes must be paid by a certain date, or else a penalty of some ten per cent would be demanded. He tucked the paper in his pocket and the next day went to the collector's office. There was a long line of maybe fifty persons at the window. Edison added himself to the end of the line and shuffled along.

The waiting was tedious and the inventor set himself to thinking about some of the assorted problems of the phonograph which was then much on his mind.

Abruptly and to his surprise he found himself at last before the wicket with a clerk snapping at him. "Come, come, what's your name?"

The father of the phonograph was taken off his guard. He became flustered and could not make sense of the situation.

"If you don't know what your name is move on and let somebody here who does!" the clerk admonished.



Completely abashed Mr. Edison stepped away from the window, and the next day in the security of his office arranged the payment of his taxes, plus the penalty.

"I had that coming if I couldn't remember who I was," he explained.

The intense humanity and tolerance of Edison colored the whole background of his relations with friends and employes. He hoped for intelligence and loyalty and was not much disappointed if he did not get them in full measure.

One of the workmen associated with his early work on the motion picture and various electrical matters was dismissed by a general manager after the discovery of relations with persons in New York on terms which indicated that the secrets of the research laboratory had been allowed to stray. It was, Edison admitted reluctantly years afterward, a plain "double X" as he abbreviated it.

None the less for these many years that same man, somewhat repentant perhaps, has been living in a seaside village in Europe on a monthly remittance from Edison, who remembered him for the good work that he had done, rather than the misstep that he made.

Usually Mr. Edison was available to bona-fide reporters of the press. He made no gesture common to public men that he disliked publicity. He seemed to enjoy a wholesome degree of it and was at pains to make himself and his projects thoroughly understood. This came, I think, considerably because he had found too often that the public was not ready to accept the inventions which his era produced with such rapidity and profusion.

He often counselled patience. "You can't give it to them too fast," he said. "Remember it was at least five years after the typewriter was a perfected instrument before anyone wanted to write on it. It was about that long before anyone wanted to talk on the telephone. Why, they didn't know what electric lights were for. The first big order I got for lamps was from a liquor rectifier in New York. He wanted a hundred lamps. This was so exciting I sent a man to see what use this customer could be making of so many of them. We found out he had discovered that an incandescent lamp hung in a barrel of raw whisky put age on it rapidly."

Edison electricity and lamps, supplanting gas, worked a revolution in stagecraft. But that is so long ago that it is all but forgotten. The first recorded experimenter in electrical stage lighting is Bolossy Kiralfy, long since retired and now in his eighty-sixth year. He was a member of the producing firm of Kiralfy Brothers, staging imposing ballets and spectacles.

When Mr. Kiralfy announced that he would introduce electrical stage lighting at Niblo's Garden, Mr. Eidson became so interested that he came to New York to supervise the operations of the lighting crew.

As a result of that meeting Mr. Edison gave Mr. Kiralfy an autographed photograph, which was treasured for years. A fire in the Kiralfy house in Washington Square damaged the picture and the producer's methodical valet cleaned it up and cut off the autograph in the process.

One day about ten years ago a New York newspaper much given to feature articles came forth with a news story to the effect that Edison had announced that he was at work on a device with which to communicate with the dead.

Having a firm opinion of my own about Mr. Edison's views on immortality and ghostly concerns including ectoplasm, I was not a little annoyed at this article. I expected daily that there would be a vehement denial from West Orange. But no such denial came.

On the next occasion I was frank enough to express my surprise and considerable disapproval of the yarn.

Mr. Edison grinned, his bad boy grin.

"That reporter," he remarked, "was a freelance looking for copy. It was a cold winter day and he didn't have an overcoat, and the soles of his shoes were worn out. He needed a story bad,—and I gave him the only one I could think of at the time.

"And, say," Edison added, "it would be a great machine if it worked, wouldn't it?"

In the self effacing, silently able Mr. William H. Meadowcroft, styled "assistant to Mr. Edison," there is an unwritten drama of enduring devotion. For near to a half century Mr. Meadowcroft was a super-secretary to Edison, with a confidential understanding of the maze of technical matters and a helpful contribution of skill of his own. For a great many years all letters addressed to Mr. Edison, and there have been millions of them, have passed over Meadowcroft's methodical, rapidly efficient desk. Even when in Florida at his winter home, Mr. Edison always forwarded his mail, and wires, unopened, to Meadowcroft at West Orange. Close friends knew that the only way to get a message directly to Mr. Edison in Florida was to send it addressed to Mrs. Edison.

It chanced that when I was engaged in researches into the past of the pictures I had many occasions to consult with Meadowcroft, or sit chatting with him in his nook of the great library-office at West Orange, awaiting my appointment with Edison. It early developed that in the period when the motion picture was born Mr. Meadowcroft was "away," and in time it was mildly admitted that he had, for those two years or some such period, left Mr. Edison's organization "on a project of my own, which did not turn out so well, so I returned."

Presently here and there bit by bit I gathered the Meadowcroft story. Back there in the 80's Meadowcroft hit upon the altogether fanciful notion that an interesting use might be made of incandescent lamps by mounting them to spell out letters of light in signs and maybe on billboards. He made one such sign, "Electrical Club," and mounted it over the entrance to the quarters of that organization in New York, located somewhere in the Thirties. The idea appeared to have commercial promise, so Meadowcroft, not entirely with the approval of Edison, quit and organized an electric sign concern, with a group of associates. The project met with difficulties, among them the problem of getting lamps in the proper sizes. The company came to grief, and Meadowcroft returned to his desk as "assistant to Mr. Edison," to labor again in the cause of the master and pay off the obligations of his venture. There he has remained since.

A few years ago it chanced that Edison and Meadowcroft were in New York together to attend some dinner function. They were on their way home when Edison said to Meadowcroft: "tell him to drive down Broadway."

Broadway was, of course, ablaze with marquee lights, theatre signs, talking signs and flashing bulletins.

Mr. Edison looked up and down the gay bright street and then nudged his companion in the ribs.

"Maybe there was something to that fool notion of yours about light signs, after all, Bill."

The best laugh I ever heard out of Mr. Edison came at the end of a chat in his laboratory one afternoon years ago, when we got around to some remarks about his persistence in thinking of invention and scientific development in terms of work, always work.

"Yes, sir," I remarked to him, "you invented the incandescent lamp so we could work all night—and then you brought along the motion picture business so that I have had to ever since."

Something to Think About

International Projector Corporation is so rushed with equipment orders that it has been found necessary to place the company's entire staff on a 54-hour week basis and a night shift will be required soon as well.

Besides the increased sales of Simplex and Powers projectors, the company announced there has been an unprecedented demand for the Acme portable projector, the new Pockette camera and the new 16mm. Casette projector, all of which are made in the factory in New York which occupies twelve large floors.

"Before going into production on the Acme, Casette projector and Pockette camera," the announcement said, "we thought that with normal production we had a sufficient number of Simplex projectors to last for a year. However, the surplus was all sold six full months before expectations, with the result that we now must increase our manufacturing under what might be termed 'forced draft'."

Edison Reel in 50 Houses

A one-reel film, requiring 11 minutes, titled "The Life of Edison," which was made 15 years ago by General Electric and has been taken from its files, is being shown this week in 50 Warner houses, including the five on Broadway. Al Bondy is handling the distribution of the short film.

Unveil Edison Tablet

A bronze tablet to the memory of Thomas Edison was unveiled in the rotunda of the Roxy theatre on Wednesday. President Hoover's tribute to the inventor was read.

Lost Edison Data Presented Society By Terry Ramsaye

A valuable collection of Edisonia, lost for thirty years, including most of the early records of the commercial development of the motion picture in the years of 1894-5-6, has been presented to the Business Historical Society, which houses its collection of archives at the Baker Library of the Harvard Business School, Soldiers Field, Boston, by Terry Ramsaye, editor of MOTION PICTURE HERALD and author of "A Million and One Nights," the history of the motion picture.

The documents in this collection came into Mr. Ramsaye's possession in the last fifteen years through the cooperation of Thomas A. Edison and the late Norman C. Raff of Canton, Ohio, senior member of the firm of Raff & Gammon, the concern which, as Edison's agents, launched the business career of the motion picture in its peep show days in 1894 and carried it through to the screen in 1896.

Put Records in Barn

Mr. Raff "exhausted the probabilities" of the industry in 1897, and invested his $50,000 of film profits in farm land adjacent to Canton. He put his records in the loft of his barn, which with the growth of Canton became the attic of the garage on his suburban estate, and for three decades the documents rested there forgotten and lost to the world. Meanwhile a fire at the Edison works destoroyed most of the motion picture records there, making the hidden trove in Ohio priceless to history. In 1924 Mr. Ramsaye's researches discovered Mr. Raff, who a year later in a cooperative search for some bits of old film came upon the chests containing the long forgotten documents.

Incidentally, Mr. Raff's film-won real estate ultimately got him a larger fortune than many picture magnates of the period enjoyed.

Cost $1,100 First Year

The papers include the correspondence files, including much Edison correspondence, the daily shipping receipts, daybooks, journals, ledgers, leases and other documents of the business and the several companies and corporations involved, including the International Novelty Company of Council Bluffs, Ia., an obscure progenitor of today's movie corporations, the Kinetoscope Company of New York which began the picture's career with a battery of Edison peepshow Kinetoscopes at 1155 Broadway in New York, April 14, 1894, and the Vitascope Company which started the screen on its world career with Thomas Armat's projection machine, known as the Vitascope, manufactured in the Edison plant and using Edison film, at Koster & Bials' Music Hall in Herald Square, April 23, 1896.

These yellowed old records show that operations resulted in a total expenditure, for the production of the negatives for the first year of the industry, of $1,100. The letter files also reveal Mr. Edison in the role of the impresario of the films of that day, bringing Mr. Eugene Sandow, a strong man star under the management of Florenz Ziegfeld, Jr., to the camera in consideration of the publicity to be had, and enlisting such notables of the day as Ruth St. Denis, LaLoie Fuller, Carmencita and other stage luminaries.

The business papers have been classified and filed in a manner to make them available at the Baker Library to students, while some personal papers, including a manuscript copy of the early chapters of Mr. Ramsaye's history of the industry bearing Mr. Edison's marginal notes and comments, have been specially treated for preservation and placed in a vault to be held from public view until the death of all persons concerned in certain passages of the story.

GAUMONT FIVE-MILLION PROGRAM SETS RECORD

Myers' Denial

A published report that the Allied Exhibitors' newsreel, produced by Kinograms, was about to close with its eighth issue, was specifically denied as "erroneous" by Abram F. Myers, president of Allied States Association, national exhibitor group, in a wire to MOTION PICTURE HERALD. The report stated that the newsreel would close due to the fact that it could not pay for itself, having failed to sign a single national advertising account, which had been counted upon to make the reel successful.

Academy Elects Directors' Slate

The complete slate of directors and executive committee members has been elected as nominated by the Academy of M. P. Arts and Sciences at Hollywood. No opposition developed in any case.

The new directors will meet shortly to elect a president, vice president, secretary, treasurer and other officers. They will be installed at the annual banquet on November 10, at which time the "King and Queen of the Movies" will be selected, as well as outstanding work in all divisions of the industry. The directors representing the various branches are: Actors, Conrad Nagel; Directors, Frank R. Capra; Producers, M. C. Levee; Technicians, Max Ree; Writers, Benjamin Glazer.

Hollywood Leaders To Dine Dr. Gianinni On October 28

Dr. A. H. Gianinni will be honor guest at a banquet in his honor on October 28 at the Ambassador Hotel in Hollywood. The committee in charge includes Harold B. Franklin, Charles R. Rogers, Winfield Sheehan, Irving Thalberg, Joseph Schnitzer, Samuel Goldwyn, Jack Warner.

Maurice Chevalier and Will Rogers are heading the entertainment committee.

Studios of British Producer and Gainsborough, Affiliate, Are Doubled for Expansion

Evidence that the Gaumont-British organization appreciates its new chances are forthcoming in the terrific five-million-dollar program, absolutely without precedent in England, which is just announced by C. M. Woolf, chief of Gaumont-British.

Balcon Production Chief

Michael Balcon, for some time the chief of Gainsborough Pictures, Ltd., Gaumont production affiliate, is appointed production chief of both the Gaumont studios and those of Gainsborough. These have each been more than doubled in size the past year, and have been fitted with the latest equipment, and conveniences. They are now unrivaled in the country. An output of one feature picture a week throughout the year is aimed at, and it is expected that the whole of the seven floors will be operated at full pressure as soon as the new program is got under way.

Woolf points out that whereas a short while ago a British film that cost more than 15,000 pounds sterling was considered uneconomic, the whole scale of values has now changed. Does he mean that they are sure of the American market? Recently several Gainsborough Pictures have proved well above the average, and I happen to know that a copy of "The Ghost Train" has been dispatched with all haste to the Fox executives in U. S. A., not by any of the Gaumont-British people, but by a Fox representative in this country. He is of opinion that in "The Ghost Train" Britain at last has touched the high line of entertainment shown in the average good class American feature. My personal views on the film were given in the MOTION PICTURE HERALD issue of October 10 and in effect endorse that impression.

Personnel Needed

There is just one point which at the moment is not clear. If Gaumont is to turn out an average weekly feature film of good quality, personnel will be needed—directors, writers, expert photographers, and other technicians. They have some already, but not enough. This, however, represents an economic difficulty fairly easy of solution, because the world supply of talent is equal to the demand and as soon as it is profitable to make British pictures on a higher production scale, it is automatically easier to afford the money for good artists, and staff. That is just about where Britain has got to by now. Last year 10,000 to 15,000 pounds sterling was the outside, now they can spring to 25,000 to 35,000 and feel far more sure of themselves.—W. H. M., London.

Catholic Guild Holding Show

The seventh annual gambol of the Catholic Motion Picture Guild will be held at the Carthay Circle, Hollywood, following the current attraction. Winfield Sheehan of Fox has donated use of the theatre.

NEW SOUND-ON-FILM FOR 16mm. DEVISED laboratory equipment can be used to time out the prints.

Additional developments declared ready for marketing by J. R. S. P. I. also include optical reducing printers for reducing 35mm pictures to 16mm stock, and a synchronizing apparatus, the first of its kind, according to the developers, to be placed on the market.

J. R. S. P. I. will not engage in the manufacture of either its recording or projection developments, it was stated. Instead, a limited number of manufacturers will be licensed to build the equipment, probably fewer than 20. It was announced that 14 prominent manufacturers already have filed applications for licenses to manufacture either the projection or recording equipment, and that within the next few months all production licensing arrangements will have been completed.

The licensing agreement probably will specify royalties of $15,000 for a five-year period, plus six per cent of the manufacturers' gross sales. The latter specification will include a minimum guarantee of $5,000. This arrangement will compare with RCA licensing terms of 7½ per cent of gross sales, plus a recording charge of $100 per reel.

Rent Trucks at $950 a Month

J. R. S. P. I. will not make any recording charge per reel. Instead, the company will rent out its own sound trucks at approximately $950 per month. The rental will include full use of the truck and the services of two sound truck men. The owners, however, will retain supervision of truck assignments in order that no picture material unsuitable for the general film libraries of the company will be made.

Earl W. Jones, head of J. R. S. P. I., estimates that the company's sound trucks can be built for $15,000. This compares with an estimated cost of $25,000 for Erpi and RCA trucks.

Reducing 35mm. Prints

Because of thorough coverage of educational and industrial fields through tieups now under way with significant organizations of both classifications a wealth of newsreel material will be obtained by the trucks in service, it is claimed. Jones considers the possibility of hundreds of darkened theatres being reopened as 16mm newsreel and novelty subject program houses with 10-cent admission scales. A rear-projection system would be used, according to Jones, and economical theatre operation realized through elimination of licensed operators by use of non-inflammable stock; the accompanying elimination of projection booths, and a saving of two-thirds of the stage space through use of the smaller horns and equipment required. In the event of the development of such theatre projects, Jones said, his company will be prepared to participate with the owner in their operation on a joint arrangement; the licenser supplying projection equipment and film, and the owner in charge of operation.

The company's film library will be greatly augmented by the reduction of 35mm prints already in existence to 16mm stock, it was pointed out. Complete industrial and educational pictures can be had from such sources without shooting a single foot of film, it was said.

The skeleton operating organization of the company is headed by Jones Research Sound Products, Inc., a holding corporation in which no stock will be offered for sale. J. R. S. P. I. Industrial Pictures, Inc., and JRSPI Educational Pictures, Inc., have been organized to sub-license industrial and educational organizations, respectively, to produce pictures, with the company's equipment. All such productions will be the property of the company's film library, which will be controlled by JRSPI Productions, Inc.

Both the rental of the company's sound trucks and the developing and reducing of prints and other laboratory work will be handled by JRSPI Sound Studios, Inc. The final unit in this skeleton organization is J. R. S. P. I. Engineering Corporation, which will have charge of the licensing of others to manufacture both production and recording equipment.

Financing is entirely within the organization, according to Jones.

Dialogue "Made" Detective Films, Declares Van Dine

Filming of detective stories prior to sound was impossible, S. S. Van Dine, author of numerous murder yarns, told a group of trade and newspaper men at a luncheon this week at the Brooklyn Vitaphone studios, where a series of twelve Van Dine two-reelers is being produced.

"Dialogue is the most important factor in the production of detective stories for the screen," Van Dine said. "The most suitable scenario formula to follow opens with the discovery of the body and then follows the investigation back from clew to clew to the final solution of the murder. All this is done most simply by dialogue, with examination of witnesses and suspects carrying the burden of the story. In the era of silent pictures an excessive number of subtitles was required to tell a detective story for the screen. They interrupted action to such an extent that their production, except in lengthy footages, was impossible."

Van Dine described the detective picture as a mental problem—equal in popular entertainment values to chess, checkers, bridge, cross word puzzles and backgammon. He believes that detective pictures have a large audience among motion pictures patrons, and said he preferred writing mystery stories for the screen to writing them for magazine readers.

Ontario Indicts Film People on Wholesale Scale

A Toronto grand jury at the Fall assizes has found true bills against 124 corporations and individuals in Canada and the United States, following a preliminary hearing ordered by the Ontario government after the investigation into the Canadian film industry under the Combines Act.

Indictments were recorded against individuals, including N. L. Nathanson, former Famous Players managing director, Sol Bloom and Irving Fine, operating the Bloom and Fine circuit of Toronto suburban houses and a subsidiary of Famous, as parties to the alleged combine.

The true bills were based on acts of the companies and the many individuals during a period extending from 1924 to 1930, inclusive, according to a decision of the grand jury. Actual trials are not expected before January due to the crowded condition of the court calender. The prosecution was undertaken with the co-operation of provinces Manitoba, Saskatchewan, Alberta and British Columbia. Quebec has followed a policy of watchful waiting without definite action.

The indictment reads that a conspiracy was entered into with Adolph Zukor, Will Hays, Gabriel Hess, Charles Pettijohn, Colonel John A. Cooper, Arthur Cohen, M. A. Milligan and many other corporations and individuals to prevent or lessen competition within Ontario in sale, purchase and supply of films contrary to the Combines Act. The second count in the indictment says these parties conspired to lessen competition contrary to the criminal code, while the third count charges they conspired to limit unduly the facilities for supplying or dealing in positive proofs of films in contravention of the Criminal Code. Indicted companies include Educational, Universal, Famous-Lasky, Fox, RKO, Columbia, U. A., Tiffany, Vitagraph, Regal Films, representing M-G-M and Pathe Theatre Holding Company, representing Jules and J. J. Allan, also Famous Players Canadian Corp. B. and F. Theatres, Ltd., and Premier Operating Co.

Scores of other Canadian companies operating theatres as subsidiaries, exchange managers, supply houses and practically all large film producers of the United States are listed as having been those with whom the accused entered into the alleged conspiracy.

NBC Adds a New Pacific Network

The National Broadcasting Company inaugurated a second network of stations on the Pacific Coast on October 18, providing California, Oregon and Washington with a choice of NBC programs heretofore available in the East only. The additions form two networks and two supplementary stations which may be used with either group.

Either of the networks, together with the supplementary stations may be used with the eastern groups for a national hook-up.

SHUBERT THEATRE CORP. PUT INTO RECEIVERSHIP

Action as Result of Charge Firm Cannot Meet Debts; To Continue Operation

Federal Judge Francis G. Caffey in New York has appointed Lee Shubert and the Irving Trust Company joint receivers in equity for the Shubert Theatre Corporation. The action came as a result of a petition alleging the company is unable to meet its obligations, filed by Gerson, Beesley & Hampton, Inc., Chicago, which charges the company owes it $5,000.

Lee Shubert, in a statement, called the receivership "the result of two years of depression" during which attendance at theatres declined and the cash resources of the company were depleted. The company, however, is solvent, according to its attorney, William Klein. The Shubert enterprises, says the petition, represent an investment of $20,000,000.

Shubert and the Irving Trust will continue the business under authority granted it through the court action. Klein consented to the receivership. The petition sets forth that the corporation has liabilities of $10,749,687, largely secured by real estate mortgages, and that it has outstanding debentures of $6,360,000. The corporation suffered a net operating loss of $1,670,000 for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1931, and a similar loss of $1,230 for the previous year.

Lee Shubert, in his statement, said the receivership "seemed the only means of conserving the valuable properties and good will of the corporation for the benefit of creditors and stockholders. I am hopeful that through the intervention of the courts and the return to more normal conditions, the business may again be brought back to the prosperity it enjoyed prior to the existing depression."

The corporation was organized in 1924 to take over all the business then carried on by the Shubert Theatrical Company, Sam S. and Lee Shubert, Inc., Shubert Consolidated Enterprises, Inc., and the Winter Garden Company, Inc., all of which, according to the petition, had been established by Sam S., Lee and J. J. Shubert 25 years prior to 1924.

At present the company owns in fee or holds in long term lease 23 theatres, a production warehouse and certain non-theatrical properties. It also has a part interest in the ground lease of seven additional theatrical properties, leases 26 theatres, has a part interest in the lease of five others and participates in the net profits of 14 theatres owned by others in which it has the privilege of booking plays.

Shubert, as receiver, was required to post a bond of $50,000. A meeting of the creditors is to be held in New York on December 2, at which time it will be decided whether or not the receivership shall be continued. The petition stated that Lee and J. J. Shubert had advanced the corporation $100,000 within the last 30 days.

A committee has been formed by J. & W. Seligman & Co. and the Chase Securities Corporation to protect the interests of holders of debentures. Holders of more than 75 per cent of the outstanding debentures have deposited them under the company's plan of readjustment announced last June, and in view of the receivership, it was said, the readjustment plan cannot be carried out, and it is expected that holders of the bonds will be asked to transfer their deposits to the committee.

In recent years the earnings of the corporation have declined steadily. The operating income was $2,205,425 in 1929, $2,681,365 in 1928 and $3,289,519 in 1926.

At one time, it was planned by Joseph P. Kennedy, important figure in New York motion picture circles, to consolidate the Shubert group of theatres with the then Pathe film company, but the idea did not materialize.

The New York Review, the Shuberts' weekly publication, lists the following houses outside New York as owned and operated by the Shuberts:

Chicago—Princess, Great Northern, Garrick, Apollo and Grand Opera House.
Boston—Shubert Lyric, Plymouth, Wilbur and Majestic.
Philadelphia—Shubert, Forrest, Walnut Street and Chestnut Street Opera House.
Detroit—Shubert-Detroit, Lafayette and Cass.
Cincinnati—Shubert and Cox.
Newark—Shubert and Broad Street.
Pittsburgh—Alvin and Pitt.
St. Louis—Rialto.
Cleveland—Hanna.
Baltimore—Maryland.
Kansas City—Shubert-Belasco.
Buffalo—Teck and Majestic.
Wilmington—Shubert Playhouse.

From Chicago it was reported that a suit seeking an ancillary receivership for the corporation would be filed there.

A. H. Woods Files Involuntary Bankruptcy

A. H. Woods, veteran legitimate producer, filed a voluntary petition in bankruptcy in Federal Court at New York this week. Woods' action followed by one day the appointment of a receiver for the Lee Shubert enterprises.

In his petition, Woods filed a partial list of assets valued at $1,668,359.51, and a partial list of liabilities amounting to $1,026,054.92. Among the creditors listed were Al Jolson, $3,329; Central Trust Company of Illinois, $233,000; the Shuberts, $150,000, and Fox Film Corporation, $126,464.

Woods, who achieved considerable financial success through the production of popular plays in the early 1900's, has had no sensational "hit" since "The Trial of Mary Dugan," although "Five Star Final" was a last year's success. He had announced four plays for production this season, but none has been forthcoming so far.

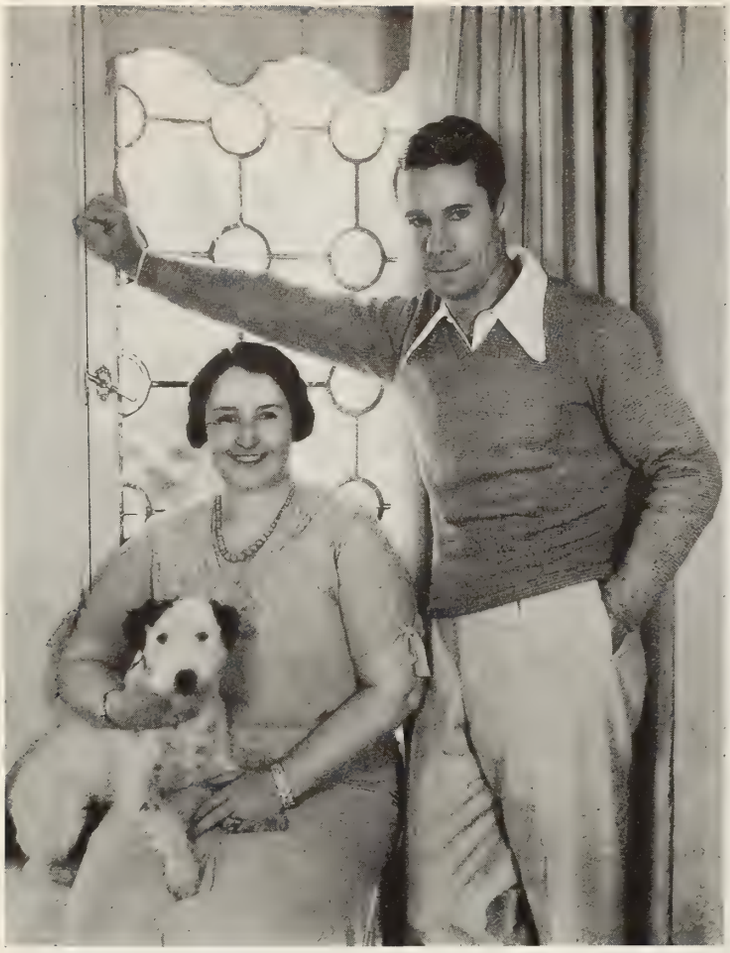
BOMBED. The Easterly theatre in Chicago, damaged by bomb flung in the entrance in a series of depredations associated by authorities with dispute over two-men-in-a-booth issue.



SIGNED. Charles Quigley, rising stage player, who has been signed by RKO-Pathe to a long-term contract for juvenile leads. He is but 25 years old.

EAST MEETS WEST. Sid Grauman, cinema entrepreneur of the Pacific Coast, and Moe Silver, New York showman, at the opening of the Western theatre, representing the latter's invasion of the West.

FOOTBALL TRIBUTE. This ceremony formally opened the run of Universal's "The Spirit of Notre Dame" at the Mayfair in New York. Gathered about a portrait of the late Knute Rockne, are Carl Laemmle, Universal chief; Mayor James Walker of New York; N. L. Blumberg, assistant general manager of RKO Theatres; E. M. Glucksman, RKO official; Hugh O'Donnell, president of the Notre Dame Club.

NOT ALL THE FAMILY. Oh, no! Only the pater familias, Joe E. Brown, himself; the Missus—and we-forget-his-name. This domestic portrait of the many-faced Warner Brothers comedian marked his last visit to New York on a personal tour, when Mrs. Brown came East to join him.

PALS. We know what the anti-evolutionists will say, but sticking to the facts: Here are Billy Barty, tiny Mack Sennett personality, with one of the chaps who played with him in "Who's Who in the Zoo."

STREAM-LINE. Built for speed? They don't say, but if so, here's disarming repose. The usual adjective applied to Myrna Loy is, exotic, but of course one should be able to take one's adjectives or leave them alone. Now an RKO-Radio player, as you know.

HIS BEST GIRL. To show us that after all men never grow up, and also to add to our collection of film celebrities at home, David Manners, First National juvenile, posed for this one at the residence he shares with a lady who is of course very proud to be his mother.

ON DECK. Jeannette MacDonald, Paramount player, arriving in Canada on the Canadian Pacific liner, Empress of Britain, to entrain for Hollywood to begin work in Maurice Chevalier's new production, "One Hour With You."

LAUNCHING NEW MOVIETONE UNIT. Just before the ribbon was cut opening the new headquarters of Fox Movietone News in Australia—Minister of Customs, F. M. Forde; Stanley Crick, managing director of Fox Australian activities; and Harry Lawrenson, Fox Australian editor.

IN NEW FIRM'S FIRST FILM. Emile Gauvreau, editor of the New York Daily Mirror, morning tabloid; and General John J. Bradley, U. S. Army, retired, who appear in "Heroes All," a historic film record of the "World at War" released by Mendelsohn-Young Productions, Inc.

CAMEO. One of a new series of portraits by Ferenc, Viennese photographer recently come to this country, of Lil Dagover, long famed for her beauty and thespian talent in Europe, who is already at work on her first American picture, Warner Brothers' "The Captain's Wife."

MOST REDUCTION IN NEIGHBORHOOD

a policy is justified. Under prevailing conditions, houses which are able to operate with a reduced overhead cannot be expected to maintain admission scales which will protect competitors operating at high cost, and any attempt to compel them to do so will meet with strong public resentment."

Most Cuts in Neighborhoods

"The natural tendency," Myers concluded, "is to charge as much as the traffic will bear, and this tendency will prevail when conditions improve, as I believe they soon will. Meanwhile, we should not be unduly concerned over a tendency we are unable to control and which will be of short duration."

Although first-runs situated in central theatre districts are also shaving nickels and dimes off admission scales, the most widespread reductions have been made by subsequent-runs in neighborhood localities. Of the 30 cities, 24 reported varying numbers of theatres operating on a 10-cent schedule. Included in this number are theatres at which the 10-cent admission is effective only at matinees, or on special occasions, as midweek "Bargain Nights" or "Family Nights." Two of these reported 10-cent admissions for children only, and three others reported price reductions had been made recently bringing the minimum scale for the cities to 15 cents. Only five cities reported no reductions in admissions to date. They are Toronto, Washington, D. C., Louisville, Houston and Philadelphia.

"Flood Town With Passes"

Several of those reporting existence of 10-cent top houses stated that the admission price was not a new one, but had actually been in effect for some time. Among these was Rochester with 25 10-cent admission houses. The situation existing there was accredited to an over-seated condition which forced the low-scale price, rather than to an existing economic condition.

An unusual situation was revealed at San Antonio, where seven theatres were reported operating on a 10-cent basis, one of them a Publix house which plays first-run pictures four days a week, and subsequent-runs the remainder of the week. The competing independent 10-cent houses are obliged to take subsequent-run pictures uniformly. All San Antonio houses on the 10-cent admission basis are reported flooding the town with "passes" which admit their bearers on payment of a 10-cent service charge.

That the lower admissions are distasteful to distributors, particularly where they reach the 10-cent minimum, is evidenced in several situations in which exchanges are reported to have refused to sell or quote prices to theatres charging 10-cent admissions. In Atlanta, where there are now four 10-cent admission houses operating, a move that threatened to make the practice general there was checked in this manner by exchanges. At Kansas City, one exhibitor operating a 10-cent admission house charges that both Fox and M-G-M refused to sell to him and he has asked the Kansas City Exhibitors Association to investigate his case with a view to possibly bringing restraint of trade action against the distributors.

All cities reporting have varying numbers of theatres operating at 15 cents top, and several reported first-runs operating at 20 cents and 25 cents top, representing reductions of from 10 to 20 cents. Numerous houses reported advancing schedules from a 10-cent minimum effective during the summer months, but the newly established schedules are almost uniformly below those of the same theatres one year ago.

Although only the exceptional 10 and 15-cent admission houses appear to be in a position to play new product, many of them do obtain fairly recent pictures. On the other hand, there are a great many of these minimum admission houses playing product anywhere from six to 18 months old.

Following are the results of the reports from 30 cities.

Exchanges Act at Atlanta

ATLANTA—An increase in the number of 10-cent admission theatres was stopped in this territory by exchanges refusing to sell film to dime admission theatres. Many houses are running at 10, 15 and 20 cents. The only dime houses now in this territory are the Ponce De Leon, Atlanta, subsequent-run; Skydome, Miami, second-run colored house; Ritz, Jacksonville, second-run colored house; Garden, Tampa, subsequent-run. The Paris at Johnson City was a dime admission, but advanced to 20 cents in order to get product.

Baltimore Prices Steady

BALTIMORE—Practically all theatres here are staunch members of the MPTO of Maryland and adhere to standard admission of 10 and 15 cents for matinees and 15 and 25 cents for nights. Several theatres charge 10 cents for matinees and 15 at nights, and one has a 15-cent top all day.

No Increase at Buffalo

BUFFALO—There has been no increase in the 10 cent admission theatres here. The only ones are a few in the Negro and foreign sections and three downtown where top is 15 cents. These get only the floater trade, and are not a factor in relations of first-runs. All are third-run. A gain has been noted in 25-cent theatres, however, with Shea opening the Court Street first-run at a quarter top, but it is not expected to affect downtown trade as it means opening up an untapped neighborhood.

Builds New Patronage

CHARLOTTE—Within a 75-mile radius of Charlotte there are about 25 theatres, some of them first-runs, now charging 10 cents admission. Because of reduced prices on everything else there has been a demand for lower theatre admissions. People who have not attended theatres for years are now regular patrons of a 10-cent theatre here. Ten-cent theatres have created new business and detract little if at all from higher scale houses. Film rentals are the same to 10-cent theatres as to other second and first-run houses, such theatres depending entirely upon the reduced admission to increase patronage sufficiently to make operation at the low scale possible.

Chicago Neighborhoods Cut

CHICAGO—A general cut in admission prices has been made by outlying houses in recent weeks. A checkup reveals the average admission of neighborhood houses is 20 and 10 cents. Between 50 and 60 theatres have reduced scales to 10-cent admission for matinees, raising to 15 cents in the evening. The reduced admissions are attributed to the general situation with the public demanding bargains.

Attendance has increased following the lowering of prices. One exhibitor who formerly charged 30 cents took in $60 over the previous Sunday on his first Sunday at 25 cents. But opinion is that in general the slashed prices in the smaller houses fail to produce much extra revenue because of the limitations in seating capacity.

Admission price reductions are being used by exhibitors as an argument for lower film rentals, and distributors are making some concessions, though not large ones. Ten-cent houses usually get pictures in the thirteenth week after release, while houses charging 25, 20 and 15 follow for the first, second and third week, based on admission price.

35 in Cincinnati Area

CINCINNATI—Approximately 35 houses in the Cincinnati territory are charging a dime admission. These houses have mostly a middle and lower class clientele, that is compelled to seek entertainment at low cost regardless of quality or age of the picture. The number of these houses is gradually increasing, especially in suburban locations, through lowering admission scale made necessary to maintain operation. Attendance usually shows a sizable pickup when the dime admission is inaugurated. Reduced admissions result in the exhibitor insisting on lower film rentals and effecting general operating economies.

Turn Losses to Profits

CLEVELAND—Almost all independent second-runs at Akron are reported charging 10 cents, also the Opera House at Sandusky, the Rialto at Elyria, Casto at Ashtabula, all with increased business. In Cleveland a two-for-one admission policy in most subsequent-runs is said to be helping business. The consensus of local exhibitors is that a 5-cent reduction alone has not been effective. Akron exhibitors say 10-cent admissions have turned losses into profits.

No Effect on Film Rentals

DENVER—Four houses in the Denver territory are charging 10 cents admission. The policy does not hurt attendance elsewhere unduly, as when first-run houses have good pictures crowds go there regardless of competing scales. Has no effect on film rentals except for that particular house and no effect on protection or adjustments on pictures already sold.

Gains Only Spasmodic

DES MOINES—A half dozen Iowa houses with 10-cent admissions are recording only spasmodic gains. Most are doing as the A. H. Blank houses, giving specific shows. One Blank house had 100 per cent increase at a special show. Redfield and Linden in competition cut prices and this has almost eliminated their profits. Children's Saturday morning shows at 10 cents at the Des Moines theatre, backed by club and educational groups, have not paid as well as expected. Allied leaders feel that some results have been accomplished in their protection fight but would not commit themselves definitely. Ten to 20 reductions of film rentals have been made.

Dime for Houston Children

HOUSTON—No 10-cent top shows in this territory and exhibitors hope there never will be. Ten cents admits children only in city first-runs.

LITTLE EFFECT NOTED ON RENTALS

Indianapolis Bargain Nights

INDIANAPOLIS—There are no theatres here that have a regular policy of 10 cents admission. However, 15 neighborhoods have bargain nights when 10 cents admission is charged. Exhibitors are divided as to the advisability of such low prices. Some are in favor while others say it kills the rest of the week. There is some agitation for film rentals adjustment but no definite action has been taken as yet.

Kansas City Suit Threat

KANSAS CITY—Emanuel Rosky, owner of two suburban dime houses, today requested Kansas City Independent Theatre Owners Association to investigate the dime show situation with a view to filing a restraint of trade action against Fox and MGM. He claims those companies refuse to sell him new season product because of contract terms providing film shall be exhibited for more than 10 cents. The association will meet this week to consider action, officials say, on whether houses playing films at 10 cents on family or bargain nights can be refused resumed service on new product.

There are seven dime houses in greater Kansas City including three grind shows that double bill. In addition there are about 12 suburbans with 15, 20 and 25-cent policy, which have inaugurated family or bargain show nights Tuesday each week charging ten cents and mostly double billing. The majority of the exchanges object. Some say they will refuse service next season.

Los Angeles Tendency Upward

LOS ANGELES—Only six Main Street shooting galleries in the Los Angeles territory are charging 10 cents, and all of them have always been that price. Only one house on the coast, at Port Angeles, Washington, dropped from 15 to 10 cents in the last two months. Local leaders declare the tendency is to increase admissions. Several houses here have jumped from 30 to 40 cents recently.

Louisville Prices Maintained

LOUISVILLE—Leading exhibitors report no price reductions here and virtually none in the state. The Mary Anderson theatre, just reopened, is offering a 10-cent show until 1:30 p.m. on re-run pictures. Suburban and second-run houses are getting 15, 20 and 25 cents for a.m., p.m. and night shows. The general situation is unchanged and admission prices are being well maintained.

Increase at Milwaukee

MILWAUKEE—An increase in 10-cent admission theatres in the Milwaukee territory has been apparent the past six months. There are approximately 20 such houses in the Milwaukee territory. The general situation is believed to be the cause of the increase in the number of these houses, which are now enjoying a greater patronage, although it is doubtful whether this has resulted in increasing profits.

Slight Gain in Twin Cities

MINNEAPOLIS AND ST. PAUL—There are eight 10-cent houses in the twin cities, of which four or five have had the policy for years. The Palace, Minneapolis and Garrick and Alhambra, St. Paul, have come to life under the policy. The main reason seems to be that this is the only part of the local theatre businesses which Publix and RKO are neglecting. It is a bid for drop-in trade and time-killers. The Garrick announced future showing of a few features before their first runs in St. Paul.

Most films shown at a dime are old: six or eight months, at least, and usually a year or more. The policy cuts in on some 25 cent houses but not seriously.

Only One at New Orleans

NEW ORLEANS—New Orleans has 57 motion picture houses, not including the business section, which has four. Only one house in the city has a 10-cent admission, the Lafayette on Baronne Street, operated by Jake Miller, with films over a year old. Average admission in the neighborhood houses is 15 to 25 cents.

Estimate 60 in New York

NEW YORK—Admission reductions in New York theatres are widespread, ranging from 5 to 20 cents. The Broadway first-run sector has recognized changing conditions and, in consequence, fewer "road showings" are in evidence. A scant four or five pictures have played at $2 top in the past several months. Subsequent-runs have made corresponding reductions, and unofficial estimates placed the number of houses now playing at 10 cents admission at 60. Some of these are showing double features. Admission reductions to 15, 20 or 25-cent tops have been numerous in Manhattan and Brooklyn neighborhoods of heavy foreign population. Attendance increases have met these reductions and grosses and film rentals appear to be unchanged for the most part.

Dime for Children

OKLAHOMA CITY—Seven "B" theatres in this city run with dime admissions, five with 15-cent scales, and eight first-runs and suburbans have a dime price for children.

No Problem at Omaha

OMAHA—There are six 10-cent admission theatres in this territory, all of which have had that scale for some time. No local problem has grown out of these scales, and there is little indication of an increase in their number.

None at Philadelphia

PHILADELPHIA—No theatres in the Philadelphia territory are charging 10 cents admission.

Only One at Portland, Ore.

PORTLAND, ORE.—The Rivoli is the only house in Portland at a 10-cent top. Four additional houses are charging 15 cents. Theatres in outside territory run at 25 cents top. The Circle theatre, a subsequent-run, now gives juveniles free Saturday morning shows. There are no prospects of changes or increases for the balance of the year. Theatre attendance is fair. There has been no change in rentals or protection.

Providence Children Benefit

PROVIDENCE—Providence theatres, with an eye to attracting the attendance of children, are keeping prices down to rock bottom for youngsters.

The RKO Albee and Victory permit children to attend their houses any time and to sit in any seat for ten cents. The Paramount also has a ten cent charge up to 1 p. m. and fifteen cents afterward.

At the Majestic, youngsters under 12 are admitted for fifteen cents and at Loew's the same price will see them through, if they are accompanied by their parents. Otherwise the regular admission rates are invoked.

Richmond Pupils Attracted

RICHMOND—Brookland and several other Richmond theatres charge 10 cents for children but rates for adults at ten or more houses are 25 to 50 cents. The 10 cent admission has been in effect here some time and has attracted school children galore. A flat admission of 10 cents is being charged in one Danville house and at several other places in Virginia.

Not a Problem at Rochester

ROCHESTER—Between twenty and thirty theatres here charge a dime admission. Although the town is heavily overseated, grind houses have been diminishing. The general situation has not hit Rochester as hard as other cities of its size, and the town is sufficiently small to make a downtown jaunt easy. Dime houses are not attracting the clientele that other neighborhoods do, so competition is negligible. Exhibitors believe good pictures and plenty of advertising will prevent further attendance cuts.

Passes at Dime Service Charge

SAN ANTONIO—The State theatre, Publix-owned, and the Palace, Plaza and Strand, independent houses, are cutting hard into the attendance of deluxe houses by flooding the city with passes calling for a ten cent service charge. These are doing a great business on the theory that patrons can see five shows for the equivalent of one 50 cent admission in a deluxe house. The ten-centers play split week, second-runs, but the State theatre shows first-runs four days each week. The only houses here on an actual ten-cent admission basis are three Mexican theatres which do not affect deluxe houses.

Dime for Junior Shows

SAN FRANCISCO—No theatres in this territory charge less than 15 cents admission, according to film exchanges, exhibitors organizations and executives of theatre chains. Children's matinees are the only exceptions, as dime admissions are frequently in effect at such times. Local exhibitors see no opportunity for profit with a ten-cent admission policy.

One More at St. Louis

ST. LOUIS—There are now four ten-cent houses in St. Louis, an increase of one over former years. This last house reduced its scale from 20 cents, due to using but one non-union projectionist. This competition has but slight effect on other downtown theatres charging a higher admission. Film rentals paid by this house are in line with other subsequent-run theatres. First-run houses have 90 days protection over ten centers, while the Capital, a second-run downtown house, has 60 days protection.

None at Toronto

TORONTO—There are no theatres in the Toronto district now charging ten cents adult admission.

Little Effect at Washington, D. C.

WASHINGTON, D. C.—No increase in 10 cent admission houses has been noted in Washington. The city is little affected by general conditions due to the heavy government payroll and extensive federal building program. Local theatres are all doing fair business or better. Some are taking up slack by increased economy in operation.

125 FILMS PICKED FOR TIEUPS IN BOOK WEEK

Board of Review Compilation Timely for Nov. 15-21 Campaign and American Education Week

Increasing interest throughout the United States in tieups between motion pictures and the books from which they have been adapted, as well as expansion of library and school cooperation with the theatres, as has been pointed out by Rita C. McGoldrick in her "School and Screen" department in MOTION PICTURE HERALD, is emphasized by the National Board of Review of Motion Pictures in announcing 125 "Selected Book Films" of 1931 compiled for Book Week, November 15 to 21. The listing includes features, short product and foreign productions.

Book Week, for which the tenth annual compilation has been made by the National Board, is sponsored by the National Association of Book Publishers and presents an opportunity for timely tieups on book-films. The American Library Association expresses its interest by endorsing and publicizing pictures which have definite related value to library material.

For tieups with schools, special timeliness is presented by American Education Week, November 9 to 15.

In the following list of selected features, the order of arrangement is: picture, title, source, author, stars, reels and company. Symbols preceding titles are: f—suitable for the family audience, 12 years up; m—suitable for the mature audience, 18 years up; j—suitable for special showings to children under 12; *—especially interesting or well done.

New Disc Marketed By RCA Photophone

RCA Photophone has launched distribution of a new type of disc record developed and perfected by the engineers of the RCA Victor Company at Camden. The new disc is called the Victrolac record.

Advantages cited for the new record over the old style of shellac record are: reduction in size to 12 inches diameter, reduction in weight from 24 ounces to four, flexibility, durability, improved tone quality and a minimum of surface noise.

"Ninety per cent of the producing corporations already have arranged with us to employ this record in transferring the sound tracks of their sound-on-film production for disc reproduction," said Lowell V. Calvert, manager of the department of recording operations.

PASSING IN REVIEW

The department endeavors to set forth two lines of material of service to the exhibitor—first a showman's evaluations of the outstanding pictures—second, reviews of information

"PALMY DAYS" will easily equal the previous smash business of Cantor's last picture, "Whoopee," yet I thought it was not as good as the first one.

Plenty of real "belly-laughs" scattered throughout the picture and an abundance of exploitation possibilities by reason of the bakery and doughnut slant. But, wherever Cantor brought money before he will duplicate without any tremendous effort along exploitation lines. By which I do not mean that you can stick up a banner and call it a day; I'm merely trying to make you understand that with a picture of this sort you do not have to spend a lot of money exploiting it with expensive gags. There are enough costless angles to insure plenty of publicity for the attraction without going into heavy costs to create new ideas to sell it.

Those thousands of theatres in the smaller towns and cities will be particularly glad to know that United Artists has a corking lineup of newspaper ads that are just "meat" for this picture. Containing an abundance of comical catch lines, some eye-arresting art work and plenty of selling slants, I don't hesitate one moment to recommend them to any showman who wants to give this picture a newspaper campaign designed to create and attract S. R. O. business. Inasmuch as your newspaper advertising will constitute your chief selling medium, it stands to reason that you will want something different from the usual run of ordinary picture ads. U. A. gives it to you in a big way.

Cantor's name will prove more "box office" than the title of the picture, but you can make that title equally as magnetic because of its thousand and one selling slants, all made to order for tieups, if you intend going in for them. As for "audience" appeal, just wait until the first crowds start circulating around the town; they'll be your best ballyhooing bets from the moment they leave the house.

Give "Palmy Days" your longest run, play it whenever you please; it's O. K. for kids and adults. Just be sure the natives know you're playing it.

"THE BELOVED BACHELOR." Just to prove that Hans Christian Andersen did not use up all the good fairy-tale plots, Paramount has revived this age-worn skeleton and made it into one of those pictures that the cash customers always like to look at, provided they are not compelled to swallow a similar dose too often.

The idea of a bachelor who adopts the cheeild, sees her grow up, and then falls in love with her—after much effort on the part of the story adapter and dialogue writer—has really been done to death, yet, I must admit this one held the interest of a fairly large audience at the N. Y. Paramount, including me.

I should label this entertainment satisfying. It is that by reason of the way it is handled. Paul Lukas is fine as the sculptor, who adopts the daughter of his model. Dorothy Jordan is sweet and lovable as the girl after she grows up, even though she appears to be acting a wee bit too much, but since most audiences are just audiences, they won't become critics and find this fault with her.

The title possesses a certain amount of "box office" appeal, but that appeal will have to be built up into something really magnetic so far as making them come out to see it is concerned. Use every slant in your merchandising that will produce the desired results; namely, to get them to the theatre. After they buy their tickets they will have no kick to register about the picture. So don't be afraid to sell it strong. Take advantage of whatever sales angles are most likely to get your campaign across to the patrons of your community.

The element of a fairy-tale makes it O. K. for the kiddies without actually calling it a children's picture; but it is chiefly adult entertainment and should be spotted accordingly. The portions that most critics can find fault with will hardly interest showmen, who must get dough with the picture. Sufficient to say that it is a good, entertaining picture, acceptable in 'most any section of the country. Get behind it and make it count for some real receipts.

"HEARTBREAK" has some selling slants, but, unfortunately, it won't deliver at the box office in the shape of big receipts. Farrell will be liked wherever Farrell is accepted, but his work lacks that certain something which makes you go out and rave about him. Madge Evans handles her end of this weak plot very nicely.

For the average theatre, key city first-runs excepted, the title won't mean a doggoned thing. Whatever you make of it will be due to your own ability in doping out ways and means of taking a title and playing around with it so that your campaign will contain some appeal. The war slant is getting tougher and tougher to sell with each succeeding picture built around it. This plot opening in Vienna won't make it any easier.

Your merchandising can take on the flying slant or the usual war stuff. Whichever is productive of the best results for your own situation should be capitalized. Ballyhooing Farrell as an aviator is another thought in connection with your build-up. If Madge Evans has "caught hold" in your community, give her a good play because they will like her looks and her work.

For newspaper purposes, you might promise Farrell in something entirely different—it is—and from that point work out your campaign away from the title, which suggests a possibility of something dreary and "heartbreaking." It's really not that bad, so live it down, while at the same time letting them know that it has a real happy ending, as it has.

The title is far from "box office" in appeal and the picture itself lacks "audience" value. Whatever success you may have will be chiefly due to the kind of a selling campaign you put behind it. No suggestive stuff in this, but N. G. for the kids because they'll have nothing to shout about except the brief air shots.

"Heartbreak" was a disappointment to me. I hope it won't be to your box office receipts. If possible, screen it for your own benefit before you start selling it. Possibly something will suggest itself that may help you put it over to better than average business.

"SUSAN LENOX." Being Greta Garbo's latest production, and having the screen's latest favorite (with the ladies), Clark Gable, practically spells box office success for this picture. Here in New York at the Capitol theatre you have to fight your way through a couple of thousand women if you expect to get a seat at all. And, from what we've been told by out-of-town exhibitors, the feeling is the same elsewhere.

"Her Fall and Rise" having much to do with "Susan Lenox," we must admit that she was doing much more falling than rising. As a matter of fact, we can't just decide where the rising took place, but we'll take the producer's word for it. Be that as it may, this is "box office" most anywhere, and "audience" everywhere, except (we must reluctantly admit) where the long-nosed, straight-laced, keepers-of-the-public-morals are concerned. They will find ample cause to register some kicks and maybe preach a sermon or two against such pictures. But I believe those spots are slowly fading from the face of the earth (as bounded by the Atlantic-Pacific-Canada and Gulf of Mexico).

Selling angles are, naturally, along the lines of your best Garbo appeal, plus Gable as an added incentive. Monkey around with that title as much as you dare without touching on its TNT slants. This should not be difficult; there are many worthwhile angles in connection with it. The carnival and circus portions of the pictures may also offer a suggestion or two. But the more I think of it, the more convinced am I that your entire merchandising effort should be concentrated on Garbo and Gable. It represents the safest line of action and contains more b. o. appeal than trying to build up interest on the strength of the picture's title. The tropic angle, too, may give you another line to work up. But these backgrounds are merely incidental and do not form an important part of the picture's value. To play up any one too big would be to leave a wrong impression in the minds of your prospective patrons.

NOT FOR THE KIDS. But you should be able to play this for the equal of any previous run, providing they are as strong for Garbo as I suspect.

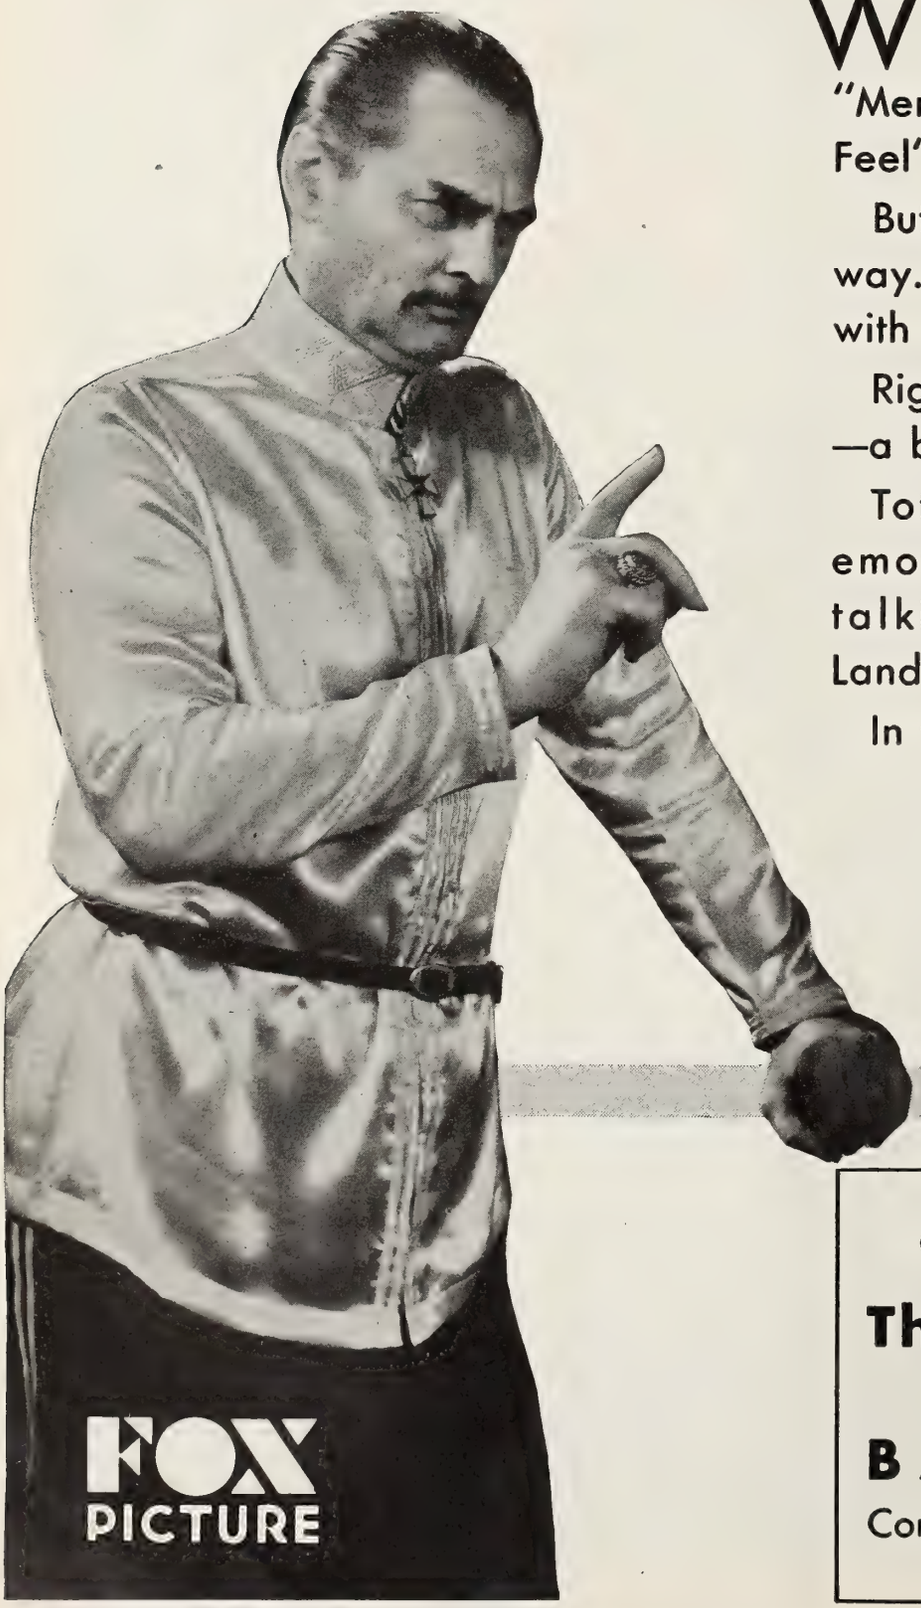
"WOMEN GO ON FOREVER." Clara Kimball Young having previously been my pet aversion, I must truthfully admit that for the first time I was able to sit through one of her pictures. And not only that, I enjoyed it equally as much as the majority of pictures current on Times Square.

It is a darned good, entertaining production, with Clara doing some corking fine acting. Provided with the proper vehicles, best suited to her type, she would soon be a b. o. smash everywhere.

The title is the toughest thing about this picture when you start to talk about its chances at the box office. It could mean a thousand different kinds of plots, and any guess could be wrong; but audiences are not taking too kindly to guessing. They want to know what they are going to see and that is where your ability as a show-salesman must come into play. Build up a fitting campaign for this attraction. Create interest among your prospective customers on the many slants that the picture provides, and you can rest assured that they will go home well pleased with their evening's entertainment. It's that kind of a picture.

Comedy relief is more evident than in many of the other pictures I've been seeing lately, and that's an essential ingredient these days. Love and romance are here, too, and that angle is well played by Marion Nixon and Paul Page, especially Marion. But you can't discuss this one without complimenting Miss Young on her fine performance. It's her picture.



Gangster and other slants make it best suited for just adult play, so better shy away from the kids with it. But as a midweek attraction, I would say: "Go out and sell it and don't be afraid of the results."

Ambassador Bill

(Fox)

Comedy

(Seen at Hollywood)

America's unofficial ambassador in the role of Ambassador of the United States to a little Balkan kingdom where revolutions are as popular as afternoon tea in London. This is the background for Will Rogers' latest Fox production, "Ambassador Bill." Typical Rogerian humor, whims and pathos against such a colorful setting were held responsible for the film being termed one of the best of the comedian's series.

When Bill arrives in Transylvania he finds the King abdicated in favor of his eight-year-old son, with the Queen Mother guiding the destinies of state. Bill proceeds to fix things up by teaching the boy king how to play baseball, and the ministers of state how to play poker! He gets the former king back on the job and discredits the crooked prime minister.

Rogers' adventures as an ambassador are given support by Marguerite Churchill, looking strikingly regal and beautiful as the queen; by a talented youngster named Tad Alexander in the role of the boy king; that noble villain Gustav von Seyffertitz as the traitorous prime minister; Greta Nissen as his sensuous accomplice; Ray Milland as the deposed king; Tom Rickets as the ex-ambassador who has grown jittery from too many connonadings; Edwin Maxwell and Ernest Wood as the "career diplomats" to whom Bill's court manners are paralyzing; Arnold Korfl as the resplendent Balkan general, monocle and all; and Ferdinand Munier in what was called a splendid characterization of a bombastic United States Senator.

Director Sam Taylor seems right in his element with this sort of picture, expertly done from a screenplay by Guy Bolton. Cinematographer Johnny Mescall has done well with the magnificent backgrounds. Costuming has been lavishly and colorfully done by Guy Duty.

Produced and distributed by Fox. Directed by Sam Taylor. Screen play by Guy Bolton. Suggested by "Ambassador from the United States" by Vincent Sheean. Photographer, John Mescall. Art director, Duncan Cramer. Costumes by Guy Duty. Release date, November 22, 1931.

The Honor of the Family

(First National)

Comedy Drama

A Balzac story, modernized, provides the opportunity for a display of the beauty and speaking ability of Bebe Daniels as well as crisp dialogue and some swift-moving action in "The Honor of the Family." The production also marks the second appearance in talking pictures of Warren William, from the stage, the first having been in "Expensive Women."

The story presents more than a love triangle; it might better be called a quadrangle. There is the wealthy old nobleman (Frederick Kerr), to whom Laura (Miss Daniels) is companion and nurse. And there are Captain Boris (Warren William), his devil-may-care nephew, and Tony Revere (Alan Mowbray), Laura's lover.

There is also a three-cornered battle of wits to obtain the nobleman's fortune, via a much-passed-around will.

Laura, in her ambition to have the Hungarian nobleman's wealth willed to her so that she may become the bride of Tony, tries unsuccessfully to get her employer to give her power of attorney, but does succeed in getting him to drive out his relatives. Then the Legionnaire nephew arrives from Africa, whereupon many things happen. Boris announces his creed of dominating women by breaking their spirit, though he confesses that once he has broken their spirit they lose their interest for him. Laura refuses to have her spirit broken or even bent.

Boris kills Tony in a duel after having taunted Tony into challenging him. And he makes short work of Tony's second, who tries to ambush him.

Boris sends Laura away, and to Barony's repeated lamentation, "I want my Laura," he promises to find her provided that he is given some expense money. Barony gives him a blank check. Then as Boris steps out of the door, his aide drives up with the car and Laura. He has been driving it around and around the circle of the driveway.

Produced and distributed by First National. Author, Honore Balzac. Adaptation and dialogue by James Ashmore Creelman. Additional dialogue by Roland Pertwee. Director, Lloyd Bacon. Cameraman, Ernest Haller. Running time, 66 minutes. Release date, October 17, 1931.

Flying High

(MGM)

Comedy

(Seen at Hollywood)

Bert Lahr certainly has done his bit for this "make America laugh" movement. In M-G-M's screen version of "Flying High," Lahr pulls a bundle of laughs from the preview audiences that begin 'way down in the pits of the stomachs and rise up to slap resoundingly against the roof of the house. It is pure, unadulterated farce, with Lahr going at a terrific pace.

Just to give the audience an occasional rest from uproarious laughter they stop for a little romance pleasingly carried along, musical comedy style, by Pat O'Brien and Kathryn Crawford. There are a couple or three tuneful musical numbers of the wellknown DeSylva, Brown and Henderson brand, with John McGowan assisting the trio, and some knockout dance ensembles arranged by Busby Berkeley.

While most of the nonsense is by Lahr, he gets plenty of expert assistance from Charlotte Greenwood, Charlie Winninger, Guy Kibbee, Hedda Hopper and Herbert Braggiotti. "Flying High" was a sensational success on the New York stage, and if the local preview audiences are any criterion the success should be repeated on the screen.

Bill (A. P.) Younger has done a swell job of transferring the show to the screen. He and Robert E. Hopkins are also credited with additional dialogue. Charles F. (Chuck) Riesner was the ringmaster at this riot, and also gets credit for the adaptation. Bill Gray edited, and there was some exceptionally brilliant photography by Merritt Gerstad. No matter how they split up the credits, the boys all conspired to cook up a 180-proof tonic for jaded dispositions.

Lahr, long a great Broadway favorite, may not be well known to the country now, but this one should go a long way toward popularizing him in the provinces.

Produced and distributed by M-G-M. Directed by Charles F. Riesner. Books, lyrics and music by George G. DeSylva, Lew Brown, Ray Henderson and John McGowan. Screen play and dialogue by A. P. Younger. Additional dialogue by Robert E. Hopkins. Dances by Busby Berkeley. Adaptation by Charles F. Riesner. Photographed by Merritt B. Gerstad. Edited by William S. Gray. Release date, Nov. 7.

Flute Concert of Sanssouci

(Ufa)

Historical Drama

At Ufa's Cosmopolitan in New York, an audience, which very nearly filled the house, broke into applause at the conclusion of this German language historical film which concerns an episode in the life of Frederick the Great of Prussia, just prior to the Seven Year's War.

Ufa very obviously did not stint in this production, making it as lavish in the matter of court scenes, dress and the atmosphere of the time, as history indicates was the habit in the period of which the film treats. It is essentially a study of Prussia's leader of another day, who, enjoying the playing of the flute, formed the habit of holding impromptu flute concerts when great political and war problems were uppermost in his brilliant military mind.

Otto Bebuehr, who gained the title role in an earlier stage play, "Fredericus Rex," by reason of his actual personal and physical resemblance to the king Frederick, was roundly praised for his splendid portrayal of the great Prussian leader. The able support which was rendered him in the role was led by Hans Rehmann as the Major von Lineneck, confidential courier, Renate Mueller as the major's wife and the balance of the cast in general. Hundreds of extras were used in the production, with excellent results from the standpoint of authenticity in appearance of the background.

A slight romance is woven into the historical episode, that concerning the major and his flirtatious wife, more than anything else for the purpose of indicating how, despite weighty matters of state, Frederick took the time to prove to his trusted messenger that his wife's flirtations were really no indication of a lack of fidelity. The major carries important dispatches to the king when the Prussian envoy in France suddenly discovers that Austria, Russia and France are about to pounce upon Prussia in an attempt to wipe Frederick's army from the hectic map or Europe.

Effective scenes of the masked ball at the intrigue-laden European capital and the major evading pursuing troops of horse in his effort to get his messages through safely are interspersed with the setting at Sanssouci, Frederick's palace in Pottsdam, where much of the action takes place. Here is indicated the manner in which the king handled great political situations, while showing no outward sign of the seething mind at work, actually practicing and giving flute concerts while planning modes of attack in defense of his country.

An impressive concluding sequence shows the king on the palace portico reviewing the thousands of troops in the gray dawn who are marching out to defend Prussia. Photographically, the film was productive of excellent expression.

Produced by Ufa. Distributed by Ufa in United States. Directed by Gustav Ucicky. Production, Guenther Stapenhorst. Scenario by Walter Reisch. Settings, Herlth and Roehrig. Cameraman, Carl Hoffmann. Sound. Hermann Fritzsching. Release date, October 16, 1931. Running time, 82 minutes.

Cuban Love Song

(MGM)

Musical Comedy-Drama

(Seen at Hollywood)

Seldom has San Barnardino's Fox theatre audience demonstrated such approval of a picture as it did when "The Cuban Love Song," featuring Lawrence Tibbett and Lupe Velez, Ernest Torrence and Jimmy Durante, was shown. It was termed a splendid picture by many.

Hale Hamilton, Karen Morley and Louise Fazenda also were thought to have acquitted themselves notably in the rollicking musical comedy drama, which had the right amount of pathos to make it interesting.

The story begins with a trio of Marines, bent on a good time and finally landing in the brig, in the days preceding the United States' entry into the World War. This trio, Tibbett, Torrence and Durante, goes to Cuba, Tibbett leaving behind the lovely Karen Morley, who promises to wait for him until he has satisfied his adventursome spirit, and Durante leaving Elvira (Louise Fazenda). In Cuba Tibbett (known as Terry) gets into trouble immediately with a pretty little peanut vendor (Lupe Velez) by running into her peanut cart with an automobile of the 1917 vintage and of popular make. Of course, they fall in love and Terry has some happy days in Havana, where, it seems, the song with which Americans became so familiar recently originated many years ago.

However, America enters the war and Terry is forced to leave his Cuban paradise and "peanuts," promising to come back to her. In France he is badly wounded and comes back home to San Francisco, where, although he tells her he loves another girl, Crystal (Karen Morley) stands by. Finally they are married and on their tenth wedding anniversary, Terry now being a successful New York business man, they go to a night club to celebrate. There Terry hears again "The Peanut Vendor" and walks out on the party, runs into "Romance" (Ernest Torrence), his old sidekick in the Marines, and they hunt up Durante and land in jail.

He goes to Havana to find Ninita married and the mother of several children, the oldest of which is "Terry," with whom the older Terry becomes acquainted.

Produced and distributed by M-G-M. Directed by W. S. Van Dyke. Story by G. Gardiner Sullivan and Bess Meredyth. Songs by Herbert Stothart, Dorothy Fields, James McHugh. Adaptation by John Lynch. Additional dialogue by John Colton, Gilbert Emery, Robert E. Hopkins, Paul Hervey Fox. Edited by Margaret Booth. Photographer, Harold Rosson. Release date, October 31, 1931.

Hobson's Choice

(British International)

Real Old English Life

If Americans are interested, as we sometimes are led to believe, in the traditions and customs of an England which is now passed, this picture should make its appeal to them. For it is certainly one of the most effective pieces of English characterization ever turned out of an English studio.

It is set in Lancashire and tells the story of a slavedriving old bootmaker, who employs three daughters because they need no wages. One, the eldest, long past the wedding age (as he tells her) smarts under the taunt, and thereupon forces Willie Mossop, her father's best shoe craftsman, to marry her. "Your hands and my brains will make a real partnership," she says. And although Willie pleads that he is already "tokened," she relaxes nothing till they are wed. By this time they have set up shop in a basement, and have taken the best part of the old man's business. Finally in desperation the old bootmaker begs his daughter and her hubby Willie to return to him. This is the day of triumph, for the girl drives her hardest bargain, and forces her father to take her husband into partnership. It is a bitter pill for him, but being "Hobson's Choice" he has to swallow it.

The story is told in the 90's, and costumes and customs are equally comic. Lancashire dialect is used essentially, but it will be easily understood by any English speaking audience, and its quaintness may very well make a special appeal to American fans. On the other hand the pace is slower and the humor of a more innocent nature than is usually demanded by present day audiences.

Thomas Bentley, who directed, has made a workmanlike job of this one, and the acting is among the best in any English film to date. For all this production is not upon super lines: no great outlay was made. Frank Pettingell as Willie Mossop is one of the finest character finds of recent years, and rivals Sydney Howard, whose type he closely resembles. Viola Lyel, the chief girl, is another discovery.

On the whole this ought to mean to American audiences approximately what a story of Oklahoma pioneering means to British. Just a glimpse of a strange phase of life, easier to laugh at than to understand.

Sundown Trail

(RKO Pathe)

Western

Tom Keene in his first effort as RKO Pathe's western star gives every evidence of a personality which should be popular among western picture fans. Keene and the fast and ample action which characterizes the film go a long way toward making this a potentially enjoyable film of its type, despite a story which is more or less similar to the general run of western stories.

Marion Shilling was termed competent in the opposite role as the condescending eastern girl and the balance of the cast is adequate.

Keene is spurned by the girl when she comes to take possession of the ranch after the death of her father, whose manager Keene was. The girl is accompanied by her attorney, who is at the same time her suitor. Stanley Blystone, as the bandit leader, attacks the stage, attempts to steal the money shipment and later plans a purchase of the ranch's cattle from the spineless attorney, to be followed by a raid and the taking of the purchase money.

Keene, despite the girl's antagonism toward him, engages in a determined effort to save the girl from the bandit and the ranch cattle and property from the marauding of the gangs. He is successful in both efforts, and incidentally, in bringing the girl to the point where she returns the feeling of attraction which he has developed meanwhile toward her.

Die Grosse Sehnsucht (The Great Passion)

(Tobis)

Musical Romance

While there is considerable music and a thread of romantic plot in this production, viewed at the Tobis-Vanderbilt in New York, the picture is primarily a vehicle for exposition of the inner workings of a sound studio—specifically of the studio at Neubabelsberg, Germany's own Hollywood. And it is the agency for showing German film stars at work and at play. In fact, with a number of the players this is accomplished simply with introductions to Camilla Horn at a reception.

Thirty-three stars participate in the making of this picture. Among those better known to American production are Conrad Veidt and Lil Dagover.

It is essentially a story of the sound stage, literally. Most of the action takes place on a sound stage and practically all is within the studio—extras, stars, technicians. Players give burlesques of their successes. A birthday party provides one opening for comedy dialogue and action, but this is true of much of the entire picture.

Drama

A drama, embodying more than a little real tragedy, comes from the Elstree studios near London of British International Pictures to the Warner theatre on Broadway. From the stage play by Frank Harvey, called "Cape Forlorn," "The Love Storm" is virtually entirely restricted as to action theme and setting, to the lonely, terribly isolated lighthouse on Cape Forlorn, off the New Zealand coast.

This setting, incidentally, affords an opportunity which was not overlooked, for numerous beautiful and striking scenic effects, based most particularly on the ocean breakers tumbling over the rocky lower levels of the huge rock formation on which the Cape Forlorn light stands guardian.

The leading players, and in fact the entire cast, for there are only five in the film, are Fay Compton, Frank Harvey, Ian Hunter, Edmund Willard and Donald Calthrop. All were considered to have done good work, particular note being taken of the performances of Willard, Miss Compton and Frank Harvey.

Harvey, as the skipper of the light, brings Miss Compton from a mainland dance hall to the light as his wife, where she is particularly nicely greeted by Willard as the mate of the light crew. A motor launch is wrecked against the rocks in a storm and Hunter is rescued. Willard in the meantime has been poisoning Miss Compton's mind against her husband and the light house, with the object of going off with her. Hunter, being polished and well spoken, is extremely attractive to Miss Compton and she falls in love with him.

Willard had meanwhile discovered via radio that Hunter is in reality a fugitive from justice, having absconded with a large sum of money which he had taken as general manager of a building company. When Willard confronts him, Hunter denies his guilt, and when the girl steals to the room while they are arguing, a fight ensues and to save the life of Hunter, she kills Willard.

Harvey discovers the truth and shields his

TAKE CARE OF THE LAUGHS AND THE DOLLARS

THEY SAY what the country needs is a laugh. We say that what it needs is laughs—lots of laughs—laughter every day. And what you and your box-office need is lots of laughs—laughs on every show.

A laugh is fine—as far as it goes. And a good feature comedy is fine—as far as it goes. But it's Educational's short subject comedies and novelties you need to get consistent, sure-fire laughter into your program week after week.

Laugh Day, Laugh Week, Laugh Month, Laugh Year—are with you all the while you play Educational's comedies. And, remember, you never heard a laughing crowd cry about your show.

wife. Police arrive and Hunter is recognized and taken. Harvey permits his wife to leave, knowing he is incapable of making her happy.

Years later, Harvey is seen in a Honolulu cafe, old and broken, where he meets Miss Compton. She tells him she is waiting for Hunter, who will soon be released from prison. Harvey leaves the cafe.

The direction of E. A. Dupont was commended for the manner in which he retained audience interest at a height throughout the film, as well as the expert fashion in which he took advantage of every possible opportunity for stressing the unusual character of his story and setting.

Produced by British International Pictures. Released, by Wardour Films, Ltd. Directed by E. A. Dupont. From the stage play by Frank Harvey. Scenario by Victor Kendall. Edited by A. C. Hammond. Cameraman, Claude Friese-Green. Sound, Alec Murray. Release date, October 16, 1931. Running time, 62 minutes.

Mystery

A mystery film from the independent market which contains in satisfactory fashion the elements of good mystery. An audience at Loew's New York on Broadway received the film well, being appreciative of the direction and a cast of good quality.

Particular comment was accorded the work of Barbara Kent as the feminine lead, and of John Holland as the reporter who eventually turns up the guilty party.

An actor is strangely murdered by strangulation in his theatre dressing room after the last act of a play. Suspicion falls on several people during the course of the investigation, any one of whom had apparently an excellent reason for dispatching the actor. Following numerous complications and suspensive moments, Holland, as the reporter turned sleuth, partly by reason of his love for the actress, Miss Kent, succeeds, with her aid, in revealing the guilt of the play's stage manager as the murderer.

The guilty party is well hidden from any audience attempts at detection, and the solution is worked out in a satisfactory logical manner.

Dorothy Christy and Lillian Rich, featured in the support, gave performances which were described as of good quality.

Produced by George R. Batcheller (Chesterfield Production). From Arthur Hoerl's "Grief Street." Directed by Richard Thorpe. Assistant director, Melville Shyer. Photography by M. A. Anderson. Running time, 65 minutes.

SHORTS

Palmy Daze

(Louis Simon)

Only Fair

Louis Simon not only produced this short comedy, but also starred in it, but there is little enough of real comedy in the number. It is understood much money was spent on the short. Definite plot construction and execution is rather conspicuous by its absence. The better part of the action occurs on a train, with the final sequence set in a hotel. Only fair as a comedy effort.—Running time, 28 minutes.

Melodie der Welt

(Tobis)

Travel Fantasy

Bizarre and atmospheric treatment of a picture, a forte of German production, is emphasized in this Tobis film, seen at its American premiere at the Vanderbilt theatre in New York. The picture, which runs 30 minutes and is a cross between long and short feature, is a melange of sound and sight travelogue, emphasizing world art and industry by parallels and contrasts pictorially and orally. Fadeouts play a large part in this achievement. The parallel is drawn, for example, by fading a shot of a sailor running up a ladder to the crow's nest into one of a native of another part of the world "shinnying" up a cocoanut tree, and next into one of a monkey doing the same. There is a rapidly shifting portrayal of styles of cathedral architecture, of music of theatre and clang of industry. The picture is brilliantly conceived and executed, with no interruption whatever to name localities. While the production is billed as "with George Bernard Shaw," the British dramatist and satirist, appears only in one spot. Wolfgang Zeller did the musical score, Walter Ruttman the directing. Running time, 30 minutes.

Deception Plays

Fine

Howard Jones, Southern California mentor, takes the lead in introducing various well known coaches the country over, who in turn, explain several plays prominent in the deception methods which characterize the modern football attack. Though technical, it is interesting, both for the football fan and for the non-fan, who will be caught by the appearance of the great coaches and by the shots of several big games at the stadiums.—Running time, 10 minutes.

The Delivery Boy

(Columbia)

Great!

One of the secrets of the immense popularity of Walt Disney's Mickey Mouse cartoon comedies is the fact that the audience is given a series of surprises. "The Delivery Boy" is no exception, as evidenced by the reaction of the audience at the Tobis Vanderbilt in New York. The unexpected sources discovered for music extraction brought a succession of chortling. Running time, 10 minutes.

Sport Slants

(Vitaphone)

Minor Sports

Ted Husing explains several of what in collegiate circles would be called the minor sports in this reel. The running time of five minutes is divided among pingpong (with Meysa McMein, the illustrator, as one of the stars), handball and lacrosse. Throughout the play Husing tells what it's all about. Good photography, with due regard to best angles, makes it easy to follow the description as well as the action.

Taxi Troubles

Funny

Andy Clyde again in a Mack Sennett effort, and as usual effective, particularly by reason of Clyde's ability to register good comedy in amusing fashion. He is a cab driver in this one directed by Del Lord, and runs into all sorts of complications with his wife, mother-in-law, a New Year's party, a gangster's wife and finally the gangster himself and the police. He only escapes him and his mother-in-law after a wild ride during which his cab and mother-in-law's baby car go through some harrowing and amusing experiences. Clyde's manner of registering abject fear by expression and voice is one of his best bets.—Running time, 19 minutes.

Manhattan Mariners

(RKO Pathe)

Good

A Grantland Rice Sportlight in which a group of girls circumnavigate Manhattan Island in a speedboat. Starting at 86th Street and the Hudson, the boat travels south, around the battery, up the East and Harlem Rivers into the Hudson again and south to the starting point. Liners, yachts, New York's incomparable building skyline and the great bridges, including the new George Washington span, come into the picture in an interesting and entertaining manner.

Football Forty Years Ago

(Universal)

Mildly Interesting

Number one of the Christy Walsh All-American sports series, showing Glenn S. (Pop) Warner, Stanford coach, explaining characteristic plays of the game of the 90's. His team, dressed in wigs, mustaches and the football dress of that day, run through the plays as the coach describes them. Interesting by way of contrast to the game of today.—Running time, 9 minutes.

Shiver My Timbers

(MGM)

Fair

One of the Our Gang series, but not nearly matching the earlier subjects. There are numerous adults in the cast, which may readily be held responsible for the weakness, comparatively, of the effort. The gang plays hookey rather than listen to a sea captain's fake stories and the teacher plans to scare them from being pirates, with the aid of the captain. Rest of the film concerns a tough group of men trying to frighten the youngsters.—Running time, 21 minutes.

Idle Roomers

Amusing

Two acrobats practice their stunts in a hotel room, and the landlady sends for two psychopathic experts, thinking the two are crazy. The doctors humor the pair by learning their stunts and the booking agents, walking in, sign the doctors for the act, while the ambulance attendants drag off the acrobats. Fairly amusing and the tumbling is clever.—Running time, 9 minutes.

Slow Poison

(RKO Pathe)

Amusing

Jimmy Gleason again, and still managing his would-be pugilist, Ham Hand. The latter is dumb and Jimmy amusingly bullies him at every opportunity. The fighter falls for Mae Busch, and in order to get some pep into him, Jimmy has the girl kidnaped. The plan falls through, and she swings a few rights and lefts on her own account. Gleason is funny, anywhere.—Running time, 21 minutes.

Jingle Bells

Fair

A Paul Terry-Toon number, with the assorted animated animals having a great time on the ice and snow, and the wolf running away with the maiden. Her equally animated sweetheart rescues her to the accompaniment of various operatic arias. Synchronization is good and the number as a whole a fair animated.—Running time, 6 minutes.

THEATRE RECEIPTS

Theatre receipts from 29 key cities over the country for the current week showed a decided comeback from the new low totals recorded in the past several weeks. The total for the week reached $2,391,409, which, compared with the total figure for the previous seven-day period, $2,298,950, indicates an increase for the week of $92,459. As further evidence of the spurt taken in grosses this week one new high figure was recorded, at the Rivoli in New York, where "Monkey Business" was the attraction, which compare with no new high figures last week. Only four new low figures were recorded in the current compilation, while nine were indicated in the last report.

LOOK FOR BETTER PICTURES

NOT since sound first burst upon the eager ear of the movie fan have there been changes and improvements so important to the industry as those wrought by Eastman's introduction of ultra-speed negative film. They begin on the lot, and they carry through to the screen. Because of them you can look for better pictures for your audiences. And that is an augury of better business for you. Eastman Kodak Company, Rochester, New York. (J. E. Brulatour, Inc., Distributors, New York, Chicago, Hollywood.)

YOUR PUBLIC

by RITA C. McGOLDRICK

THE mails of each day bring practical evidence that the SCHOOL AND SCREEN service, distributed by MOTION PICTURE HERALD, has become a definite box-office factor for those theatre men who have experimented with it. Club women from Texas to Maine, and from the state of Washington to Florida have found it a new idea, a definite guide in their local work for better pictures. Through this department letters of introduction to club leaders have been sent to theatre managers who believe that SCHOOL AND SCREEN has given them an intelligent excuse to ask for local club and school cooperation.

"The Spirit of Notre Dame"

Universal's outstanding football picture, "The Spirit of Notre Dame," was featured prominently in the September issue of "School and Screen." The return which this department has had on that one picture alone is an astonishing demonstration of how far this work may go. From one city after another reports have come to us of the interest which "School and Screen" has aroused among the school children and of the gratifying results in overflow audiences for "The Spirit of Notre Dame." Some schools sent five hundred children to the picture, some seven hundred and fifty. In all instances the pupils were accompanied by the teachers of the schools. This meant more than pupil attendance to the theatre men. It meant that every cheering boy and girl going home after the show made each member of his family eager to go to the evening performance to see the same thing. The result has rolled up an impressive contribution, in actual reported figures, toward this picture's success.

Experiment in Providence

On Friday, October 23d, "The Spirit of Notre Dame" opens in the RKO-Albee theatre of Providence. The manager, Mr. J. William Denback, with Mrs. George Harrison, motion picture chairman of the Rhode Island State Federation of Women's Clubs, arranged a round table conference to which Mrs. Harrison invited the heads of all local groups. With the "School and Screen" service as the basis of operation they mapped out a campaign by which the city would be canvassed for new and bigger audiences for the picture. This department, cooperating with the movement, sent the following letter with a copy of "School and Screen" to the principal of every school in Providence:

"We wish to call to your attention an outstanding picture of value to children which will open in the RKO-Albee theatre on October 23d. The 'School and Screen' service of MOTION PICTURE HERALD is a free service which we are happy to send to you regularly. Its purpose is to encourage child attendance at better pictures and to point out to educators and children the educational possibilities of the entertainment screen.

"We would appreciate your encouraging the children to see this picture and I should be glad to hear what you think of this project."

Through this direct contact with the schools, and the follow-up work of the local clubs, we believe that Providence will present an ideal experiment in the practicability of this whole project, and that we shall see an outstanding box office success of the picture in that city. It is an experiment worth watching!

Consider the Ladies!

For the past several months we have emphasized, actually over-emphasized, the rising tide of power we see in the development of women's clubs in every state in the nation. And in every organized unit that we know of there is a chairman or a small group interested in the Better Pictures movement in the community. Surprisingly enough, the powerful and highly efficient motion picture industry has up to this time been nonchalant about analyzing its audiences. It has computed in rough figures that one hundred million people see motion pictures every week in this country, but it has never attempted a study of that enormous public nor classified it in any way. If such classification were accomplished the amazing fact would be disclosed that the women of the United States control the box office. The "boy friend" takes his girl where she wants to go; the Mother of the family tells Father of the picture that she is eager to see. In largest measure, she controls the children. It is a pivotal process.

Clubs' Statistics

Fifty years ago the women of the nation made the children's clothes and baked bread. They swept and scoured and dusted. In this modern age the average women, with her electrical conveniences and the miracles that come in cans, has more leisure. She enjoys the companionship of other women. They organize together and do a little community housecleaning. Indeed, they have gone a step farther than this; they are engaged in national housecleaning with the same vigor as if they were wielding a broom. There are sixteen thousand women's clubs in the United States with an actual registration of more than four million members. In the state of Ohio alone there are 552 motion picture chairmen!

When the Lady Steps Out

A publicity man with a flair for computation has gathered together the following astonishing and enlightening figures on her activities:

Women control 41% of the wealth of the U. S., dictating 81% of all purchases.

There are 44 women millionaires in this country.

Weekly wages of the country for paid workers total annually ninety-two billions. Of this amount seventy billion or 81% is spent yearly at the rate of a million a week, $166,000 per day—by women—

They control ninety-eight per cent of the purchases of homes and furnishings.

In department stores 85% of buyers are women; 90% of the jewelry purchasers are women. The poor man at one time bought exclusively one item—his collars; now he is deprived of that privilege because women buy his shirts with the collars attached.

Thirty to forty per cent of the customers of stock exchange firms are women, which is not so surprising when one considers that there are eight and a half million women among the wage earners in the United States.

Four billion dollars a year are spent on autos; 33% of the drivers are women.

In 1920 the women's magazines carried practically no automobile advertising. Now over 225 pages per month appear in women's magazines. Her demands have changed the entire method of automobile advertising. Formerly the appeal was to men, describing power, speed, ignition, engines. Now it refers to color, trimmings, upholstery, beauty of design—things primarily of interest to women, since she controls the purchase of the family car.

Women are responsible for the building and changes in homes, construction, architecture; colored bathrooms, kitchens alive with color; the kitchen stove, sink and refrigerator re-created in pastel tints; draperies, wall papers, dishes, glassware—all must have beauty.

In the past year women spent one and a half billion dollars for clothing; four hundred and fifty million for hats. Many industries changed entirely due to their demands. Consider the silk industry for instance. In 1900 only 12,572 pairs of silk stockings were manufactured—one pair for every 246 women. Now they are manufactured at the rate of twenty-five million dozen per year.

And the bobbed hair has been a gold mine. The ladies' crisply waved heads have saved the barber shops from bankruptcy.

Five milion dollars are spent daily on cosmetics, but contrary to general opinion that sale is not made to flappers, nor motion picture actresses. The biggest cause of cosmetic sales is the encroachment of middle age. It is the women between the ages of 30 and 60 who buy the cosmetics.

Do you think we should consider the woman in her relationship with the motion picture industry?

Texas Makes a Suggestion

The RKO Majestic theatre of Dallas, cooperating with the Times-Herald of that city, offers each year a free scholarship to all boys of grammar school and high school age in Texas. The contestants prepare a 300 word editorial on "The Influence of Motion Pictures on Boys' Education." These essays are sent to the Times-Herald or to Curt Beck, manager of the RKO Majestic. The scholarships are frequently won by the students of the Terrell School, which has established an outstanding record in preparing boys for college. Winners of the scholarship have entered Yale, Harvard, Dartmouth, Cornell, Northwestern, Southern California, Washington and Lee, as well as the leading universities of Texas.

The scholarship contest is open to all boys in the state—one scholarship for boys of grammar school age and the other for those of high school age.

Junior Show in Pasadena

The Fox-Colorado theatre of Pasadena has a children's Saturday Matinee that abounds in thrills, laughter and gaiety. The show at this theatre starts at 12:30 on Saturdays and presents to a big juvenile audience features booked with a special consideration for children. The management requests the children to be prompt for the opening of the doors at 12:30 and plans to have the program over at 3, after which the regular Fox-Colorado program follows.

St. Louis Better Film Council

A series of Saturday morning junior motion picture matinees has been arranged by the Fox theatre in St. Louis in cooperation with the Better Film Council. These are planned for the third Saturday of each month. The program suggested by the club women will consist of a feature picture, a musical program and several short subjects, all suited for young people. In this case admission is 10 cents.

J. C. Jenkins—His Colyum

Pocatello, Idaho

DEAR HERALD:

Today we crossed the state line into Phil Rand's jurisdiction, and as soon as we got into Idaho we began to pass orchards with trees loaded down with big, red apples, and if that wouldn't make your mouth water then you have been eating green persimmons.

We dislike very much to leave Idaho without going up to Salmon to call on our old college chum, Phil Rand, but Salmon is 200 miles from any point of the compass you have a mind to reckon from, and 200 miles up and 200 miles back makes 400 miles according to our geography and the condition of the roads we would have to travel. There's no doggone sense in Phil living clear up there out of touch with civilization just because that is where the salmon go to spawn. And there is no sense in a man wanting to live on salmon the year 'round, anyhow. Phil used to eat sowbelly back in his college days and he called it good. Come on down out of the jungles, Phil.

They Call It Just "Kemmerer"

In speaking of Kemmerer, Wyoming, recently, the Literary Digest referred to it as "Little Chicago," but likely they meant "Little Cicero," but in either case the Digest was mistaken, for Kemmerer doesn't have a king.

It is claimed that in the mountains adjacent to Kemmerer is where they brew a fluid that inebriates in quantities to meet the demands of the trade. Down in Kentucky they call it "moonshine," in Arkansaw they call it "white mule" and up in Minnesota they call it "Minnesota 13," but Kemmerer just calls it "Kemmerer," and that is a lot better because it advertises the town. Everybody knows where Kemmerer is, even the federal officers have heard of it, for it was reported that they recently located a cache of 20,000 gallons which they dumped out on the ground in a wanton disregard for the drouth that hangs over the country. When it comes to furnishing the boys (and some girls) with joy, according to the reports, Straightsville, Ohio, and South Coffeyville, Okla., haven't got a thing on Kemmerer, Wyo. We found Kemmerer to be a nice, quiet, orderly place, much like our home town, except that we missed Otto Hartman, the Sherlock Holmes, who is listed on the town payroll.

We stopped at Soda Springs to call on the manager of the theatre, but he was out of town. Soda Springs is where the soda water comes from.

The filling stations will charge your radiator with this water, but they won't charge your gas; that's why we are two dollars short of what we were this morning.

Speaking of Sheep

You have never seen any sheep to speak of until you have been to Montpelier, Idaho. That town is the sheep shipping center of the West.

We met a band of 1,500 sheep in the road today and had to stop until they got by,

for a sheep thinks he has the right-of-way and it is no use to try to argue him out of it. Then we drove up behind another band of three million six hundred and thirty-nine thousand, more or less; any how, they covered the highway for three-quarters of a mile and it looked like we would have to drag along behind that band for the balance of the day, but something happened that we wouldn't have believed would happen even though Crockett Brown would have sworn to it.

Just as we drove up to the band a sheep dog got right in front of our car and trotted along ahead of us and drove those sheep to one side of the road so we could drive through, and he went clear through that three-quarters of a mile with us and cleared the road for us. We'd like to buy that dog five dollars worth of T bone steak. There's a dog that has more sense than some people we could mention, but of course won't. He was sure SOME purp.

You don't have to ask the people of Montpelier what kind of a theatre manager S. H. Rich is, it is evident everywhere you look, for the town is plastered with billing for his show from one end to the other.

Last night he played "Ten Nights in a Bar-room" and stood 'em out for the second show, notwithstanding his house seats around seven hundred. Mr. Rich impressed us as being a theatreman much above the average run. He used to write occasionally for the HERALD but has been slipping a little of late and neglecting an important duty, and that he shouldn't do. He says he can't understand how anyone can successfully operate a theatre without the HERALD. We heartily agree with him, they can't; some have tried it but failed. It's a pleasure to meet such managers as Mr. Rich.

Hunting for Theatre Signs

Pocatello is the first town we ever saw where there were Fox theatres that we had to get out a search warrant to find them. Usually where there are Fox houses you can see the word "Fox" for two miles.

We looked both ways of the streets tonight to see a theatre sign and couldn't see one. We asked one fellow where the theatres were and he said he didn't know. The next one said he thought there were a couple over on another street but wasn't sure about it. We walked right past one theatre and didn't see it, notwithstanding our eyesight was good even though we had just come from Kemmerer. We finally found the second Fox house but couldn't find the manager. We found the assistant manager and introduced ourself to him but he was doubtful of ever having heard of us before, which sent our estimated importance down about 75 per cent. One more crack like that and we will be nothing minus, maybe we are anyhow.

American Falls

Yesterday we drove up the Snake River Valley to Ashton. Ashton is close to the west entrance to the Yellowstone Park. Last week we were at Cody, Wyoming, the east entrance to the Park and had to drive 750 miles around to get to Ashton.

The Snake River valley is where they grow the famous Idaho potatoes.

We don't know how large they grow, but one fellow told us that some of them were so large they had to saw them in two to get them in a wagon box. This sounded a lot like Phil Rand, but it wasn't Phil, for this fellow came from Nashwauk, Minnesota, and Phil came from Chicago.

Mr. A. B. Hager of the Rex and Mr. Capeller of the Gayety at Idaho Falls, and Mr. Hugh Drenner of the Rex and Elk theatres at Rexburg all claim that business has fallen off tremendously.

A Real System!

Blackfoot was putting on a county fair, and everybody and his Airdale were either there or on the way. We passed several Blackfeet Indians on the way to the fair. The Buck was marching ahead and his Squaw mosied along behind carrying the tepee, bedding, camp cook stove and other camping equipment besides the papoose. Now b'gosh, that's some system. What's the use in having a Squaw if you can't make a packhorse out of her. Leave it to the Bucks, they've got 'em trained right.

Everywhere we go we are asked whether it's this depression or that the public has lost interest in motion pictures that is causing this slump in theatre receipts. We tell 'em we don't know, but our guess is that both causes enter into it, especially the public's lack of interest in pictures. Blackfoot is having the largest attendance at her fair she has ever had. It looks like they have got something the public wants to see. "Ten Nights in a Bar-room," a States Right picture, is drawing more business for the theatres in this locality than any picture that has been released within the past year, or so theatremen tell us. Why? It's an old classic. The old have seen the show many times and the young have heard of it for years.

The titles of dozens of pictures that are being shown have no appeal to the public whatever; they class them as "just another picture" and so they stay away. Our experience teaches us that when you have something the public wants to see, hard times don't cut much figure, but when they don't care to see it, then "this depression" furnishes a good alibi. We bought some grapes today because we wanted 'em. We didn't buy any limburger cheese because we didn't want any.

VOICE OF THE INDUSTRY

IN YOUR "VOICE OF THE INDUSTRY" of October 10 one exhibitor mentioned the indecent trend of pictures, as one of his patrons expressed himself.

I thoroughly agree with him. Why is it that the producers seem to bring smut and indecency into pictures? I have run two pictures within the last month that were not fit for decent people to see and have had a great number of people ask me why this type of picture was produced.

Pictures nowadays should be made for the entire family, as the small towns cater to the family patronage and want entertainment that they can bring their children to and not wish they hadn't come after they have seen them.

I think that business in the smaller towns would be helped greatly if we could get some family pictures that are good clean entertainment.

"I Take This Woman"—Garry Cooper. Very good picture which pleased my crowd. Just a little draggy in spots.

"Clearing the Range"—Hoot Gibson. Good picture and enough action to please the Saturday crowd.

"Night Angel"—Nancy Carroll. Good picture, but overrated. Nancy has made lots better pictures.—HAROLD SMITH, Dreamland Theatre, Carson, Iowa.

Not Financially Interested

WE NOTICE IN ONE OF YOUR PUBlications, the MOTION PICTURE HERALD, under date of Oct. 3, that you had been informed Mr. Lee Moffitt was financially interested in our little paper, the Shopping News. Such is not the case and your informant is mistaken.

We believe Mr. Moffitt to be a hardboiled businessman, shrewd enough to realize the value of our paper as an advertising medium. He must find it profitable, else he would not spend money with us. He does not control our editorial policy any more than any other of our patrons.

Our advertising columns are open to any concerns who are reliable and have anything to sell.

We contemplate running short newsy items of interest to movie patrons each week. Naturally we would pull for our friends and advertisers.

Your magazine is very interesting and appears not to be adversely affected by hard times, judging from the contents.—KORTZ & RAWLINGS, Publishers, Owensboro, Ky., by M. Kortz.

Dialogue and the Audience

WHAT PRODUCT WE HAVE RUN TO date has not had an outstanding picture in the lot of them with but two exceptions. It looks like a bad season from the advance pictures.

"Born to Love," with Constance Bennett. RKO started out to make a "Common Clay" of this one and they missed the mark a long way. It is 'way below average and it drags along with 'way too much footage and dialogue. It could have been told in seven reels and been a better show. It is deadly slow and another one that is talked to death. When will they learn that the average audience wants less talk and more action or comedy.—A. E. HANCOCK, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind.

Action Pictures' First Taken By 20 Warner Midwest Houses

Action Pictures, Inc., new independent company, has sold its first production, "The Sky Spider" to the Warner in Worcester, Mass., and to 20 Warner theatres in the St. Louis territory. Action Pictures plans 24 features on the year's schedule.

The company has already turned out two others, "Chinatown After Dark," with Carmel Myers, Barbara Kent, Rex Lease and Edmund Breese and "Anybody's Blonde," with Dorothy Revier and Henry B. Walthall.

"Alone Worth Subscription"

MOTION PICTURE HERALD
The Junior Show

"The Junior Show" inaugurated by MOTION PICTURE HERALD and conducted by Rita C. McGoldrick is of special interest and value to the industry. My own reaction toward this new feature is that it is alone worth the subscription price because it points out to theatre owners the manner in which livewire showmen are able to add to their gross receipts every week through the development of juvenile patronage.

Columbia has long been aware of the box office value of children's shows, not merely from the standpoint of the immediate returns from these morning performances, but also because of the amount of good will created by them.

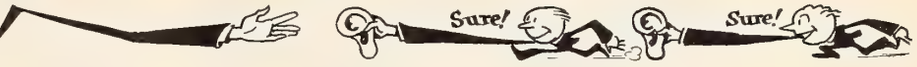
MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB



CHARLES E. "CHICK" LEWIS
Chairman and Editor

An International Association of Showmen Meeting in MOTION PICTURE HERALD
Every Week—for Mutual Benefit and Progress

CONDUCTED BY AN EXHIBITOR FOR EXHIBITORS

Lend Me Your Ears!

LOOKING through some three dozen out-of-town newspapers reveals the interesting fact that the legitimate stage advertising far overshadows that of the picture houses. . . . And it's only a few years ago that that situation was just the reverse. . . . Now we're wondering who's right. . . . The movie houses with their curtailed advertising budgets . . . or . . . the legitimate with their advertising splurge. . . . Guess the legit wins this guessing contest. . . . !

The depths into which "double featuring" has sunk the industry is best described by mentioning a twin bill currently advertised . . . "Spirit of Notre Dame" top feature with "Street Scene" advertised as the second feature. . . . Ain't that a credit to modern showmanship . . .? and circuits . . .?

Innocently . . .we admit . . . we started quite a discussion and heated controversy over posters and billposting. . . . But just the same we're glad that we did because it has called attention to a portion of your theatre's advertising which should certainly not be overlooked. . . .

Only those who have operated theatres, especially outside of the larger cities, can begin to appreciate the immense value of billposter advertising. . . . How it can reach into the center of many little hamlets and communities where folks are inclined to gather or pass and there sell the theatres attractions with as much force and showmanship as the man who makes them up can inject into his layouts. . . .

But there are some showmen of today,—may we call them by-products of the "new school" of showmanship?—who have been convinced by instructors who don't know what they are talking about . . . that all you need do is put an ad in the paper . . . or a banner over the doors of the theatre, and then you can sit back and watch the customers flock to the house. . . .

Fortunately, these "new school" showmen are rapidly finding out that their road has been paved with "baloney" and they must learn facts instead of fancies. . . . And in this process of education . . . they are finding out that outdoor advertising has its place in the general scheme of things. . . . Which is as it should be. . . .

Just a matter of simple arithmetic to prove that some circuits may be good at two of the "R's" but kinda off on the third. . . .

The town has six houses under one banner . . . one, the "ace" picture house, turned in close to three grand net . . . another losing a couple of hundred. . . . They switch the latter house into a vaude-picture combination and it starts to turn in about a grand a week profit . . . but the "ace" house is hurt to the tune of it's former profit. . . . Yet, the circuit seems to be quite satisfied with present operation in the town . . . but they're way off on the wrong side of the profit sheet as against former policies. . . . What are they waiting for . . .?

Other showmen could well profit by the example set by George Laby up in Boston, who created and built up a Service Club involving all the employees of his theatre. . . . Not only will they work harder for you, but ofttimes they actually help put over an attraction in more ways than one. . . . And that little magazine they publish about the Service Club is a pip, too. . . . Are you interested enough to get some "dope?" . . . Just drop a line to George, care of the Washington Street Olympia Theatre in Boston. . . . We're quite sure he'll accommodate. . . .

The controversy which has been raging between Harry Arthur's DEcentrilization, as against Harold B. Franklin's CENtrilization, sets a new standard for industry arguments. . . . H. A. believes his scheme is best for several reasons . . . while H. B. thinks his is the correct way . . . also for quite a few good reasons. . . .

We haven't had much of a chance to observe the H. A. system as it applies to the theatres outside of New York, but we did note carefully the Franklin methods while touring the West Coast last summer and we know that his houses were run as good or better than any outfit we ever visited anywhere. . . .

But disregarding the methods employed . . . the facts speak for themselves . . . give the house manager the authority he requires . . . leave him as much unhampered as is possible . . . eliminate the home office red tape and interference . . . and you give the theatre every chance to be profitably and well run. . . . On the other hand . . . surround the house manager with a dozen or more supervisors and bosses . . . tie him hand and foot with home office detail . . . reports . . . approvals for every little thing he may want to do . . . bother him in numerous other ways . . . and the theatre loses its "punch" . . . its individuality . . . yes . . . even its personality. . . .

Whichever plan arrives at the happiest medium is the one we vote for . . . and so will several thousand circuit managers.

Oh well; what with getting out fourteen pages a week, answering some five hundred letters, meeting out-of-town visiting showmen, running several neighborhood theatres, and now, trying to catch four to six pictures a week for the reviewing section, I've got nothin' to do; so I guess I'll try to get an odd job or two on the side . . . time hangs heavy on my hands between the hours of midnight and six A.M. . . . !

Keeping Up With The Times!

A HALLOWE'EN NIGHTMARE—OR THE TRUTH?

One of the Club's new members, Arthur Reuter, manager of the Regent Theatre in Norwalk, Conn., used a little gag on "Young As You Feel" which yielded a three-column break on the front page of the local newspaper.

The head read, "Norwalk's Own 'Will Rogers' Young At 62" and we think you will at once get the idea behind the gag. What he did was to hunt up an elderly resident of the town, with enough personality to make a story, and the paper grabbed the yarn, thereby earning the theatre and picture some corking publicity. Two photos accompanied the front page story, one of Rogers and one of the local man.

Lots of towns have "Will Rogers" types, maybe some local sage or ex-congressman, etc., and if you can put your assignment over as well as Reuter some good publicity is due at no expense to theatre. Nice work Art, and let's have some more examples of your fast thinking on other pictures.

Carl Beals A Big Pop Corn Man In Pittsfield, Maine

To those Club members who carry a side line at their theatres such as popcorn, or perhaps contemplate putting in a vending machine of some sort, we suggest that it might prove profitable to take a leaf from the book of Carl Beals, manager of the Bijou Theatre in Pittsfield, Me.

He recently deviated from the policy of including just popcorn in the boxes by adding a pass to the show in certain packages. At the start eight passes were packed each night and this has since been reduced to three lucky boxes, the stunt making a decided increase in sales.

As a matter of fact popcorn plays an important part in theatre revenue, boys peddling it on the streets on occasion of any local event and at football games, basket ball and other local shows. Beals thinks that anyone selling popcorn and not taking advantage of all these angles is losing many opportunities to make considerable extra cash, permission to sell at these functions being easy to obtain. Carl is one of the Club's new members and we will hope to tell you more about his activities from time to time.

C. Cassin Secured Local Names When Issuing 'Subpoena'

The familiar regulation "subpoena" was used to good results in exploiting "Star Witness" by C. J. Cassin, manager of the Warner-Grand Theatre in Lancaster, Pa.

It was headed "The People of the City of Lancaster and commanded John and Jane Doe to lay aside all and singular business and excuses so as to appear before the 'Star Witnes' at the Grand Theatre (address) on any day or evening beginning (playdate) to see and hear evidence of thrilling import, then and there to be shown between 12 Noon and 11:30 P. M. daily, and for failure to attend, you will be deemed guilty of a serious error of judgment and liable to reproach by any or all of your friends who have seen 'Star Witness.'" It was witnessed by one of the Superior Court justices in Lancaster and duly signed by the City Clerk.

This is a little different slant on the ordinary run of "summons" or "subpoenas" in that Cassin tied up directly with city officials for what appeared to be the real thing. Certainly the names of well known citizens gave the circular a lot more local appeal. Of course, you've got to know your justice to get away with this and so we conclude that C. J. has the proper stand-in.

Laby Service Club Is A Big Asset To Theatre Box Office

The photograph of the four imitation Marx Brothers illustrates a recent stunt pulled by members of the Service Club organized by G. Laby, manager of the Washington Street Olympia Theatre, Boston, Mass.

This Club is made up of ushers and doormen employed by the theatre and this particular ballyhoo is one of many that the boys have put over in their efforts to help their boss publicize current and coming attractions. As you will note from the photo, barrels were suspended from shoulder straps and the reverse side of the barrels carried copy relating to names of the Brothers and other information on the picture. The boys traveled the main streets of the neighborhood and materially aided to bring on record attendance done with this picture.

Another portion of the campaign made on "Monkey Business" was a free show for "Liberty" boy carriers, who in turn gave a parade from their headquarters to the theatre in bannered busses with plenty of horn-tooting. Pictures of the parade broke in two Boston newspapers.

Additional effort included a tie-up with a taxi concern for placement of dashers reading, "Monkey Business?" on front and rear bumpers of taxis and cars belonging to employees and their friends; and the use of cutout monkeys on the steel work of the new Paramount Theatre site, the monkeys having the heads of the Marx brothers; a distorted mirror stunt; and organ grinder stunt, and 10 window displays with novelty and nut stores.

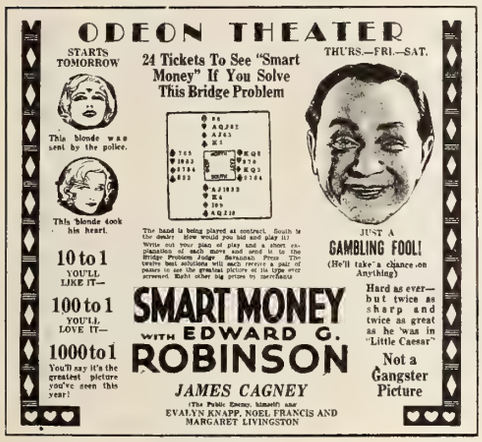
From what we can learn Laby has organized this Service Club of his into a most efficient corps of ballyhooers. The boys get a kick out of the work and don't mind a bit pitching in to help the boss put his pictures over. We mention this with the thought in mind that other members of this organization may wish to submit the same idea to members of their own service staffs. It looks like a darn good way to keep down advertising costs and there are many ways of rewarding the boys for their extra services.

Notice to Members:

PLEASE be sure to notify the Chairman of any change of address.
—THANK YOU.

Minister Preached A Sermon As Result Of Fred Meyer Show

Not long ago we told you that Fred S. Meyer, managing director of the Alhambra Theatre, Milwaukee, Wis., obtained excellent results publicizing "Mystery of Life" by sending specially prepared mailing cards to the clergy, doctors, lawyers and other professional men in his city.



As a direct reaction to the witnessing of this picture by one of Milwaukee's ministers of the Gospel, a placard appeared on the church bulletin board bearing the statement that Dr. So and So would preach that day on the Mystery of Life.

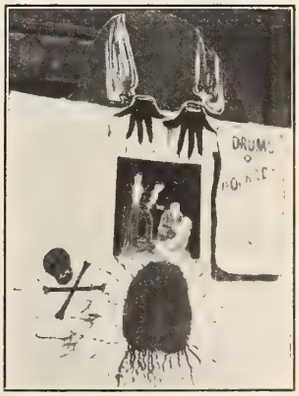
While it would be rather extravagant to state that other preachers will react as described above it may be well to point out that whatever the results were it came about from Fred Meyer's effort to reach a certain class of men for whom the picture held scientific appeal. That was what we wanted to stress in the previous article and here is further proof that exploitation along these lines, such as special previews and letters, bring the desired results.

Bridge Whist Gag Used By Thomas To Feature Co-Op Ad

Among recent activities of E. W. Thomas, manager of the Odeon and Arcadia Theatres, Savannah, Ga., was the promotion of an excellent co-op. page with local merchants for exploitation of "Smart Money." He used a different slant than most of the "Smart Money" ads we've had occasion to look at and we are therefore reproducing that portion of the page dealing with his selling angle.

The accompanying cut represents the top center portion of the page and presents a bridge whist problem, for which guest tickets are offered those who send the correct solution into the newspaper. Other tickets are offered for locating misspelled words in the various ads. The bridge problem ties up nicely with the gambling angle to the picture and gives the reader something more difficult to solve than the comparatively easy location of misspelled words.

Two other stunts employed on the above picture captured much attention from the passing public and greatly aided returns at the box office. One was the placing of a huge dice in the lobby of a vacant building across the street. It measured about four feet square and was suspended on a swivel, the breezes keeping it in motion because of its light weight. A bell was rung at intervals, wires being connected to the theatre box office, and suitable copy tied the display in with "Smart Money." Two other smaller dice were suspended from swivels attached to theatre marquee.



In the lobby of the theatre a mechanical display, giving effect of money pouring into a bag on a gaming table containing decks of cards, further lent appropriate atmosphere for the picture. This effect was obtained by sewing actual money on a canvas belt. As to detail, we'll have to ask E. W. to furnish further information to those interested in finding out just how this was accomplished.

When playing "Rango" he arranged to have an attention-arresting truck ballyhoo circulate through important sections of the city. The truck was bannered on both sides, as per photo, and a large cut-out replica of a tiger was mounted near the top of the signs. Jungle atmosphere was provided by placing a profusion of native tree growth around the cut-out.

It is too bad we cannot reproduce a photo he had taken of a lobby display used for "Outward Bound," but the subject is far too deep in shadows to show up clearly. As near as we can make out it presents figures of a man and woman in a boat, surrounded by a number of stars and comets. With aid of a small, concealed mirror a light is made to move slowly over the scene. Perhaps E. W. will explain in greater detail if interested Club members will drop him a line.

Some little time ago when playing "Drums of Jeopardy" he arranged a novel lobby display which could be used with this or adapted to some other picture. Directly in front and away from the box office he placed what represented a portion of the sidewall of a building, with an open window in the center. Above the window were fingers of two hands pointing downward, and a skull and crossbones further lent to the weird effect. Inside the window a group of small cut-out figures depicted an exciting scene from the picture.

Thomas is with the Theatre Operating Company of Savannah, operating four houses in that city, and while the above represents his first contributions to this department, we predict that his work will furnish many valuable suggestions for use or adaptation to other Club members' needs. We are obliged to him for passing along these show tips and hope that he will continue to be an active member of this organization.

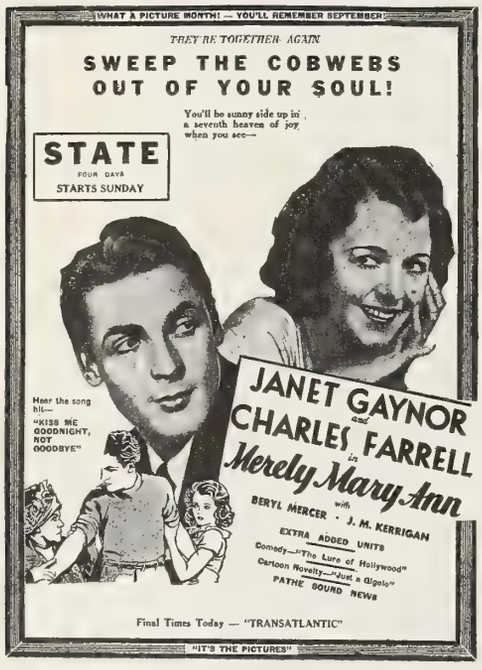
FASHION SHOW MANUAL!



In response to dozens of late requests, we have made up another batch of copies of "How to Stage a Fashion Show." Better send your request in early if you want one of them. The original supply lasted just eight days, and by the time the HERALD reached the coast and other distant points, those wanting a copy had to wait until we could turn them out.

Other manuals for special events are now in preparation and will be announced from time to time. But remember, unless you ask for them promptly, we cannot promise to fulfill your request.

Bair Still Turning Out Attractive Ads In Liverpool, Ohio

We continue to present samples of newspaper ads turned out by E. E. Bair, manager of the State Theatre, East Liverpool, Ohio, because we've had many complimentary expressions from other members upon the attractiveness of his layouts and copy on many other attractions.

The one reproduced here on "Merely Mary Ann" appears to be no exception to his regular run of ads. Note at the top that he's still plugging the idea of "What a Picture Month" and that "You'll Remember September." Then, the excellent copy calling attention to the fact that Gaynor and Farrell are again teamed in this picture. The lines that follow "Sweep the Cobwebs Out of Your Soul" are: "You'll be sunny side up in a seventh heaven of joy when you see"—

You will not be able to see some six point copy between the mats of Gaynor and Farrell but we note that he's using that little gag ad-addressed to some Mr. and Mrs. in his city, stating that this ad will admit them free of charge to see the picture. A simple and effective means of stimulating reader interest in the ads, once the idea is sold. We also note that he retains his old familiar line at the bottom, "It's The Pictures."

You may look forward to seeing other examples of Bair's showmanlike work for the reason that he's an active member of this organization and regularly sees to it that headquarters receives some samples of what he's doing to sell shows at the State. What else are you doing E. E., in addition to turning out attractive ads? Have you put over any special stunts since the new season started?

Rosenthal Defeated In Politics But He Wins With Pictures

Having failed in his attempt to convince citizens of his town that a Superintendent of Docks and Piers could be elected to office in an inland city and with the stigma of defeat resting lightly on his conscience, Morris Rosenthal formerly manager of the Capitol Theatre, Wilkes-Barre, Pa., and now in Holyoke, Mass., closed the account on a successful "Politics campaign" and turned his attention to the pressing matter of how many shekels could be garnered on behalf of "Smiling Lieutenant." That this Round Tabler never does business in a half-hearted way you'll agree after looking over the following campaign.

He ran end trailers two weeks in advance, each subject reading "The End. Coming Maurice Chevalier in the 'Smiling Lieutenant.'" Then he and Assistant Manager Bannon got up a chain letter based on the chain letters so extensively circulated a few years ago and sent nine letters to each person with instructions that they forward them to nine friends upon penalty of breaking the chain. All members of the house staff helped this gag along by addressing letters to a number of their friends.

A whole batch of tear sheets testify to publicity obtained from tying up with a local newspaper for the running of a "Smile Contest," a roving camera man taking three pictures of local citizens each day for publication the following day. The persons whose pictures appeared were entitled to call at the box office the following day and receive a pair of guest tickets. This contest netted 75 inches of free space.

Tying in with the fact that the "Post" story on Chevalier appeared the same week, a window card with copy on story and picture was placed in each newspaper store throughout entire territory. It was also permitted to place a poster on picture in each copy of the "Post."

Other activities included the distribution of 4,000 heralds by "Liberty" boys along their routes; the posting of 75 three-sheets, 400 one sheets and 100 window cards; placing by ushers of 50 stills on frames in choice locations; tie-up with Neon Sign for street ad of animated Chevalier sign on all company cars; dashboards of all street cars secured by Fred Hermann; mammoth billboard display of stills, cutouts, etc., in public square; radio broadcast; Chase & Sanborn Coffee Co. persuaded to take paid ad and tie with Paramount ad on strength of radio contract; set-in of theatre signature in big Paramount newspaper ad; midnight preview; trailers in all downtown houses, and tie-up with all music stores on Chevalier songs.

Well, we don't think we've left much out unless it be the fact that the Lions Club gave notice to all members in a weekly bulletin that Morris would be glad to see them at his theatre upon payment of a "small fee," which, we must admit, is an unusual concession for a fraternal organization to make. And lest we forget, he also edits movie pages for two newspapers and somehow or other forgot to delete mention of "Smiling Lieutenant" in several stories.

Before we offer condolence for his recent disastrous but highly profitable defeat for office in the effective campaign made on "Politics," we might also mention that he ran a most successful contest with a newspaper for best reviews on "American Tragedy" that reaped a lot of free publicity. Reviewers were chosen through application by mail, to newspaper office and first, second and third cash prizes were offered to the winners. Guest tickets were given to the next 15 in line.

Since engaging in all the activities described above, Morris Rosenthal has been transferred to the Victory Theatre in Holyoke, Mass., which is quite a change of territory for this hustling showman. The folks down in Wilkes-Barre will miss him.

EFFICIENT MANAGEMENT AND HOW!

The following ad appeared on a co-op page recently engineered by Jim Dempsey, manager of the Strand Theatre, Lowell, Mass., in connection with the inauguration of the new season:

A Street Ballyhoo Was Effective Aid For Norman Davis

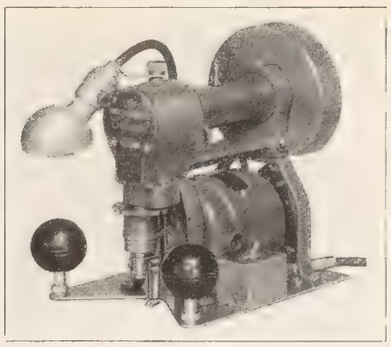
A street ballyhoo with a quaint looking outfit was the means of arousing a lot of local interest in "Huckleberry Finn" when this picture was played by Norman Davis, manager of the Marvel Theatre, Carlinville, Ill.

For one day prior and two days during engagement of picture he had the outfit you see in the photo out on the streets. It consisted of a two-wheeled cart, drawn by a mule and driven by a boy dressed to represent "Huck" Finn. The other occupant represented Tom Sawyer. The cart was parked in front of the public school just before dismissal in order to give all the kids a look and as a result a large crowd attended a matinee held fifteen minutes after closing of the school. During the time this stunt was in effect the cart covered the entire town, always arriving in front of the theatre about fifteen minutes before the show started. It not only attracted the kids but pleased the adults as well.

Norman tells us his camera was too small at close range to take in all of the outfit so we are presenting one of the snaps showing the boys and the rear portion of the cart. This Round Tabler is one of our new members and this is his first contribution. We shall hope to receive many other show tips from his town and in the meantime wish him much success in his chosen field.

Pajama Tie-Up Was Great Help Putting Over Laurel-Hardy

Information gathered concerning several recent campaigns waged by S. A. Gilman, manager of Loew's Parkway Theatre, Baltimore, Md., conclusively testify to the fact that this Club member has been very much on the job of selling shows down in his territory. Stunts on recently played pictures follow:



A highlight of his work on "Pardon Us" was based upon a discovery he made that the local manufacturers of a well known brand of pajamas had a tie-up with Laurel & Hardy in the form of a neat little pamphlet containing photographs of the two stars set up in film frame form. The copy was built around a little sketch entitled "Pajama Pleasure." He contacted this concern for window displays, a contest and distribution of 10,000 pamphlets without any cost to theatre except a few photos for lobby and windows. Copy in windows announced that a suit of pajamas would be given for the best letter on why these two comedians were two of the funniest on the screen.

He had a man dressed in a French officer's uniform parade certain streets as a bally for "Smiling Lieutenant." Any one successful in making this fellow laugh was entitled to receive guest tickets for this picture. A nearby market was also tied in for this stunt and the management erected a platform for the "Lieuetnant's" exhibition of a smileless countenance. This stunt did not cost the theatre anything except expense attached to painting the banner and signs, because they just couldn't make the fellow smile.

Two other stunts being pulled at the Parkway do not tie up with any particular picture, but are certainly worthwhile recording. One is a rainy night service whereby the porter carries a big 38-inch umbrella to the curb to escort patrons to shelter of the marquee. This umbrella will cover about three to four people at one time and the idea is particularly applicable where theatre marquees do not extend entire distance to the curb. As a further service to patrons Gilman has made arrangements with a market for parking space which will accommodate about 100 cars free of charge. The local automobile club furnishes an attendant without cost, he working on prospective tips. The market has placed a sign on the space stating that it is for Parkway patrons after 6 P. M.

This Round Tabler paused long enough one day to have a snapshot taken, and if you glance at the little photo you'll get a fair idea of what your fellow Club member looks like.

FIRST AID TO CLEVER EXPLOITATION

The Cutawl

Originality means everything! The roving eye is attracted by the unusual . . . that's why poster cutouts, life-like and adaptable to all sorts of striking stunt display, are so popular with leading theatre publicity men. They bring money to the box office. BUT, many clever "idea men" are being denied this splendid form of exploitation because of the trouble and prohibitive cost of producing their displays. The Cutawl will change this. With this moderate-priced wonder-working machine, you can successfully produce your own ideas — easily, rapidly, inexpensively . . . and most profitably. The Cutawl is portable; weighs only 13 pounds, and is as easy to run as a sewing machine.

STAGE WEDDINGS!

Here is a stunt that rarely misses fire at the box office, providing it is handled in the proper way and surrounded with all the dignity and showmanship essential to successfully putting it over.

Of course, a prospective bride and groom are among the first promotionc to make. But there are numerous and sundry ways of digging them up. Direct or through your local newspaper. Once you get them lined up the rest is just a matter of getting the most out of it.

In next week's issue of the Club pages we will feature a special article dealing with the staging and campaign for a stage wedding. We will try to set forth, briefly, how to go about promoting the entire affair. Naturally, your best tie-up bets are the merchants who will donate the presents and participate in the cooperative advertising in conjunction with such an event.

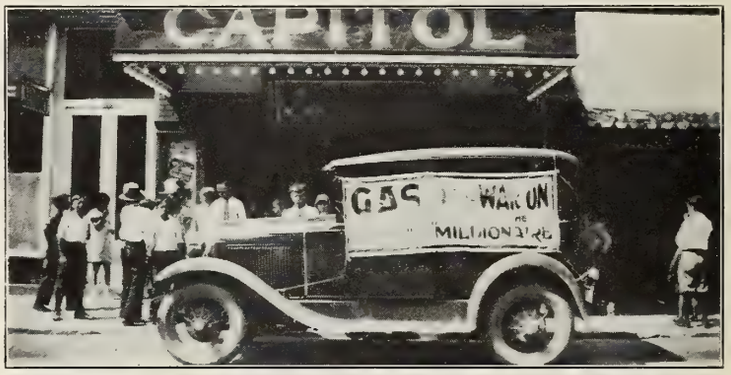
So, until next week, we will allow your imagination to run rampant with the possibilities of this stunt for your theatre. Are you interested?

Don't Neglect Your Kiddie Clubs' New Season, Says Lamm

Get them and hold them is the motto in force as to kiddie clubs when applied to activities made in this direction by Julius Lamm, manager of the Variety Theatre, Cleveland, Ohio, and if you will glance at the small photo on this page you'll get an idea of the size of the gang that turned out to attend the first meeting of the new season, and the picture only shows a few.

With a temperature of over 90 degrees in the shade more than 600 kids gathered in the theatre block to await the opening of the first Saturday afternoon matinee so that they might enroll for the coming year. Distribution of 3,000 heralds in the public schools brought about the desired results.

Just to prove that Lamm watches other happenings in the business world besides those of show business, we'll tell you about a deal he put over with a well known refrigerator company. To commemorate the 15th Anniversary of Frigidaire he promoted through a local dealer the give-away of a $222 refrigerator and 15 cash certificates each good for applying $25 to the purchase of any other model sold by that dealer. A drawing was held at the theatre on a Friday night and a capacity crowd attended the show. A lobby exhibit, such as you see in the accompanying photo, was the only compensation given the dealer in return for the merchandise.



That "get 'em and hold 'em" advice about kiddie clubs sounds good to us, Julius, for there's many a good club gone on the rocks through no other reason than sheer neglect. And why let a good organization of show boosters lose interest when all that is necessary to hold them is consistent plugging of a new club season. Others will also agree that it pays to keep an eye on what other business men are doing to advertise product, particularly when it pans out like Lamm's refrigerator stunt. Keep it up, Julius, and continue to let the rest of us know what you are doing.

Stevens Aroused A Lot Of Interest By Use of Trick Copy

A trick banner on a truck circulated through the city gained a lot of publicity for "The Millionaire" when this picture was played by Ray Stevens, manager of the Capitol Theatre, Wallaceburg, Ontario, Canada.

As you will note from the photo of the truck the banner read, "Gas 9 cents Gal. . . . War On . . . See The Millionaire." The theme of the picture was explained to a number of gas station men and they in turn had to do a lot of explaining to acquaint the public with the true state of affairs as to the local price of gasoline. It naturally followed that many autoists and others became acquainted with the fact that George Arliss was playing the Capitol, and in a different role than usual. This was the slant that Stevens wished to get over, aiming at a class under the impression that all Arliss vehicles are highbrow fare. Another point is that the stunt was timed to hit the Saturday crowd, Saturday nighters not generally falling into the Arliss classification of picture-goers. It is assumed that a few passes took care of the filling station proprietors.

It will readily be seen that a stunt of this kind was one to arouse a lot of conversation, taking into consideration the fact that the price of gasoline is always an interesting subject of discussion. One driver passed the word on to another, and so it went until everyone became acquainted with the correct answer to the yarn.

Stevens is a newcomer to this Club, having only recently been placed in charge of the Capitol. Prior to this assignment he gained experience in a number of Jack Allan's houses. He graduated from the musical end of show-business and we can tell from the tone of his letter that this new member is on his toes in an effort to keep his house where all good houses should be. We'll expect to hear from you again, Ray, and in the meantime accept the Club felicitations on behalf of that new boy baby.

A SHOWMAN-LIKE LETTER!

The following letter found its way into Club headquarters. Some statistics on certain attractions are mentioned to prove that seats can be filled if the proper build-up is made, even though people are said to be holding back on money-spending. The letter follows:

SHOWMANSHIP!

"The other night I went to a fight in Los Angeles. A has-been and a never-was were battling. For days, the newspapers . . . the radio . . . the billboards . . . had been building this battle. It was to be one of the great fights of the year . . . 'bad blood between 'em' . . . and all that hooey..

"Standing room was selling for two bucks—and you couldn't buy it without paying a premium. What a house! The Olympic Auditorium seats about 13,000 and there were close to 17,000 paid admissions when the box was counted. The average fight capacity is around $9,000—this one grossed better than $40,000.

"And this . . . in spite of the yell about 'depression' and 'hard times' . . . 'the people haven't the money to spend.' Applesauce! It was a swell piece of showmanship . . . the promoters had built that fight up to where the fans believed they were going to see something . . . and they were ready to pay their good dough.

"There is a theatre in this town where the gross fluctuates from $15,000 to $35,000. Think of that . . . a drop of $20,000 from one week to the next. Does that mean people haven't got the money to spend . . . or does it mean that theatre-goers are buying what they want? The other night at the Coliseum . . . the Motion Picture Industry pageant part of the Fiesta packed 115,000 people into the stands for a total gate of better than $300,000. Again . . . that's showmanship!

"How much you get at the box-office . . . is up to YOU!"

A tie-up which yielded excellent returns on "Street Scene" was arranged with one of the local newspapers by Thomas Cleary, manager of the Princess Theatre, Montreal, Canada, with the assistance of C. E. Duffey.

Each day the newspaper photographer took a "street scene," as per photo on this page, and it appeared in the issue the following day. Note that certain heads are circled and upon identification these persons were given passes to the show. The newspaper gave front-page space to photographs and captions and the scheme resulted in much valuable publicity for the picture.

We are also reproducing a photo of the theatre front as dressed for the occasion of the above picture. The lettering is all raised and finished off with silver tinsel and if you will look below the title words you will see a city skyline at night. Flashing lights behind the cut-out buildings give it a very realistic effect, especially at night-time.

When playing "Travelling Husbands" these two showmen made a corking window tie-up with a florist, and while we have a photograph at hand and can fully appreciate what a fine window it is, the amount of detail would only amount to a blur if reduced to practical proportions for this page. In the center of the window was placed what represented a half of the globe, cut-out characters emerging in different parts. In front was a small platform on which were reproductions of travellers standing by an Information Desk, and at the top of the display cut-out letters read, "Mr. Travelling Husband, Don't Forget the Wife Back Home." Other copy called attention to sending flowers anywhere in the world, but picture copy dominated the entire window. Another tie-up was made with a steamship line whereby a large model of the S. S. Bremen was placed in the theatre lobby.

Cleary and Duffey are always doing something of interest to other members of this Club and they are putting the Princess over in great style. The "Street Scene" stunt was a fine bid for publicity, likewise the dressing of the front and the window display made with the florist. We are always glad to hear from these two able showmen and hope they will continue to be active members of this organization.

The photography gag appears quite popular these days and is giving excellent results when not overworked.

W. R. PAARA SAYS:

"Have been using the club pages to great advantage, and have been getting good results considering conditions. I certainly get plenty of help from these pages and would never be without them."

Manager, Paramount Theatre, Cushing, Oklahoma.

FOOTBALL NIGHT!

We want to call your particular attention to the "Football Nite" idea which clicked so marvelously last fall in many spots throughout the country.

The gag is to invite the local high school football team as the theatre's guests on a designated night. Surround the stunt with plenty of publicity, dress your ushers in football togs, decorate the front and lobby appropriately and get as many civic leaders as possible to cooperate.

If feasible, have the team brought to the theatre via a parade in which they ride in autos furnished by the local Packard or Cadillac distributors. The school band can also be worked into the idea both for their value in the parade as well as to play some selections and school songs in the theatre.

This idea is as broad as your ability to capitalize on it. A hundred side angles will surely present themselves as you go along working out the campaign, but it will all be brought to a climax with smashing b.o. returns and everybody rooting for the team.

Members taking advantage of this suggestion and putting over some sort of Football Nite in their theatres will confer a favor by sending us all the details, photos, etc., so that others may benefit by their experience.

Fred Thomas Busy With Many Stunts In Winchester, Va.

While it's been some little time since the Club has had an opportunity to get a line on the activities of Fred J. Thomas, manager of the Capitol Theatre in Winchester, Va., we have been fortunate in the gathering of data concerning exploitation of several pictures recently put over at his house. The Capitol comes under the supervision of Walter Morris, whom you all will recall as one of our most active members when he was in charge of the Metropolitan Theatre in Baltimore.

On the occasion of "The Smiling Lieutenant," Thomas cashed in by making a deal with the local distributor of "Liberty Magazine" for the placement of 200 copies of a September issue containing a story on Chevalier in the offices of doctors and dentists, hotels, barber shops and restaurants, two days prior to opening. Each copy was stamped with a notice tying in the story with play dates of the picture.

A drugstore was tied-up for an exposition stunt on "Young As You Feel" by use of an effective little novelty turned out by a New York firm (name upon request). The cost of the novelty and imprinting was paid by the local druggist who arranged a very attractive window on account of the very appropriate picture title tying in so well with his line of merchandise.

A trailer made by a well known company was effectively used to advertise "Murder By the Clock," the house being darkened at time of screening and color effect of green played on trailer during its entirety. The publishers of the book will also supply a nice display of book covers and material on this picture to be used as tie-ups with book stores.

He made a tie-up with a druggist for the distribution of 1,000 samples of tooth paste two days prior to the showing of "Transatlantic," stickers reading "All Transatlantic Passengers Prefer Blank Toothpaste, sample through courtesy of the So and So Drug Co." Theatre patrons receiving these samples asked for information concerning the picture and thus another message was put into circulation.

Thomas is also having pronounced success with his Gift Contests at very slight cost to the theatre. These run for about two weeks, different merchants contributing such awards as electric refrigerators; an expensive watch; 100 gallons of gasoline, 5 gallons of oil and a tire. Screen mention is given the merchant in trailer used for advertising the contest and this is the only expense attached to the theatre end of the deal. The "Nites" are generally held on occasion of the showing of a weak attraction.

His plans for "Alexander Hamilton" include arrangement for the local school board to attend a special showing; gifts of attractive school book covers for pupils, back of which is to be devoted to monthly theatre programs, and also space for a merchant's ad to take care of cost.

Along with the fact that Thomas seems to have accomplished a whole lot at practically no cost to theatre, it also appears that many of his suggestions can be applied to exploitation of other pictures. We're mighty glad to hear from Fred again and it is quite evident that this Round Tabler is on the job. Next time we get a line on his work we'll tell you more.

ASSISTANTS ARE ELIGIBLE FOR MEMBERSHIP IN THIS CLUB!

With the approval of the house manager, assistant managers are eligible for membership.

We started taking assistants into the Club about a year ago, and subsequent surveys have proven that it provides the necessary "push" to make them real showmen. It increases their interest in the business and makes them try all the harder to gain promotion. Club records show that over three hundred assistant managers were promoted to handle their own houses.

Only accredited assistants are accepted. Those not entitled to this rating should not apply as their managers will be asked to certify to the position they now hold.

The Round Table Club will welcome members in this class and we urge every bonafide assistant manager to send in the application now.

A Few More Of Ed Hart's Well-Worked Out Film Campaigns

The last time we reported activities of Ed Hart, manager of the Warner-Stanley Theatre, Utica, N. Y., we did it via the medium of photographs and captions; this time, however, we'll go into a little more detail concerning a few of his recent campaigns and at the same time show a few photos of recently pulled stunts which greatly aided in the selling of the several attractions.

The classified page ad reproduced here appeared in a leading city newspaper and was the only display advertising permitted in the section. In case you cannot read the copy let us state that free guest tickets were offered to every person placing a transient classified ad in Sunday's or Monday's paper, either by telephone or over counter. It helped send this picture's gross over in a big way and the ad was promoted at no cost to theatre.

Additional effort on "Common Law" included distribution of 1,000 samples of face powder on card carrying picture announcement; special window from drug store supplying powder; projected slides on white sheet on building facing Utica's "busy corner" announcing picture; distribution of 5,000 heralds in Sunday papers; guest tickets issued to first 10 guessing correct title of song numbers broadcasted over radio, etc.

The photo of the airplane parked in front of the theatre was taken at the time it was "tagged" by one of the local police. Hart obtained this partially wrecked machine from a nearby port and managed to get himself haled to traffic court for placing it in a restricted zone. Due to the city having no ordinance covering parking of airplanes, he was excused after making explanations. The stunt was good for a photo and story in a daily paper. Red lanterns were obtained from city to keep 'plane over night. Other activities included the running of a model airplane contest for school children, with resultant newspaper publicity, and extensive distribution of regular run of advertising.

Quite a large parade featured the campaign he made on "Bought," consisting of 50 "Liberty" boys dressed as clowns and carrying signs and led by a travelling "Orphans Band" from the South. In the lead were four boys with a huge banner lettered with name of theatre and playdates, and followed by boys carrying cut-out letters reading "Constance Bennett." Then, one boy with the word "In," followed by others with large individual letters spelling the title of picture. The marching boys were followed by a float on truck with motorized revolving head of the star. In addition to the band, a bugler brought up the rear of the parade. That morning's paper carried a full announcement of the event and gave notice that the band would render a concert in front of the theatre after march.

Other effort included invitations issued to guest flyers of the American Legion Air Meet at a local airport and the introduction of a parachute jumper from stage; the insertion of a full-column ad running in opposite direction to general printing, making it necessary to turn paper in order to read, and extensive use of other effective advertising and window tie-ups. The accompanying photo shows a portion of the parade and the truck with revolving head.

In addition to usual banners, cards, heralds, newspaper ads and windows, special screenings for city officials and members of the Rotary Club featured work done in connection with "Star Witness." Testimonials from both found space in the daily papers.

We'll certainly have to admit that Hart's campaigns are well worked out and that he always seems able to inject some novel slant into all of them. On the surface it might appear that there is considerable cash outlay, but as a matter of fact a large percentage of the publicity he receives for his theatre can be classed as either costless or negligible expense. It is also interesting to note that during the short time he has been in Utica he has succeeded in firmly intrenching himself with public officials and all newspapers. More power to you, Ed, and we will hope to present other examples

ROUND TABLE BIOGRAPHIES

Looking around for a part-time job at an early age, Robert D. McGrew began his theatre career by ushering in one of the Balaban & Katz houses in Chicago, Ill., and successive promotions led to posts with this company as secretary and assistant manager of the Tivoli and Chicago Theatres. This writing finds him at the helm of the Fox-Rosemary Theatre, Ocean Park, Calif., where he is making himself a well known factor in the business of selling shows.

Robert D. McGrew

McGrew was born in McKeesport, Pa., June 18, 1905, and received his education in local schools and in the University of Pittsburgh. He started in this business at the age of 18 years and during his eight years association has managed the Fox-San Carlos, Los Angeles, and the house in which he is now located. While in Chicago, in addition to holding down executive positions with B. & K. houses, he also did production work for L. R. Lipstone and H. Leopold Spitalny at the Chicago Theatre.

Asked if he would again choose show business for a business career, McGrew states that without doubt he'd follow the same course. He is married and the father of a young daughter.

THEATRE POSTER ART!

Drawn by Benton L. James

This week, poster artists, we give you a timely head for early use in your theatre: Eddie Cantor. You will find that it shows up great under the Balioptican enlarging machine and in about fifteen minutes you can have it traced and ready for colors.

Much favorable comment has started to roll into Club headquarters about this poster art work, many are from the theatre artists and even the house managers are passing favorable comment about them. We're glad of this reaction because we feel that many houses can well afford to improve their lobbies and fronts.

With these samples of Benton James' work appearing from week to week, we are ready to lay a wager that the Missouri Theatre front is something to crow about. We'll be hoping for some photos of that front soon. How about it, James?

Remember, you other poster artists, you can also contribute to this series. Don't let brother Benton do all the work. Miniatures or photos of the originals will be acceptable. If you care to submit color combinations too, all the better, if not, send along some samples of your work and we'll pass them along.

NEXT WEEK!

All the "dope" for any live-wire showman to put over a Stage Wedding. If you've staged one of these weddings before, you know what it means to the box office receipts. If you've never tried it, read the description of "how to do it" on next week's Club pages and cash in on a genuine "gold-mine."

Odlum Waged A Big Campaign To Good Results On Film

Window displays and many other local store tie-ups played an important part in a campaign recently waged on "Dirigible" by George B. Odlum, manager of the Capitol Theatre in Wheeling, West Va.

Advance exploitation consisted of radio announcements, large banner display on front of theatre, teaser billing and special trailer. Five drug stores also cooperated and served "Dirigible" sundaes at fountains. A five and ten gave its center window for an art display and handed out circulars to each customer entering store. To stimulate trade at the fountain prizes were offered clerks who sold the most special sundaes. Woolworth's and another store also donated windows and plugged the sale of the sundaes. 4,900 of the drinks were sold at one of the stores.

Other activities included the placing of tire covers on cars; model dirigibles in best downtown windows; an airplane throwaway of 10,000 tickets, with special tickets good for one admission; special lobby display from aircraft plant; fifty street car fronts, and the usual standard newspaper campaigns and incidental advertising.

Excellent results were obtained from the above campaign and we will hope to hear more about what Odlum is doing to build up trade at the Capitol, a house which he recently became connected with. The situation in his city calls for a lot of hard work but we feel sure that George is the man to put the Capitol up in the running. He sent along a few snaps of his front on the above mentioned picture but they're really too small to reproduce well. Next time maybe we can show what his theatre looks like, together with something in the nature of a novel stunt. Until then we'll sign off and await further news concerning this enterprising showman of the South.

Ewing Capitalized On Visit Paid Town By "Our Gang" Star

Some corking publicity was obtained by Jimmy Ewing, manager of the Colonial Theatre in Watertown, South Dakota, on the occasion of a visit paid that town by Jean Darling, diminutive screen star of "Our Gang" fame.

We have three tear sheets before us showing one full page and two half-page ads promoted on the strength of the little comedienne's engaging personality, all of them giving the theatre a fine break. Her photos appeared in all ads on the co-op page and the two special ads, the latter featuring handshakes by little Jean and the giveaway of Eskimo pies.

All of these ads were promoted by Ewing without the slightest expense to the theatre and we think you will all agree that his house received the benefit from a lot of newspaper and word-of-mouth publicity. Little Jean is making a tour of certain sections of the country and wherever she happens to pay a visit it would appear that an aggressive showman will have an opportunity to garner considerable free publicity. Ewing did and so can you if the occasion presents itself. In the meantime Club headquarters will look forward to hearing more about this member's activities.

Happiness Month Increasing Trade For H. L. Laurence

For a fall business tonic, H. L. Laurence, manager of the Capitol Theatre, Paris, Tenn., is using what he terms "Happiness Month," which embraces a period from September 7 to October 3 and consists of an inducement to attend a full month's showing of pictures.

On a card especially printed for the occasion, with numbers on margin for punching, it is stated that 17 features will be shown during Happiness Month and that by attending each and every one the holder of a card with all numbers cancelled will be entitled to receive a two months' pass. For 12 numbers cancelled, a month pass is offered; for 10, a pass for three weeks; for 8, a two weeks' pass, and for 6, a pass for one week.

A two months' pass may appear a generous gift to some, but there are so many things to prevent a person from attending 17 consecutive performances that to our way of thinking the loss would be slight. The very fact that such an alluring gift is offered makes the effort to attend as often as possible a worthwhile attempt, and, believe us, if any one can get a flock of people to seriously consider a proposition of this kind, he's got something started that will make the old cash register sing a merry melody. Laurence believes that existing conditions demand treatment over an extended period rather than a succession of expensive advertising stunts, hence his try-out of the above scheme. Perhaps he will send along some statistical data when it's all over.

LaVoy's Fake Head Lines On Newspaper Caused Excitement

Considerable excitement among pedestrians was caused by a little gag recently put over by Eugene La Voy, manager of the Orpheum Theatre, Grand Forks, N. D., when he made arrangements with several newsboys to carry out his scheme to publicize "Up for Murder." It went over in a big way.

As the reproduced snapshot shows, the boys were dressed with aprons made from ordinary sign cloth lettered with oil colors in black and red. The copy on the aprons read, "Lew Ayres Up For Murder —Now Playing At The Strand Theatre." The boys carried local newspapers and were stationed on opposite corners in the busiest parts of the city, yelling out "EXTRA, EXTRA!!" Top banners of the papers were covered with a hand-lettered strip in bright red which read, "Lew Ayres Up For Murder." The gag worked so efficiently that the boys had difficulty restraining patrons from tearing the papers from their hands.

For the same attraction he also used an especially made up herald with the head cut of Lew Ayres and "Wanted," with description and reward. These were distributed throughout the residential sections of the city, pinned on gates and light posts.

La Voy also has a neat little method of letting local kids know when Mickey Mouse is in town and we would show you a photo of it if the snap shot was sharp enough to show details. However, directly in the center of lobby entrance he places a large cutout of Mickey, with an appropriately lettered sign calling attention to the attraction.

The newsboy gag was a publicity-getter alright and it is assumed that La Voy arranged with his newspaper friends for the placing of the special banners over the regular heads. The mere fact that customers frantically sought to buy the papers testified to the way it went over. At this writing Eugene is at the Strand Theatre, same city, while the Orpheum is being overhauled. Just as soon as he returns to his regular job he will hope to present further evidence of his work. In the meantime, we will join in with the rest of the Club in wishing this Round Tabler unlimited success with his new assignment.

HOW ABOUT THAT CANNED FRUIT DRIVE?

Now is the time to get behind that "Can a Can of Fruit or Vegetables" drive in order to help provide food for the needy during the Winter months. Most of you are undoubtedly familiar with this stunt, which consists of holding a special morning matinee when sole admission is a can of fruit or vegetables.

Appeal to the housewives may be made through school superintendents, thereby reaching a large number of children, and by contacting the Parents-Teachers Associations and other local charity organizations. Helping the needy is a good deed at any time and particularly so this Winter. The stunt will cost a theatre but little and will earn a tremendous amount of good will.

Bill Boston Tells Us About Egyptian Out In Scottsbluff

Out in the town of Scottsbluff, Neb., three showmen by names of Bill Boston, "Brick" Boston and W. L. McReynolds are producing enviable results with the Egyptian Theatre. They run four changes a week and have a large territory up and down the entire North Platte to draw upon. All "Mack" says they have to do is to get out and dig—and how—and the box office tells the story.

We're not going into any details on any recent campaigns put on by this trio—this will come along in future issues—but we want other members to know that these three fellows joined the Round Table only a short time ago and that advance information indicates that we will receive many worthwhile contributions.

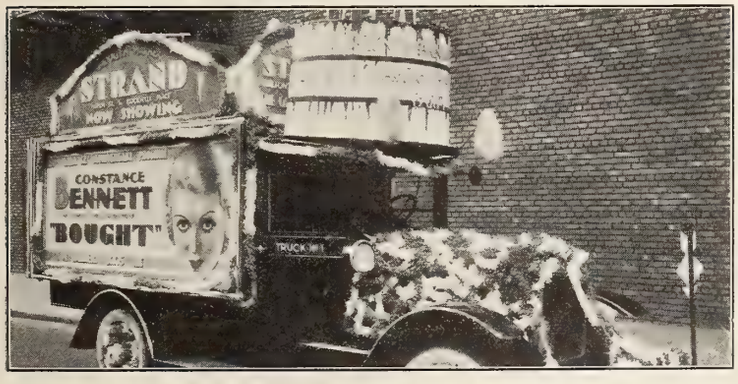
Their theatre is equipped with all conveniences of the most modern, featuring a men's smoker; smoking balcony; cry-room; nursery; mezzanine lounge; four bowling alleys, with men's and women's tournaments; billiard tables, and three domino tables. A big Marr & Colton organ is also featured and in the accompany reproduction of a poster you will see a caricature poster of "Mack," the exploitation organist. He also does all poster work and broadcasts twice daily.

"Bill" Boston is the manager and his brother "Brick" nurses the electric system and you can believe us when we tell you that this is an up and doing three-man team. We are also showing a small photo of the Egyptian's front and it's too bad that a number of other snapshots cannot be clearly reproduced. For instance, when the news season was inaugurated "We Have the Stars" was played up. Large star cut-outs were strung over windows, marquee and portions of the front of the building, making a most attractive display; and a window contest was put on with 20 merchants. In addition, a "Movie Star Dance" and a kid's matinee were featured during the week, flares and smudges adding to the occasion.

Boston is also doing considerable board advertising, having at present two lighted 28-sheet boards and by this time has undoubtedly completed his plans for construction of 30 smaller V-shaped boards on all roads into town. These will feature appointments of the theatre.

The next time we hear from these enterprising showmen we hope they will send along some good sharp photos so we can illustrate some examples of their work. In the meantime we shall wish them continued success with their efforts to make the Egyptian the outstanding house in Scottsbluff territory.

McLaughlin And Hal Salzman Put Over A Strand Anniversary

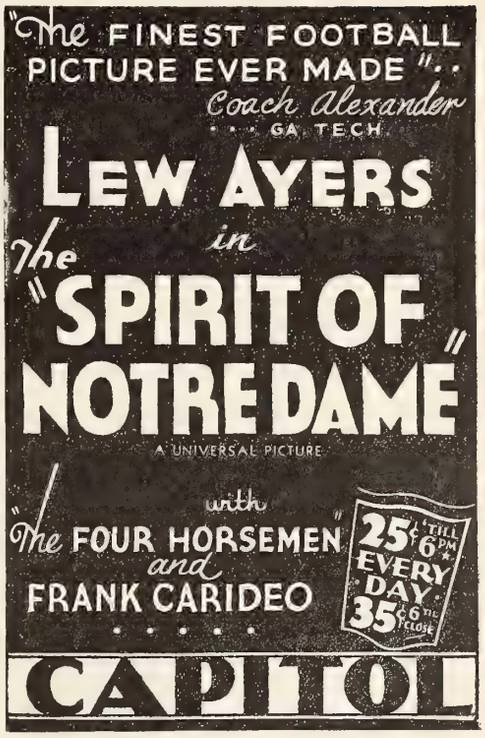


Twelfth Anniversary was put over in bang-up style at the Strand Theatre in Brooklyn, N. Y., when Manager W. J. McLaughlin and Publicity Manager Hal Salzman arranged a series of effective tie-ups and other stunts which circulated news of the event throughout the entire city for an entire week.

The tie-up made with the Ward Baking Company was a corker. The concern gave the theatre use of 200 trucks for the posting of one-sheets on each side and had the drivers distribute 3,000 window cards at no cost to theatre. The trucks practically cover every neighborhood in the city and the cards directed the reader to see "Bought" and Ward's Cake at the Strand.

Mention of the huge cake baked and donated by the baking company brings us to what was apparently the "costless" idea behind this part of the big campaign. This cake was placed in the theatre lobby and you will note by the photo that a group of notables were engaged in the Monday evening ceremony of attacking the huge piece of pastry. Borough President Henry Hesterberg and District Attorney William Geoghan can be seen wielding the slicers, while in the group are Judge Mitchell May, Harry Charnas, general manager of Warner-Metropolitan Theatres, Strand Manager, W. J. McLaughlin and others.

The other photo shows a special sound truck used for the anniversary celebration. Over the driver's cab you will see the birthday cake, especially made for the occasion, and we believe you will all agree that the general layout is most attractive. The truck circulated all over the city and much comment was occasioned by the fine quality of sound broadcast by its equipment.



Other efforts included the distribution of 15,000 guest packages of Life Savers (a plug for "Side Show"); a six-column display in a local newspaper, along with a story of anniversary and biographies of the Warner Brothers; special anniversary stories by all papers; entire re-decoration of theatre for the week, and special Brooklyn Night, featured by presence of notables, reporters and sound newsreel representative. Local merchants also donated a number of window displays.

All of which was certainly a lot of valuable publicity obtained at practically no cost to the theatre. McLaughlin and Salzman are to be congratulated for putting on such a big show and now that the latter is a member of this organization the Club will expect to hear a lot more about showmanship at this well-established Brooklyn institution.

The Real Club Spirit!
"All For One and One For All"

COACH ENDORSED THIS ONE!

If every other theatre in town doesn't imitate you, this reverse negative gag is always sure to attract attention. Especially when confined to straight type matter.

But that's not the reason why we reproduced this one on "The Spirit of Notre Dame." We were attracted to the endorsement of the Georgia Tech. Coach carried on the top. That's showmanship. Local appeal, public interest and a picture like this can only spell box office success.

Keep the coach-endorsement slant in mind when you start to work on your campaign. A preview will get the necessary endorsement if it will not be forthcoming on request. If you make it a preview, have all the football players, regulars and subs, of every team in the town on hand. That also goes for the grammar schools, high schools and colleges (if any).

Ideas to publicize a picture like "Notre Dame" are far from lacking. All that is needed is a showman with the ability to get behind it, and the battle is three-quarters won. After they see the picture they'll do the lion's share of follow-up advertising for you via word-of-mouth raves.

Credit Atlanta, Ga., with this smart looking tie-up and ad. If you can do as well, send it along and we'll give it special mention.

Johnnie Ely Gave His Town A Slant On East India Art

The Club hasn't heard from Johnny Ely, manager of the New Lillian Theatre, Clarksville, Tenn., since he reminded all the citizens of his town that a certain motion picture star was born in their midst and convinced a number of merchants that they could cash in on the occasion by tying this fact up with advertising. You will recall that this was a big success from a box office angle. However, he's been busy as usual and we'll tell you about a little stunt he pulled on "Son of India."

An old striped awning was transformed into a desert tent and flooded with red light for display in the lobby. In front of the tent a native "Hindu" man sat playing in the sand with one of Woolworth's toy snakes. This snake has a fine thread attached to it which when pulled makes the reptile appear alive. The Hindu also had a flute which he played in order to lend to the atmosphere. A Buddah, burning incense in one corner of the tent, further enhanced the Indian effect. During the morning hours, before the theatre opened, the Hindu would take his sign and walk into every store, stroll around and then walk out. He also parked himself on different street corners before returning to the theatre lobby.

A few other little gags used recently by Ely include a rope swing attached to top of the theatre, from which a man dressed to represent Fairbanks hung to advertise "Reaching for the Moon"; a health card for the same picture, bearing a splotch of red which, if remaining red after testing it with breath, indicated that the holder should see the picture instead of a doctor, and a novelty herald on "Born to Love." The latter was headed in large type, "Were You Born," and smaller type followed with months of the year. Further on copy read, "If So, You Were Born to Love and to see Constance Bennett in this picture," etc.

We can see that you are still keeping the old ball a-rolling down your way, Johnnie, and you certainly gave your town some Indian atmosphere with the Hindu stunt. What an opportunity for Ghandi! It seems a wonder you didn't tie him in. Now that the new season is in full swing, don't neglect your Club.

3,500 SHOWMEN CAN'T BE WRONG!

FRED H. WOOD is the advertising manager of the Dreamland Theatre in Harrington, Kas., and soon we'll be telling you what this new Club member is doing to sell shows in his town. So don't forget, Fred, send along an account of what you have been doing to inaugurate the new season. All your fellow showmen will apprceiate a tip-off on what methods you have been using to increase patronage at your house.

A. C. GORDON owns and operates two houses out in Idaho, the Rialto Theatre in Boise, and the Star Theatre in Weiser. The Club welcomes this new Round Tabler and hopes that he will become an active contributor to this department. He is an independent theatreman and is therefore not bound by any red tape; hence we will look for some interesting slants on show-business.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

ROBERT D. WEISS is the assistant manager of the Orpheum Theatre in Hammond, Ind., a house managed by Round Tabler Jack E. Pfeiffer. According to Jack's recommendation Bob is an enterprising young showman and he believes that the Club will be benefited by his addition to these constantly growing ranks. With such a boost from the boss Weiss will have to show his stuff and we will await with interest further information on what part he is playing in the game of putting the Orpheum over the top.

TOM ARTHUR is in charge of the Cecil Theatre, Mason City, Iowa, and the Club welcome is cordially extended to this new Club member. He has about 1,400 seats to fill in his house and we would like to hear all about what he is doing to accomplish this feat of showmanship. Shoot along some of your ideas, Tom, and we'll see that the rest of the gang are tipped off.

PAUL E. TRAVERS has the job of assisting B. J. Vanderby with the management of the Palace Theatre in Doland, So. Dakota, and before he was elevated to his present assignment was a projectionist. Beejay states that he is a very competent man and so we assume that it will not be long before he reaches the goal of manager. And first hand knowledge of what's going on in the booth certainly won't hold him back.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

A. E. BENNETT owns and manages the Liberty Theatre in Muncie, Indiana, and he's another owner-manager to become a member of this organization. We are under the impression that A. E. is also an independent operator for the reason that he styles his house as belonging to the "Bennett" circuit. We are mighty glad to include his name on the roster of this Club and hope that he will become one of its active members.

WALTER M. SHELTON is the assistant manager of the Orpheum Theatre, Wilkes-Barre, Pa., and he is proposed for Club membership by his boss, F. P. Farrell, manager of the house. Walter has been connected with theatres in various capacities ever since he was ten years of age and his experience certainly qualifies him to become a Round Tabler. Let the Club know what you and F. P. are doing at the Orpheum, Walter.

ARTHUR R. GLASER manages the Strand Theatre in Carlisle, Pa., and we are enrolling him as a new Round Tabler. He's one of the many Publix men in this Club and we hope he will keep up the same standard set by other managers in his organization in the way of contributing valuable suggestions to this department. Let's hear from you, Arthur.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

GUY D. HAMMITT is the advertising manager of Vanderschmitt Amusement Enterprises, operating theatres in the cities of Bloomington, Bedford, Greencastle, and Crawfordsville, Indiana. Hammitt makes his headquarters at the Indiana Theatre in Bloomington and we firmly believe that this new member will prove an important contributor to these pages. Certainly, he is in a position to garner many valuable show-tips and we will hope to hear from him regularly.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

JACK E. LYKES has charge of Loew's Park Theatre in Cleveland, Ohio, a big 3,300 seater devoted to pictures. This new member emphasized his membership application with an account of a recent stunt, which will soon be published in this department. Lykes has had wide experience in this business, having served with Loew in Cleveland for three years and with Publix in Florida for four years. You can figure it out for yourself as to whether he's going to become a Club asset. We say yes.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

F. L. PFEIFFER is another owner-manager to become a member of this organization. He operates the Playhouse Theatre in Centralia, Ill., under his own banner, and just as soon as he can find time to jot down an account of what he has been doing in the show-selling line and send it in to headquarters, we'll see that his tips are passed along.

HARRY SCHWARTZ is the president and general manager of the Great Lakes Theatres, operating in Erie, Pa.; Elyria, Ohio; Ashtabula, Ohio, and Lexington, Ky. We are indeed glad to welcome this well known theatre man to membership in the Round Table Club and hope that he will see that we are tipped off to what is going on around his circuit. He makes his headquarters at the Park Theatre in Erie, Pa.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

S. D. WEINBERG is publicity director for Great Lakes Theatres, Inc., and he also makes his headquarters at the Park Theatre in Erie, Pa. He is in a position to know what all the managers of Great Lakes theatres are doing in the way of show-selling and we are going to look to him as a source of many interesting show stunts to pass on to his fellow members. Now that you are one of the gang, S. D., don't forget to keep your Club posted.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

C. C. KAUFMAN, owner-manager of the Gem Theatre in Colusa, Calif., is one of the veteran showmen in this organization, now that we've received his application for membership. He's one of the oldest theatre men in his territory and has been in the exhibition end of this business for over 30 years. This department has interested him for some time and now we may expect to hear some interesting yarns about show-business. It takes the oldtimers to show a few pointers on this game and we'll be looking forward to his next communication.

SOUND REPRODUCTION

The BLUEBOOK School

By F. H. RICHARDSON

BLUEBOOK SCHOOL QUESTION NO. 102—(A) What is the critical frequency of the motor control tuned circuit? (B) Tell us why the motor will pick up speed in the usual manner. (C) What kind of motor is the driving motor? (D) When is the speed of a D.C. motor increased or decreased? Note: In these questions we are of course talking about the Western Electric control box tuned circuit.

(Note—These questions are taken verbatim from the index of Vol. 3 of the Bluebook.)

Answer to Question No. 96

Question No. 96 was: Describe the action of the Western Electric Fader. (B) Why is it not practical to use a variable resistance in series with the pick-up and main amplifier? (C) Describe the arrangement of the W. E. fader elements. (D) Between what two elements of the sound system is the fader located?

We have got back into the swing again. Just from curiosity I counted the answers this week. There were, up to that time, 957 of them. Those answering acceptably were:

S. Evans and C. Rau, Van Buskirk and Kroll, Jack Billings, Peter Cermack, James McGuire, Lon Jackson, Lester Daniels, John Williams, Frank G. Gordon, Bob Danning, D. T. Wylie, Leroy Bates, John Truax, N. D. Garling, R. Channing, Tom D. Cermack, William D. Hotaling, Wm. Bogart, H. D. Cole, F. T. Leroy, Thomas McGruder, J. D. Orlander, George Richards, Ben H. Robbins, D. Fausett, John Dagg, H. D. Schofield, Frank Burker, Frank S. Roberts, Dan Singer, Richard Singleton, Nic Granby, Phillip K. Toplor, James Devoy, George Thompson, Alonzo Zerach, Larry Tipton, Dave M. Daniels, Robert Banning, Bob Taylor, Charles L. Goldman, Henry Edwards, G. L. Doe, S. Kay, L. Mooring, Tom Attlebury, Pat O'Brien, L. D. Simmons, Peter M. Davis, James Pendone, Jim Hendershot, W. D. Samuels, Tom B. Kay, Seymour Carroll, John McKey, P. L. Toeping, Harry Lidding, James Lidding, D. H. Prinley, Frank Oliver, H. B. Becker, P. R. Findley, Bill Doe, Dan Graves, Henry Petersen, J. L. Sanderson, George Davring, H. T. Jones and T. L. Oleson.

Not at all a bad list, what, and many more made good on two or three of the items. I have selected the answer of Evans and Rau as best for publication, though for the most part it was equaled by Jack Billings, G. L. Doe, Bill Doe, Nic Granby, George Thompson, W. D. Samuels, Henry Edwards, Harry Lidding and Bob Taylor.

The answer of Messrs. Evans and Rau reads as follows:

"(A) The Western Electric fader is a fixed resistance connected in series with the projector film pick-up amplifier, with a variable resistance connection between this resistance and the main amplifier. In other words it consists of a resistance having a center tap, so that each half of this resistance may be varied singly, thus controlling the volume on either the red or white side.

"(B) The reason why it is not practical to use a variable resistance in series with the pick-up and the main amplifier is that the resistance would have to be very high in order to bring the power anywhere near zero, whereas by using the potentiometer method it is possible to change smoothly and rapidly from maximum to zero and vice versa.

"(C) The arrangement of the W. E. fader elements is as follows: There are thirty short coils of resistance wire mounted in a circle around a metal disc. Half of these coils are connected in series with each other and in series with the projector No. 1 circuit. The other half (15 coils) are similarly connected with each other and with projector circuit No. 2. The metal disc is connected to one side of the projector pick-up amplifier circuit. Surrounding the disc is a row of flat-face metallic buttons, each one of which is connected with one of the small resistance coils. A metal arm receives the current from the metal disc through a sliding contact, the amount of resistance the current must encounter being dependent upon which one of the aforesaid flat-face buttons the arm contact happens to rest upon at the moment. (D) The fader is located between the projector film pick-up amplifier and the main amplifier. When both sound-on-film and disc record recordings are used, there is a switch provided to change from the film pick-up amplifier to the disc or vice versa."

A good answer. One non-contributing projectionist, located in Kansas City, Mo., wrote recently disparaging the School. In the course of his letter he said: "There has not yet been one perfect answer to any question in that fake School."

Doubtless from the superior viewpoint of the gentleman from Kansas City that is very true. In fact, it is true. I have yet to find any one thing in all my life that was perfect. I believe the Kansas City gentleman might himself possibly have one, or maybe even two spots which would not quite measure up to perfection. Maybe!

However, the fact remains that the published answers have yet to draw any shafts of criticism from any one of the several authorities and I am quite sure that were there any serious imperfections in any published answer the engineering department of one of the two leading sound equipment companies would have let me know of it pretty pronto, to say nothing of wise gentlemen such as the Kansas City complainant. Also, unless the School was found to be pretty good it would not receive from 500 to 1,000 answers to each set of questions—and examining them all is not easy.

AN APPRECIATIVE STUDENT

From St. Louis, Mo., comes this appreciative letter:

"Dear Brother Richardson: I have a confession to make. For a long while after the Bluebook School was started in the old Moving Picture World I saw it only occasionally and regarded it as a lot of bunk. I had never owned a Bluebook and did not believe in them, either. One day I got into an argument over the answer to a Bluebook School question and made a bet it was wrong. I then found that I was wrong and not the answer.

"In the course of the argument I looked over the issue containing it and discovered another point on which either it or I was wrong. I found I was wrong again. I then borrowed some other isses, looked over the department and School and came to the conclusion that I was a chump for not having got wise sooner.

"That was a long while ago—1926, in fact—and since then I have not willingly missed an issue of your department. I have found it to be good—in fact, much better, from the practical viewpoint, than any and all other projection publications, except the Bluebook itself. I read two other projection publications, but don't think so much of them. They don't seem to 'know the game' as you do—their editors, I mean, and print about five pages of high-hat dope to one of the real stuff."

I think I know the two publications to which the correspondent refers. If so, he is quite right. These publications are edited by a man who knows little or nothing about projection, and, in my opinion, cares less. His whole entire idea in starting the publications was to make money. Just that and nothing more. Of course, every publication is started more or less with that motive, but there are some publications edited by men who have at least a good working knowledge of the field they seek to serve, and to whom the matter of real service is at least of equal importance with the financial reward. The two publications make large claims as to circulation. They, I believe, claim to reach all projectionists, yet I very seldom saw a copy of them in any projection room of the hundreds we visited last summer—very few were seen, indeed, whereas I did see many copies of MOTION PICTURE HERALD.

Undoubtedly they do have some circulation in large cities where paid agents have secured subscriptions. In small cities or towns, however, they are practically entirely unknown. Their vociferous claims of reaching "all projectionists" are pure unadulterated nonsense. In my opinion, they don't reach even a respectable percentage of "all."

However, the matter is really not worth further space. I believe the opinions expressed by our St. Louis friend are typical of the opinion of the profession, taking it as a whole.

General Interest And Activity In Television Noted

Indicative of the growing interest and activity in the field of television are the regular listings of proposed broadcasting stations throughout the country which are applying to the Federal Radio Commission at Washington for licenses to operate television broadcasting stations, and the formation of television companies.

In the first group are American Television Laboratories, Inc., Hollywood; Gimbel Brothers, Philadelphia; Pilot Radio and Tube Company, Lawrence, Mass.; Crosley Radio Corporation, Cincinnati; Television Laboratory, Ltd., San Francisco.

Don Lee, Inc., of Los Angeles, has been granted a license to operate a television broadcasting station. An application for broadcasting license has been denied to Bakersfield Broadcasting Association, Bakersfield, Cal.

Various applications for renewal which have been granted include National Broadcasting Company, New York; Chicago Federation of Labor, Elgin National Watch Company, Elgin, Ill.; Western Electric Company, American Telephone and Telegraph Company, Radiomarine Corp. of America, American Radio News Corp., Magnolia Park, Ltd., Burbank, Cal.; The Associated Broadcaster, Inc., San Francisco. Fox Film Corporation, for motion picture service.

It is understood within a short time all major stock exchanges will be equipped with television receivers. New television corporations include the Continental Television Corporation and the Philco Radio and Television Corporation of Great Britain, Ltd. This company will have headquarters in London and will merchandise a receiver especially built for British listeners, with provision for long and short wave reception.

Philadelphia Radio Studio Sets Plans for Television

The Universal Broadcasting Company will build a skyscraper studio for radio station WCAU atop the 21-story Franklin Trust building, Philadelphia. Plans include the broadcasting of television programs, by providing television transmitters and lighting equipment necessary.

Estimated cost of the studios, which will be three stories high, is $350,000. There will be seven studios of various sizes, all sound proof. An experimental laboratory will be included.

MUSIC AND TALENT

STAGE SHOWS

New York Broadway

Week Ending October 23

Each additional revue at the B. S. Moss house seems to be better than the last. This one, the third edition of "Varieties," which is an original revue in ten scenes, has been staged and conceived by LeRoy J. Prinz. The show, from start to finish runs smoothly and snappily without a dull moment.

The B. S. Moss "Varieties" Orchestra, with Edward J. Kay conducting, opens the show with an entertaining overture, and is followed by Joe Frisco, who, besides doing his own act, is the revue's master of ceremonies. He introduces the show, incidentally putting over some of his clever witticisms, and then announces the Darling Sisters, pretty twins, who as French maids sing a special introductory song titled "Powder, Lipstick and Rouge." This song serves as introduction to the next scene in which Laine Blair does an interpretive dance routine. The next scene, "In the Boudoir," opens to 12 Albertina Rasch Girls seated at makeup tables with their backs to the audience. The Darling Twins, from the sideline, sing the "Powder, Lipstick and Rouge" song as the ensemble offer a nicely routined toe ballet. Castleton, Mack and Owen follow with their own inimitable routine of comedy capers, acrobatics and dancing. Everything they do is applauded and rightly so, for they work hard and deserve all the applause they get.

Scene 7, entitled "Any Brownstone Front," is, naturally, a speakeasy scene and in it Joe Frisco offers "an impression of Helen Morgan." He, as Helen, is seated on a piano and offers a characteristic impersonation of La Morgan, making it hilariously funny and evoking plenty applause from the audience. The Darling Sisters, on this time for their own specialty of singing and dancing, first sing, "What Is It," in pleasingly sweet voices and then follow with a well-presented high-kick and acrobatic dance routine. Their reception was very good.

Louise Groody, accompanied at the piano by Neville Fleeson, first sings "Sweet Ingenues," and then sings that old favorite, "Tea for Two," which earned her so much popularity a few season ago. Each of her singing numbers is followed by a pleasing dance routine. Her next offering is a characterization of a colored belle singing "You Gotta Shake Your Tambourine and Shout Hallelujah," first on a street corner in Harlem and then as a cabaret girl. Her singing and dancing for this got her a great hand.

Block and Sully, introduced on the program as "A Talkie without Film," are all of that. Their fresh style of delivering gags, songs and dances was well received. Everything they said or did was funny to this audience, who gave them a very fine reception at the close of their act.

Joe Frisco, on this time for his own offering of gags, stories and dancing, still proves himself the head man. After telling a number of risque (great for this audience) stories, Joe does a soft shoe routine and then the good old "Frisco," his own dance. He stopped the show and was forced to encore.

Scene 10, the finale, is called "At a Garden Party." The entire company perform bits in this and the show closes after a twirling and high-kick routine by the Albertina Rasch Girls.

The feature picture this week is "Woman Go On Forever," featuring Clara Kimball Young.

EDDIE MEIKEL

The young chap you see pictured above is one of the first organists in the country to form an Organ Club. He organized his first one in April, 1926, while he was at the Harding theatre, Chicago.

Eddie was at this theatre for six years and built up the organ club idea until it brought in customers for miles away from that particular neighborhood. He is at present in New York awaiting a new assignment.

Personal Appearance Is New Gag for the Song Writers

Herman Hupfeld and Dana Suesse, two of the season's most successful composers of popular and production music, made personal appearances of successive "Surprise Nights," at the Beacon theatre, New York City. Both composers met enthusiastic acclaim from the sophisticated audience. Their appearances were arranged by Alex Evelove of the Warner music publicity department.

Composer appearances may become a regular Monday (Surprise Night) feature at the Beacon as a result, according to Harry Charnas, metropolitan theatres manager for Warner Bros.

Lecture on Piano Playing by Bucharoff at Steinway Hall

Simon Bucharoff, internationally known pianist, composer and teacher, is giving a free lecture on "Piano Playing, Teaching and Their Effect Upon the Young Generation." The lecture will be given at Steinway Hall, New York City, Monday, November 9, at 3:30 p. m., under the auspices of The Allegro Musical Art League of America, Inc.

STAGE SHOWS

San Francisco Fox

Week ending October 21

Fanchon & Marco's "Parasols" Idea, staged by Gae Foster, forms the stage attraction and with its unique settings it is novel, although a trifle weak in spots.

The act opens with Ray Angwin and Mignone posed in a shadow box in the rear, surrounded by parasols, each of which is decorated with a silver star. Ray sings and the girls come on to the stage and do a lively drill and dance with their parasols. Mignone, originally an O'Neill Sisters Kiddie, does a slow dance in which she covers the stage with one foot high above her head.

Anthony, a bird man, appears in the role of a policeman and chases a spoony couple away. He whistles the "Jolly Fellows' Waltz," with orchestra accompaniment, and ends with a variety of bird imitations.

A park scene, dominated by a policeman and a nurse, forms a background for the nurse girls' dance. The Sunkist Beauties come on wheeling baby carriages and go through with a lively dance, manipulating loose-jointed dolls in a dextrous manner.

Gene Sheldon and Sherry offer a number featured by the breaking of several musical instruments and close with a lifelike imitation of a train on a banjo and a dance that is comical.

The Sunkist Beauties offer their justly celebrated unicycle ballet, weaving around the stage in drill formation, each on a single wheel. Tiny parosols form their unique headgear and the act is presented against a background formed by an enormous parasol.

Capt. Willie Mauss pedals a bicycle inside a huge wheel that revolves and finally gains momentum to loop the loop at least a dozen times. The finish is certainly spectacular.

Detroit Michigan

Week Ending October 15

"Mardi Gras" shows what can be done with talent, especially a line of 16 girls. It is another Ed Weisfeldt production, and does justice to the new policy of the local Publix organization—"bigger and better shows." Bob Nolan, transplanted from the Fisher several weeks ago, is up on his toes as master of ceremonies and singing "I Don't Know Why." Bob has a real voice, wears his clothes well, and knows how to M.C. The Jovers, an act imported from London music halls, easily steals the show. The boys do a bit of everything, from instrumental stuff to acrobatics on a trapeze. Their burlesque adagio—what there is of it—is worthwhile. The Harris Twins and Loretta, trio of steppers, get over in fair style. The boys open up with a mirror dance which could be improved upon. The girl clicks in a big way but the trio's adagio offering is anything but clever. The Fred Evans girls come nearest to stealing the show, next to Nolan. They step through three numbers in the approved manner, finishing up with a "promenade Parisienne" that is snappy. In this number, the girls are dressed in black ballet frocks, opera lengths and ballet slippers. Their routine is a bit different.

Vaude Returns to Dallas

RKO vaudeville returned to the Majestic in Dallas on October 15, in the form of compact shows of four to six acts, which RKO is sending through the entire country.

SLICES OF MELLIN

By BOBBY MELLIN

CHICAGO

Ben Bernie, the ol' maestro, didn't receive the keys to the city when he arrived in Chicago recently to open at the College Inn but was the recipient of a huge cigar presented to him by City Greeter George Gaw. Incidentally, Ben was met by a large crowd of admirers when he stepped off the Century. Among those greeting him were Frank Bering, managing director of the Hotel Sherman, and Joey Stool, Genial Gentleman of the music business. Bernie will be heard nightly in broadcasts over WBBM and will also play commercials and sustaining programs over the Columbia chain.

When Carleton Coon and Joe Sanders of the famous Coon-Sanders Knighthawks crowned Earl Burtnett, popular California orchestra leader, as King of the Knights and Ladies of the Bath in the offices of the Music Corporation in Chicago recently, they presented him with a baby's bathtub filled with letters and telegrams from members in good standing who enjoyed the weekly frolics over WGN during the Coon-Sanders long stay at the Blackhawk Cafe. Burtnett recently opened the fall and winter season at Coon-Sanders old stand, the Blackhawk, and he should be without a doubt one of the greatest sensations of the year.

Fred Waldner, who is one of the veteran tenors of the air despite the fact that he is still in his early twenties, and who has been heard on literally hundreds of network programs during the past few years, has a new chain program called the Jolly Time Revue.

When Bruce Kamman, Chicago NBC production man, entered the World War under an assumed age, he was only 17, and he was Bruce Kamman, bandsman and bugler; by the time the war ended he was "Bevo," interpreter. The nickname still sticks. Bevo, who spent two years in France with the 140*th Missouri regiment of the* 35*th Division, explained how he obtained his "moniker." "You see, none of the fellows could remember my name, and as it was just about the time that 'near-beer' was getting popular and Germans are supposed to like their beer, I was named 'Bevo' after the newest brand."*

The most excellent organ programs heard during many of the broadcasts from Chicago emanate from the instrument of Eddie Hansen, who is featured daily from station WCFL. Although Eddie is still a young man, his accomplishments in the musical field make up a long list. He plays many types of music, and does them well enough to please the most critical listeners. He has written a number of popular songs, many of which have become quite popular. The radio work of this superb organist has endeared him to thousands of listeners and has won for him a warm spot in the hearts of all those who have heard him over the air. Eddie is a likable chap and should go a long way towards reaching the top of the ladder.

Henry Halstead and his California Recording orchestra, who recently played nightly over WBBM from Al Quodback's Granada Cafe, is the latest "find" of the radio audience. On this, their first trip east, the band already has scored high among the middlewesterns with their romantic rhythm-making that has an irresistible dance appeal. Clarence Rand, soloist with the orchestra is great and sings in that heart flutterin' "Crosby manner."

Returns to Stage Shows

The Indiana in Indianapolis returned to its old policy of stage shows on October 16, when the management completed negotiations with the musicians' union. Fanchon & Marco shows will be used.

STAGE SHOWS

Baltimore Century

Week Ending October 22

A fast introduction was played by the Century Orchestra directed by George Wild in pit, for the opening on full stage of Horace Heidt and his Californians and the orchestra helped during the entire performance. Heidt danced, then played a piano, and went into a novelty song about Sports, Heidt leading and the others doing novelty actions. This finished with the showing of a collegiate boat race.

Next, another fast selection with a quick turn into "Kiss Me Again," with all member playing violins except the drummer and pianist, then changing to cornets on another tune and a solo by a cornetist, "Little Gypsy Sweetheart." In the novel xylophone ending, each member played various notes. Then came novelty slow motion ice skating finishing with one member jumping over a chair.

In a comedy number several members did classic burlesques of Russian, Jewish, East Side, South Sea, Apache and Grecian classics.

Heidt then introduced "Helen Kane," as "just in town for one day." A member came out for a burlesque with Heidt, with another member at a small piano. Another gave a good imitation of Maurice Chevalier singing "Sweeping the Clouds Away." Heidt introduced "Hoover's 1932 Campaign Song," or "Just One More Chance." Next came a special football line song in honor of Knute Rockne.

Another song with comedy effects and Heidt did some Indian club juggling, a member followed with tap work followed by Heidt. Lobo, a police dog, did a few tricks, then joined the band.

Cincinnati Albee

Week Ending October 23

The major portion of the current offering is given over to Weaver Brothers and Elviry, the act occupying the ordinary running time of two regular turns, thus making a three-act bill.

Gwynne, magician, assisted by three girls, opens the festivities in a series of effects most of which are produced with cabinets built from flat pieces originally exhibited for inspection. The turn is neatly presented and mystifying.

Keller Sisters and Lynch in "Harmony From A to Z," with an unnamed chap at the ivories, prove only fair, their efforts at vocalizing proceeding too much along routine lines and lacking verve.

Weaver Brothers and Elviry, with 15 of their Arkansas recruits, offer practically the same material as when seen here last season, but it's the way they put it over that clicks. Abner Weaver, acting as master of ceremonies, is the same lovalbe, bucolic personality, while Cicero continues to portray the peculiar Ozark type with true fidelity to detail. The obstreperous, belligerent Elviry, heading the feminine contingent of the "home folks," keeps the customers continuously laughing at her characteristic modes and manners.

Musical selections on handsaws, rakes and various other farm implements, as well as a number of homemade contraptions, go over big, but to this writer's notion the unusual and outstanding contribution is a violin solo by one of the Arkansas men whose left hand is minus three fingers. He uses his thumb to hold the instrument, and his index finger to perform the functions on the keyboard which four fingers normally are called upon to do.

Detroit Fisher

Week Ending October 15

Rae Samuels, "the Blue-Streak of Vaudeville," heads the stage piece at the Fisher this week and completely walks off with the show. Buoyancy and pep are other names for her in her present offering. She has a lot of new songs, a wardrobe that will tie the ladies in knots, and stories and confidential asides that almost kick the customers into the aisle. Rae leans to anti-depression ditties and cheerio bon-mots, so that while her act comes at the end of the bill, the audience just hates to leave. As a feature of her act locally, Rae introduced a beautiful young redhead, Eleanor Whitney, of Cleveland. This child (about 14) is a real beauty, with "that color" of red hair. She steps off some real tap numbers. Five "gentlemen of color," billed as the Five Hot Shots, come through in fine style, working themselves into a frenzy of intricate steps, and finishing with a radium number. This act would pep up any bill, as there is not a single pause. Roy Rogers, who imitates the inebriation of Leon Errol, eats the goldfish and generally convulses the audience, proves himself a past master in the art of laugh-getting. Ruiz and Bonita & Co., a speedy dance revue, is especially recommended because of the dandy girl pianist who pulls the orchestra along with her. The act is colorful and has a certain grace—otherwise, it is just a Spanish dance act.

Organist at Schenectady Gains Fame over the Air

Miss Bettye Lee Taylor, featured organist at the RKO Proctors theatre, Schenectady, N. Y., is gaining nationwide fame as a radio organist. Miss Taylor is now the staff organist of Station WGY, Schenectady, owned and operated by the General Electric Company. Her regular broadcasts from WGY are at 10 o'clock each Monday morning, 11:30 each Tuesday night and at varied hours each Saturday morning from the theatre through a remote control hook-up. Miss Taylor also broadcasts over Station W-2XAF, the G. E. experimental and low wave station, which carries programs to all parts of the world.

Publix Books Two Bands

Publix has booked both the Duke Ellington and Cab Calloway bands, the first in Boston for 15 weeks and the other in the New York and Brooklyn Paramounts for eight weeks.

ORGAN SOLOS

WILD OSCAR (Brooklyn Albee). This organist's first solo at this house (caught on his first show) worked out as smoothly as if he had been featured here for a long time. The audience, when told to sing, responded without the least hesitancy and the singing increased in volume right up to the last number.

The solo opened with the orchestra playing the "Voice of the RKO" as Oscar seated at the console, ascended. Comedy slides with words introducing the solo were first shown as the organist played incidental music. Oscar then turned toward the audience and through the mike introduced his "School of Broadcasting," speaking supposedly to the radio audience. His entire announcing was a burlesque on a real broadcast and the audience got many laughs. He first announced the station as JOY and that the Albee Square Mixed Chorus (this is the audience) would do the singing as he accompanied them at the organ. Two choruses of "Moon Comes Over the Mountain" were first sung, then two of "Through With Love," and the final close harmony singing of "Sweet Adeline." The applause at the finish was tremendous.

EARL ABEL (San Antonio Texas) offered as his song slide presentation the following late song hits: "Moonlight Saving Time," "Loveless Love," "It's the Girl," "Nevertheless," and completed his musical program with a nifty parody to the tune of "Auld Lang Syne." His organ solos are well liked.

JACK FRANZ (Detroit Fox) plays "Seasonal Songs" and the way the crowd joins in the singing is great. Franz is as smooth an organist as ever fingered a console key, slipping gently from one melody to the next without a pause. "Guilty" is the first number, followed by "Me," "Dream a Little Dream" and "Just One More Chance." As a change, the next slides offer a chorus of "Two Hearts in Three-Quarter Time," in German. Even that didn't stump the customers, who joined in with a vim that showed many had more than a casual acquaintance with the foreign tongue.

JOHN HAMMOND (Staten Island St. George) presented an entertaining solo this week, part of which was done in concert style and the balance as a community sing. After the organ ascended, during which time Hammond played a hot arrangement of a special number, he stood beside the bench and introduced the numbers. The first was a special arrangement of "If I Have to Go On Without You," with the first chorus played in concert style and the second for the audience to sing. A beautiful arrangement of "Mother Machree" was next played as a straight "spot" solo, with the audience singing the second chorus. The final number on the program was "Me." Hammond, himself, sang special lyrics for the first chorus and the audience's singing of the second chorus closed the solo. Beautiful and appropriate "effect" slides were used as backgrounds for each song and they lent a pleasing effect to the usual black background slides. Hammond received fine applause.

OVERTURES

PHIL FABELLO (New York Coliseum) and His 12 Entertainers presented a high-class overture this week which was orally introduced by the conductor as "A Group of Rudolph Friml Numbers." A special arrangement of "March of the Musketeers," played in a style that sounded more like a symphony orchestra than one of 12 men, opened the program, with a violin duet of "Sympathy" following. The next number was "Allah's Holiday," played by the full orchestra. One of the saxophonists, who has a voice like a bell, sang "Rose Marie" beautifully and then for the finale the orchestra played "Song of the Vagabonds." The entire program was well-balanced and presented in a first-class manner. Mr. Fabello's directing is done with the essence of grace and in a showmanly manner. He also possesses a most pleasing personality.

WALT ROESNER (San Francisco Fox) and the Fox Theatre Concert Orchestra present a "Neopolitan Nights" overture, without making use of stage effects. The overture is made up of such popular Italian songs as "O Sole Mio," "Maria, Mari," "Santa Lucia" and "Funiculi-Funicula," with a bit of characteristic Walt Roesner drum effect at the end. Joaquin Garay, tenor, sings 'Stardust" and wins an encore.

JOHN GART (Brooklyn Loew's 46th St.) and His Orchestra presented a high-class overture entitled "Symphonette" this week, which included special arrangements of "To the Future," a trio arrangement of brass instruments of "Alice Blue Gown," a violin and piano (Gart at piano) duet of "Caprice Viennois," and a final full orchestra arrangement of "French Echoes." This orchestra, though it is comprised of but seven musicians and the leader, works smoothly and has become a prime favorite at this house.

EDUARD WERNER (Detroit Michigan), with "Viennese Melodies" as the title of the current musical offering, uses as its basis "Morning, Noon and Night." The full orchestra of 40 pieces swings through the delicate strains of the "Blue Danube" in charming fashion, following this selection with "Two Hearts That Beat in Three-Quarter Time." Six violinists delight the audience with their rendition of "Viennese Caprice," always a favorite with music lovers, especially when played on the strings. As a finish, bits of the melodies of the ever-popular "Chocolate Soldier" are offered. Audience reaction proved that this type of overture pulls heavily.

SAM FREED, JR. (Cincinnati Albee), recently transferred to Cincinnati from the Hippodrome, New York City, has already endeared himself to the hearts of local theatregoers by his very affable manner and skilled musicianship. The audience invariably expresses its appreciation with liberal applause after each overture, something which heretofore was the exception. Freed offers a medley of popular numbers, past and present, each week, and this is made more enjoyable by his brief but intelligent announcement preceding the presentation. For the week ending October 23, the overture is entitled "Eyes." It is composed of such selections as "Your Eyes Have Told Me So," "Irish Eyes Are Smiling," "Two Little Eyes of Blue," "There's Danger In Your Eyes, Cherie." Not infrequently Freed lays aside his baton long enough to render a violin solo in connection with some particular number, but he never monopolizes the spotlight to the exclusion of his associates. His reorganized orchestra consists of 15 topnotch musicians recruited from local ranks, and they are given ample opportunity to strut their stuff in solos, duets and quartets in addition to their ensemble work.

UP AND DOWN THE ALLEY

HELLO EVERYBODY!

The Master of Mammy-singers, Al Jolson, has had published by the Remick Music Corporation the newest of his words-and-music compositions, "Ev'ry Day Can't Be a Sunday." . . . The number will be presented by Jolson in the new edition of "Wonder Bar." . . . Remick's are very enthusiastic over the number and liken it to Jolson's greatest song, "April Showers." . . . They have no doubt of it surpassing its predecessor in popularity. . . .

Paul Ash is now musical director for all Shubert shows and each of the musical shows put on will have a band under the personal supervision of Ash. . . . Incidentally, he is doing the directing for the Queeny Smith show, "Little Racketeer," which is now breaking in and in it he is also playing a part. This show is the first Shubert show to carry a stage-band. . . .

Eddie Magill, house crooner at the Brooklyn Fox, is being let out after working at this one house for 40 weeks. . . . Eddie has built up a great following here and they miss him plenty. . . . Charlie Davis, m. c. at the Paramount, is taking a four to eight-weeks vacation in Europe . . . after which he will return to the Paramount, but minus his popular "gang." . . . A band for him will be created from the regular orchestra, saving the firm plenty, but sending his own fine band to look for jobs . . . and that's not so good.

Danny Parker, in charge of organists and solos for RKO, has a darned helpful idea for music publishers, which he will instigate shortly. . . . His idea is to send to the publishers the names of any of their own songs used in the organ solos played by RKO organists. . . . That's working with you. . . .

Walter Anderson starts this week as organist at the RKO Madison, Brooklyn. . . . "Win" Kennedy is at the RKO Virginia, Champaign, Ill. . . . Billy Muth, from the Worth, Ft. Worth, Texas, is in town awaiting a new assignment and is the latest member of the Noon-Day Club. . . . Sid Stern, secretary to Harry Blair of Shapiro, Bernstein, has gone and got herself married (after we-all spending a year training her). . . . Freda Goldstein, from the Berlin special service department, has replaced Miss Stern. . . . Al Forest is now at the Roger Sherman, New Haven. . . . Dick Betts, who was at this house last year, but who has been at the Palace, Stamford, for the past eight months, is now at the Capitol, Binghamton. . . . Marie Sales is the new organist at Shea's Riviera, North Tonawanda. . . .

I'll be see'n you. . . . S'long.

Trailers Called Best Medium For Advertising of Pictures

San Francisco—In a discussion of the relative merits of newspaper and trailer advertising for the boosting of patronage, exhibitors in this territory have voted in favor of trailers, according to a survey by Film Trade Topics. It is generally agreed that properly designed trailers are the greatest sales mediums for coming attractions, and that the application of more advertising psychology, as well as greater care in construction, would make most trailers many times more effective.

From THE Film DAILY

Indispensable to all theatres, large and small—NATIONAL SCREEN TRAILERS—packed with showmanship that sells seats—the economical, profitable way to advertise your coming attractions. Individual service rendered to 8,000 theatres from four offices.

Cycles
—and other things
By JACK ALICOATE

Trailer Tribute

In the ordinary course of events we hear very little of the trailer, yet, trailers play no unimportant part in both the production and merchandising branches of the industry. Used by four out of five exhibitors this trailer footage must be enormous. It is a rather interesting commentary that some exhibitors, upon recent tests, have found trailers their most effective means of advertising. Being both economical and without waste circulation the trailer has long since established its value to the industry.

Better Theatres

WITH WHICH IS COMBINED "THE SHOWMAN"

An appeal to the advertiser's sense of values:

THE next Better Theatres will be the Fall Buyers Number, the theatre equipment directory—really a semi-annual edition of a Theatre Equipment Almanac— newly revised as a reference book for six months following publication . . . yet advertising rates are the same as for a regular issue! Forms close November 13.

Vol. 105, No. 4 In Two Sections—Section Two OCTOBER 24, 1931

Fundamentals of Projection

SMALL AREA of light source is essential to the projection of a clear, sharp image on the screen. The crater of the carbon arc, just a few millimeters in diameter, is the ideal source of light.

HIGH INTRINSIC BRILLIANCY is required of this minute area of light—sixteen million times the high intensity of screen illumination demanded by the critical patron. National Projector Carbons afford an intrinsic crater brilliancy rivaling that of the sun at zenith.

STEADY LIGHT is equally essential to satisfying projection. Extensive research and years of experience have enabled National Projector Carbons to supply the steady, white light that is a source of satisfaction to both projectionist and patron.

Two satisfied patrons pay for the National Projector Carbons used at each performance.

Emergency Lighting Plants are giving thoroughly dependable protection in many of the largest circuit and independent theatres.

Roth Multiple Arc Actodector Generators are designed by scientific proportioning to operate at an exceptionally low voltage. This reduces loss in ballast resistors, field and armature. Laminations are of non-ageing and low loss silicon steel. The frame is rolled steel. These features increase efficiency.

Continuous, brilliant screen illumination of uniform intensity is assured, even during change-over. Any number of arcs can be carried within the ampere ratings of Roth Multiple Arc Type Actodectors. They are especially desirable in connection with sound projection equipment. The sizes range from 20 to 600 amperes... Furnished in 2- and 4-bearing types.

Smartly Styled

and Specially Designed For Sound Houses

THE new Heywood-Wakefield Theatre Seats have been painstakingly developed to fulfil all the requirements of modern theatres. Their perfected acoustical properties; their luxurious comfort; their smart, modern lines; their finely tailored upholstering—all these things combine to make them the finest theatre chairs built today.

You'll like the new Heywood-Wakefield Theatre Chairs and so will your patrons. These popular seats have that extra style, class, and comfort which makes patrons want to return to YOUR theatre. More than a quarter-million H-W chairs are installed in Publix Theatres throughout the country. Hundreds of thousands more will be found in prominent chain and independent houses.

Before seating a new theatre or reseating an old one, get all the facts on modern theatre seating. A note to any of the Heywood-Wakefield Sales Offices listed below will bring complete and helpful information.

¶ A few issues ago, we published an attempt on the part of a heating and ventilating engineer who has been closely identified with a number of important theatre projects, to point out ways of more efficient operation of cooling plants that were within the proper business of the theatre management. It must be admitted, however, that the executive in charge of the whole theatre, can scarcely be called upon to have enough detailed knowledge of the more technical phases of the theatre, to be able to check them precisely. Theatres having the larger and more complicated types of cooling and ventilating plants require employes of some specialized knowledge to look after such matters. The relationship of the heating, ventilating and cooling processes to the whole theatre are such. however, that except in the most affluent houses, supervision over them is in charge of one who has general building maintenance to look after besides, and so it is his knowledge of air conditioning apparatus is not all that is frequently required. Criticism from specialists in that field of air conditions in the theatre, particularly in summer with reference to the weather outside, must be considered in the light of the economics of the theatre, which do not support much more "experting" than the theatre already has. At the same time, efficiency can be increased without adding any financial burden to the theatre by increasing the training of those who are now in charge of the equipment, instead of adhering to "good enough" standards and depending upon the "trouble shooter" to take care of emergencies. Something of an attempt at such training is Orney E. Dunnum's contribution (Compression Motors in Cooling Plants), and we hope to have more such detailed studies of other phases of the apparatus. Mr. Dunnum is associated with the Ideal Electric & Manufacturing Company of Mansfield, O., representing them in the Philadelphia district.

¶ The fertile mind of the New York architect, Ben Schlanger, again turns to the theatre in The Screen: A Problem in Exhibition, and he seeks to elevate the erstwhile "silver sheet" to a new importance. He would make the screen—which, after all, is the motion picture's stage—the nucleus of the whole theatre design, that point around which the whole theatre should be built and to which it should rigidly conform. He has some other striking ideas concerning the screen, not here, however, divulged—but we do know that privately at least, he is an addict to the idea of a greatly enlarged screen, not necessarily the so-called wide screen, but at least the screen which dominates the whole forward portion of the auditorium, and dominating it not as a screen, but as space into which we peer seeing the projected other-world of the cinema. These are indeed interesting thoughts, and they come at a time when the screen is getting technical attention that it truly deserves.

¶ Those who have used or followed the Planning the Theatre department to obtain some help in making preliminary plans for a new theatre or for refashioning their present one, will doubtless be especially interested in how the conductor of that department, Peter M. Hulsken, took his own advice in remodeling the Strand in Massena, N. Y. (A Problem in Theatre Modernization). Did we not have a great deal of faith in Mr. Hulsken's veracity, we should have charged him with trying to put something over on us in calling those "before remodeling" pictures, reproductions of the same house pictured in the "after remodeling" photographs. In giving advice, he has frequently stated that "it would not be difficult" to do this or do that to make a radical improvement, but we dare him to say that about the Strand! . . . Incidentally, as announced elsewhere, Mr. Hulsken has had to forego his department in this issue because of a press of work in connection with building projects for which he is the architect, these having kept him away from his office most of the time for several weeks. He assures us, however, that he will be back on the job for the next BETTER THEATRES.

¶ We know from inquiries that have been made that the announcement of Aaron Nadell as the author of the series, What the Manager Should Know About Sound, will occasion some surprise in certain circles. At least four other people, to our knowledge, have been identified with this series in the guesses as to who the author was. Because of changes in his professional associations, it can now be told: Mr. Nadell is well known in sound and projection circles in New York, where he has been with Electrical Research Products and latterly with Paramount Publix, where his work kept him constantly in close touch with the problems confronting those in direct charge of "putting on a good show." It will have been noted that these articles have been particularly interesting for their literary background as well as for both practical and theoretical knowledge, and with only two more articles left in the series, it is hoped to have further contributions from the same—er—typewriter.

POOR PRINTS: A THREAT TO THE FILM BUSINESS

an editorial

IT apparently has taken time to make the industry realize what its indifference toward the quality of release prints means.

Editorially, as well as elsewhere, we have previously pointed out that thousands of theatres, particularly those of subsequent-run classification, are receiving prints that are not fit to be run, their condition being due either to carelessly made prints, or to mutilation at the hands of projectionists, and that this was wasting the efforts of the studios and laboratories and also contributing toward patron dissatisfaction with the show.

Now, finally, the industry's technical organizations find the situation an urgent one, and it may be that their interest will ultimately direct the attention of the Powers That Be toward this, one of the more basic affairs of motion picture merchandising.

The main body of the last report of the projection practice committee of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers, given at the fall meeting this month, concerned itself most emphatically with this negligence. The report set forth that improper "processing," or preparation, of prints was making it highly problematical whether a theatre at any given time could present an uninterrupted performance.

An example was cited wherein a certain theatre, belonging to one of the larger circuits, tested and returned 40 prints before accepting one to run!

Further alarm is expressed even at the other end of the studio-theatre trail—among the cinematographers. In a recent issue of the American Society of Cinematographers' paper, JohnArnold, president of the organization, testifies:

"It has been forcibly brought to our attention on many occasions that the release prints which are shown in the theatres here and elsewhere, are so carelessly made that they are scarcely recognizable as the same fine pictures which are shown to us in our own studio projection rooms.

"Now this is a matter which involves more than the mere pride of the cameraman: it is of very vital concern to the producer, for his income depends upon selling his pictures—and, in the last analysis, his stars—to the public."

Curiously enough, this threatening situation is not confined to this continent. The thing seems to have become internationally epidemic, as witness this account in a recent issue of the London "Kinematograph Weekly":

"Mr. Kendall of Batley brought samples (to a meeting of the Projectionists Guild) of a damaged film which he had been screening recently. Although alleged to be a new copy, the samples were in bad condition, and Mr. Kendall said that he did not run the picture one show without a stoppage. He communicated with the renters and told them about the terrible condition of the picture, but it was of no avail."

Of course, the principal leaders of this industry, the world's fourth largest, have a great many matters to concern them, and some, unfortunately, that cannot be even remotely associated with making and selling good motion picture entertainment. Yet here is a measure of testimony from reliable sources pointing very definitely to something that is wrong with this business as it is now conducted. It may ultimately get some official attention.

COMPRESSOR MOTORS IN COOLING PLANTS

their types, operation and maintenance

By ORNEY E. DUNNUM

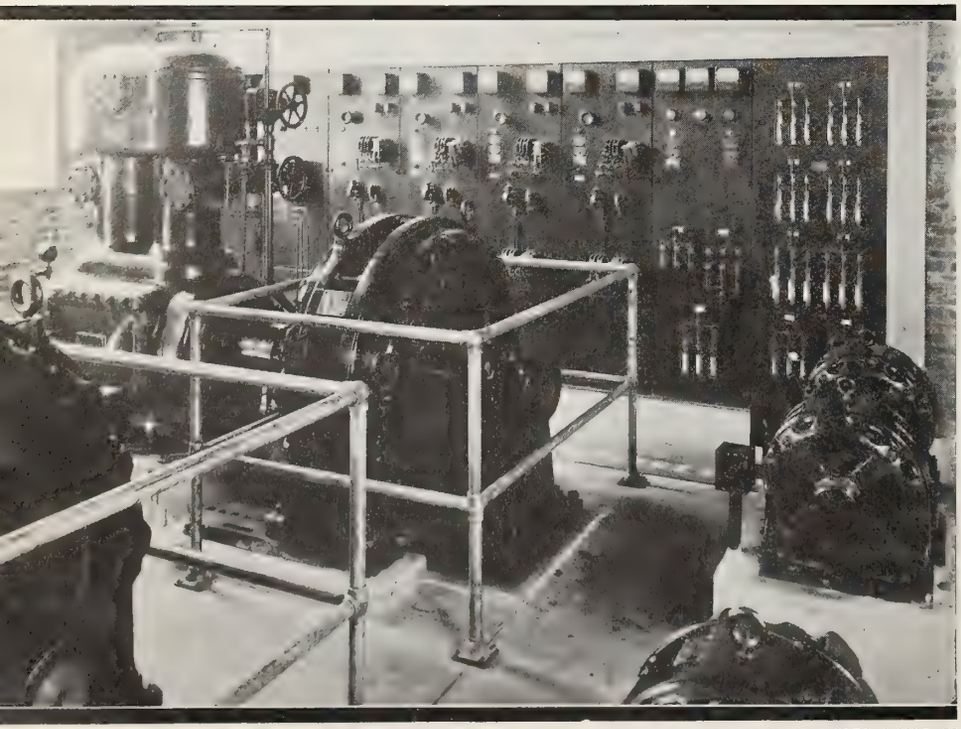
GENERALLY SPEAKING, the largest single electric motor on a theatre cooling installation requiring a gas compressor is the motor driving that compressor. The control apparatus for this motor, although not excessively complicated, is in most cases more intricate than the usual plain induction motor starter, and its functions are therefore not usually understood by the operating engineer.

When the plant is running smoothly, this is of little consequence, for all that is required in starting and stopping, so far as the electrical end is concerned, is pushing the proper button. However, there are other units of the cooling system, such as pumps, etc., which upon failure to remain in service due to overload or some other condition which throws them off the line, will effect the operating conditions of the compressor. It may be of interest to the plant engineer to know something about the operating limits and functions of the compressor driving motor and control, and for this reason, the general characteristics will be discussed here.

Of the two possible kinds of power for electric drive; namely, direct and alternating current, the former is used only rarely. This is due to the fact that direct current is not now generally available, owing to the higher transmission, generation and maintenance costs. As the direct current motor also has a high starting torque and high overload capacity, it should cause little trouble due to changes in load on the compressor, after once correctly installed. Therefore, only alternating current motors will be considered.

Among the various types of alternating current motors, the standard squirrel-cage motor for operation of a compressor furnished with a bypass, or the double squirrel-cage motor for automatic operation, are the best from the standpoint of cost alone. Although the slip-ring induction motor is slightly higher in cost and requires more complicated control apparatus, it is often used in preference to the squirrel-cage types because it permits starting the compressor with an inrush of current from the line proportional to the load on the compressor. Its operating efficiency, however, is slightly lower than the squirrel-cage type. Since there are items entering into the installation, other than mere cost, that are usually of more importance, the induction motors are rarely considered, and then usually only on small installations where the use of synchronous motors would not be advisable.

Induction motors cannot be built economically, nor can they be designed to operate efficiently at low speeds, particularly those speeds at which most compressors operate. Therefore, when using motors of this type it is necessary to have a belt, chain or reduction gear drive. This has numerour disadvantages, such as greater space requirements, more hazards, more source of trouble, etc., when compared with the directly connected machine. Induction motors also operate at lagging power factor with consequently a greater current per phase per horsepower output, than a motor of unity power factor type. This calls for heavier feeders and produces a poorer plant load from the power company's standpoint, unless condensers are put in to raise the power factor. This has resulted in the development of the directly connected, synchronous motor.



A COMPLETE understanding of the use of synchronous motors for driving refrigerating compressors is of comparatively recent origin, all developments having been made in approximately the past ten years. The motor gets its name from the fact that it runs in step or synchronism with the frequency of the alternating current supply to which it is connected. Without going into a complete explanation, it is sufficient to know that for a constant frequency, the speed of any motor is inversely proportional to its number of poles and is obtained by the following formula:

or for 60-cycle service—

$$\frac{60 \times 60}{P/2} = \frac{3600}{P/2} = \frac{7200}{\text{Poles}}$$ for 25 cycles the speed would be 3,000 divided by the number of poles.

COURTESY IDEAL ELEC. & MFG. CO.

This reproduction of part of the cooling plant in the Paramount theatre in Brooklyn shows an engine type synchronous motor, with motor-generator exciter set and panel board of pushbutton starting type.

Pictured here is the cooling plant of the Warner theatre, Los Angeles, having engine and flywheel type synchronous compressor motor with automatic control panels. Note added flywheel effect in rotor.

COURTESY IDEAL ELEC. & MFG. CO.

The induction motor speed is figured the same way, except that under load it will run from 3% to 15% (depending on design) less than the calculated speed due to its slip. Thus should the load on an induction motor momentarily increase, the speed will decrease slightly, giving the motor a corresponding increase in torque to balance the load.

This is not true of a synchronous motor, however, for within the limits of its available power (pull out torque) it will run at an absolutely constant speed, provided the generated frequency is constant. This is evident in the large number of electric clocks now operating entirely satisfactorily on the principle of the synchronous motor. To maintain this constant speed under load, the synchronous motor requires in addition to its squirrel-cage winding, a rotating direct current field which is supplied from an outside source, making necessary the direct current exciter as a part of the equipment.

Unfortunately the motor cannot start or come up to speed with the direct current fields applied, so the excitation must be applied at a speed very closely approximating the full-load speed. It will be noted that the rotating field of the synchronous motor has a light squirrel-cage winding built into the pole faces. This is merely for starting duty. Under certain starting conditions, which will be explained later, this is sufficient, when the stator is switched onto the line, to start the rotor from rest and bring it up to the slip speed, or in most synchronous designs, to about 95% speed. After this point has been reached, the direct current is switched on to the field coils, and the rotor immediately picks up the remaining speed (pulls into synchronism). During this starting period, the fields are not connected to the exciter. However, a voltage is built up in this field circuit, and were the circuit to be left open, this voltage would become dangerously high. For this reason, during the starting period this field circuit is closed, usually by resistance.

This resistance limits the current in the field circuit during the starting period, both as a matter of protection and also to assist in starting. Later, when the motor is stopped, it acts as a buffer in dissipating the energy stored in the field, and hence is termed a discharge resistance. This discharge resistance is furnished separate from the motor and usually is wired into the control apparatus. After the direct current from the exciter has been connected to the fields, its value is regulated by the exciter field rheostat and the synchronous motor field rheostat (if supplied) to produce the operating power factor desired.

For unity power factor operation and individual exciters, usually only the exciter rheostat is furnished, and the current is properly adjusted when it produces the lowest possible reading on the a.c. ammeter at full load. Over-excitation will produce leading power factor; and under-excitation, lagging. The motor manufacturer usually stamps the required excitation, for full-load and for rated power factor, in amperes (direct current) on the motor nameplate. With the excitation set at this value, loads less than the nameplate horsepower will produce slightly leading power factor, which will compensate for a share of the lagging power factor at which auxiliary induction motors in the plant operate.

In the event two rheostats are supplied, and excitation is from individual exciters, power can usually be saved by cutting out most of the motor field rheostat and regulating by means of the exciter field rheostat. When several motors are excited from the same exciter, it is well to cut the voltage of the exciter to a point where one motor can operate with practically all of the field rheostat cut out, and then adjust the other field rheostats accordingly.

OWING TO THE peculiar characteristic of the synchronous motor, high starting torque cannot be obtained. Likewise the pull in torque is low. After once synchronized, however, the pull-out torque is relatively high. The inrush of current at starting for slow speed motors can be kept relatively low, and for this reason, and also to obtain the maximum torque, they are usually started on full voltage. The torque developed is proportional to the square of the applied voltage.

The usual speed for refrigerating compressors of the size used in cooling theatres, is from 360 r.p.m. down, and although there is a trend toward higher speeds and smaller equipments, only slow speed motors will be considered. Also, since carbon dioxide gas is the most generally used in theatre cooling due to its being odorless, only CO_2 compressor motors will be considered.

The standard torque and inrush characteristics for slow speed, engine-type synchronous motors, are shown in the following tabulation.

	72 to 240 r.p.m.	257 to 450 r.p.m.
Starting torque 100% volt..	40%	40%
Inrush K.V.A. 100% volt...	265%	300%
Pull in torque.....	40%	40%
Pull in inrush.....	Less than starting
Pull out torque, gradually applied	150%	150%
Pull out torque, suddenly applied	300%	300%

It is evident from the above, therefore, that if this motor is to be used for driving a refrigerating compressor, the installation must be so arranged that the motor can be started and synchronized before the actual load is placed on the machine. This is accomplished by installing a bypass on the compressor, which is opened during the starting period. By reason of this bypass, and depending on its size, the piston moves backward and forward in the cylinder with very little gas pressure acting against it. A full-sized bypass will of course, produce easier starting conditions than one of half- or three-quarters-size.

The fact that the discharge, suction and bypass valves must be manipulated in starting the compressor, makes it hard to design an automatic installation controlled by means of thermostats. It is possible of course to use electrically operated valves, but this complicates and is expensive.

Since the pull-out torque of the slow-speed synchronous motor is high, it is possible to use this as a method of starting the compressor by the addition of a magnetic clutch. This allows the motor to come up as represented in the Strand, Massena, N. Y.

A PROBLEM IN THEATRE MODERNIZATION

By PETER M. HULSKEN

THE SCHINE ENTERPRISES of Gloversville, N. Y., owners of the old Strand theatre in Massena, N. Y., were faced with the problem of either remodeling the present theatre, or building an entire new theatre not only on account of the possible increase of population in that city should a large power engineering project go through, but also to improve upon the comfort of the theatre-going public and provide modern conveniences and appearances.

Taking into consideration the present financial condition of the country, it was decided to remodel the present house, but to keep the cost down to the minimum, and to do the remodeling in the shortest time possible. Therefore, as the architect, I resorted to as few structural changes as possible, with the exception of building a new boiler and fan room at the side of the building.

The paramount issue of the remodeling was to change the entire character of the interior, as well as the exterior entrance, so that not even the smallest detail would be left to remind the patrons of the old theatre, and to create an impression of entering an entirely new theatre. The other major requirements were to make the auditorium acoustically perfect and as decorative as it possibly could be done.

The old Strand theatre was built during the war, and on account of the high cost of labor and material at that time, the building was more or less slammed together, disregarding any architectural design. In fact the building was more of a factory type construction. The exterior walls were built with heavy pilasters of four-foot width, projecting into the auditorium 24 inches. The ceiling was not even plastered, but showed its entire construction of heavy wood girders with steel truss rods and roof boards exposed to view. Of course, the sun beating upon the roof made the balcony practically unusable during the summer on account of its excessive heat. No system of ventilating was ever installed.

The standee rail separating the foyer from the auditorium was a make-shift of plaster board. The seats were spaced about 28 inches from back to back. The stage was 5 feet, 6 inches above the lower part of the auditorium floor. The electric wiring system was a make-shift of exposed wiring. The seating capacity of the entire house was only 900.

The women's and men's rest rooms were hardly larger than an ordinary closet. The lobby had a cement floor. The marquee was nothing more than a combination of steel deck with channel irons. So by this description, one can readily visualize the problem which faced the architect: To remodel this make-shift into a modern deluxe theatre.

Beginning with the exterior of the building, the marquee was remodeled by the installation of large attraction boards with changeable letters for programs on front and sides. A new metal ceiling studded with electric lights was placed on the soffit of the old marquee. The old brick walls in the front lobby were given a texture stucco finish. The old cement floor was replaced with a colored slate floor. Poster cabinets and new ticket office were provided, giving the outside entrance a modern appearance. The cement floor in the inside lobby was taken up and replaced with a tile floor of varied hues. The ceiling was provided with rough cast beams and brackets, walls were plastered in antique texture, and ornamental shields were placed between the beams. New poster cabinets were installed giving the lobby a quiet, restful appearance.

The space between the lobby and the old standee railing was enlarged, making the foyer 15 feet wide, with a high vaulted ceiling.

On each end of this foyer were placed the stairways leading to the balcony, and alongside these stairways were constructed large women's and men's rest rooms. The toilets were provided with entirely new plumbing fixtures and tile floors. On the mezzanine floor above the rest rooms were installed the manager's office and a nursery, each on opposite sides, provided with windows looking into the foyer below.

The entire auditorium was replastered. The ceiling was furred out to the bottom of the truss rods below the girders, giving an air chamber between ceiling and roof. The ceiling and upper part of side walls were plastered with acoustical plaster. The side walls were furred out flush with the face of the pilasters and arches were constructed in the space between the pilasters, enclosed with wrought iron gates of rare beauty. Behind these gates, artificial trees and shrubs were placed in order to accentuate the width of the interior.

All radiators and ventilating pipes were concealed.

The stage floor was lowered to three feet, four inches above the lower part of the auditorium floor. The width and height of the proscenium arch was increased to the maximum, and the depth of the stage was cut down to increase the seating capacity. The theatre has now a seating capacity of 1,200. All seats are two feet, six inches from back to back, and of a 20-inch minimum width. All new upholstered seats were installed.

An entirely new heating and ventilating system and an electric system with dimmers operated by a switchboard was provided. A new projection room was also built.

WHILE THE Strand in Massena may justifiably be regarded as an "awful example," yet it merely illustrates to a greater degree a condition that is more general than we who have been watching the accelerated theatre building program of the past few years, are perhaps inclined to think it is.

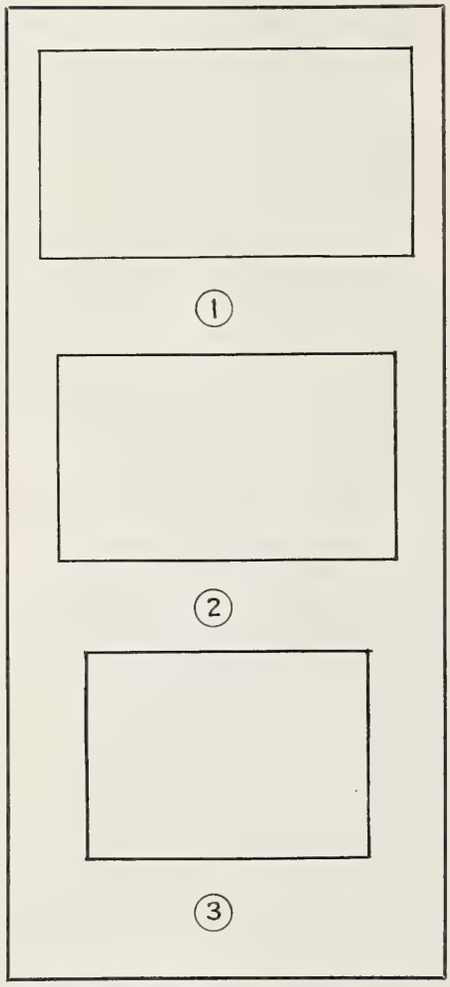
The life of a theatre, as reckoned for taxing purposes, is placed at 25 years—and here was a theatre that had more than reached mere obsolescence but relatively a few years after it was built, the actual remodeling coming some time later than doubtless it should have.

The accompanying illustrations are really eloquent in showing the vast difference that can be achieved in a short time at a cost much lower than that of an entirely new theatre, even though the original house demands such radical revamping as the Strand did. However, there is unquestionably merit in a policy under which the owner keeps his theatre as up-to-date as possible, making every effort not to permit it to get so far behind the times that the box office suffers through a long period of increasing obsolescence, then finally arriving at a time when practically a new house has to be built at a greater lump cost within the old walls.

THE SCREEN: A PROBLEM IN EXHIBITION

an appraisal of its place in cinema art

By BEN SCHLANGER



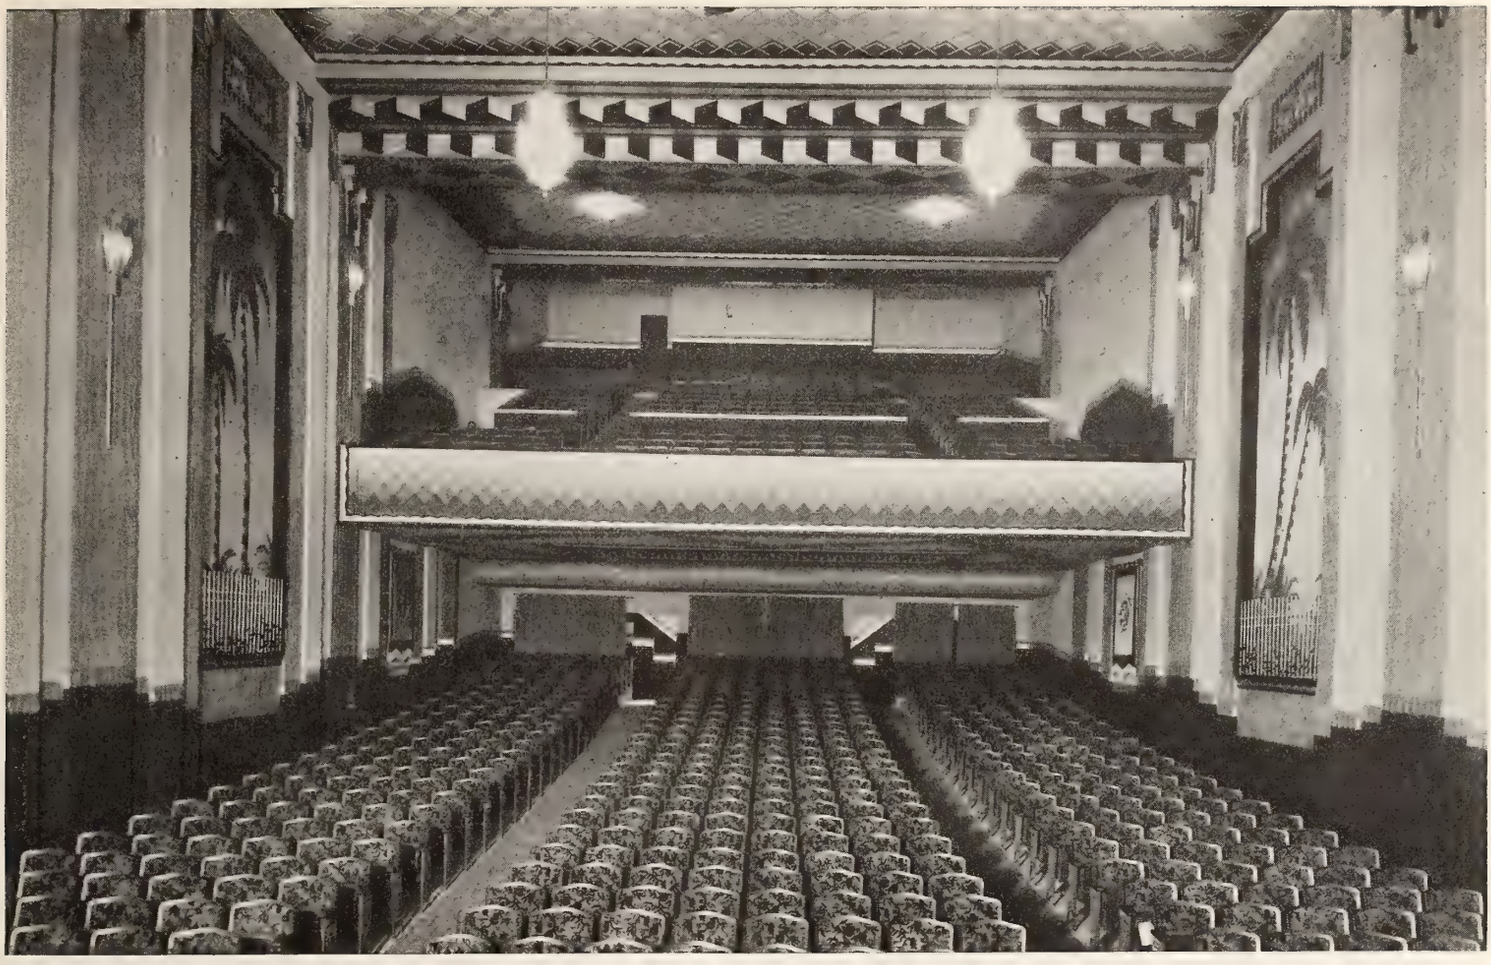
THE HISTORY of the motion picture centers itself chiefly about the technical and aesthetic aspects of the means of its production. Only brief reference is made to the exhibition of the product. With the exception of the progress made in projection engineering, the science and art of exhibition has advanced very little. Enough ambition has not been applied to the motion picture to give it theatres scientifically planned for its own purpose. The position of the screen is still being determined by the stage floor of the legitimate theatre, even in cases where there are no stage performances, in spite of the fact that the motion picture must earn a home of its own, as the most practical and effective medium of expression for the theatre arts.

The motion picture producer realizes this and therefore concentrates all his efforts toward this goal. But unfortunately he concerns himself only with the problems of production, then pays little or no attention to the loss in the effectiveness of his product through faulty exhibition. Even though the producer and the exhibitor are one, as they are in many instances, the problems of each are dealt with separately.

The motion picture can achieve a more effective kind of exhibition only after the science of exhibition is given more serious thought. Of course, the addition of sound and dialogue to the silent picture has been a step toward the final goal, but it must be accompanied by many other changes in present practices before a full development of the possibilities of the motion picture can be attained.

These necessary changes deal with the creation of an illusion in the theatre auditorium, which should cause the spectator to feel as though he were included in the confines of the space of the action displayed. An illusion, to be perfect, should be complete in every sense; any partial attempt at achieving it has an unnatural and sometimes an annoying effect. The addition of sound and dialogue to the silent picture is only a partial attempt. A change in the shape and size of the motion picture screen, making the screen as large as possible, and a revaluation of the function and treatment of the theatre auditorium, are most necessary to complete the illusion. Until the need for these changes is realized, the full possibilities of the motion picture remain untapped.

Precisely, then, the problems to be dealt with vitally concern the screen and the relation of the theatre structure to the screen. The size and shape given to the screen is a most important consideration in determining the proper main form, the floor slopes and pitches, the seating arrangement, the lighting and architectural effects, and indirectly, the acoustical form of the theatre structure. These elements of the theatre interior, properly handled, will create the desired illusion, which will assist and heighten the effect of the presentation.



No. 3 is the present screen shape. No. 2 is the screen proportion of 1 to 1.67. No. 1 is the screen proportion of 1 to 1.8. No. 3, the present screen, accents the vertical direction. No. 1, the wider screen, accents the horizontal direction. No. 2 permits both the vertical and horizontal directions to be well balanced for picture composition. Screen No. 2 can be modified to achieve any desired shape. No. 1 and No. 2 do not allow for such flexible changes in shape, because such a modification would cause too great a reduction in the size of the picture.—THE AUTHOR.

SEEMINGLY these problems are of no immediate concern to the exhibitor of motion pictures. In the addition of sound and dialogue to the silent film made by the producer, he was quick to grasp the effect it would have on the box office. But it is difficult for him to see the need for these more subtle considerations, and he therefore overlooks another possibility for helping the box office. Any time or money spent for these basic needs would undoubtedly show a more lasting financial return than any amount of plaster ornament.

However, these problems are of immediate concern to those connected with the designing and building of motion picture theatres, because theatre structures are not built for temporary use. The average life of a theatre structure should be at least 15 years in order to amortize the original construction cost, and also to show a profit on the investment. The obsolescence of a theatre building may take place long before this length of time elapses, despite its structural sturdiness, because its very form and planning will not properly house new requirements of motion picture exhibition. Of course, in some instances it will be possible to make certain alterations to existing theatres to meet new requirements; in others it might prove too costly to make the necessary changes. The difficulties involved in installing larger screens in existing theatres are many. While it may be possible to have sufficient proscenium space, the sight lines on to the large screen would be very poor, due to balcony obstructions and unsuitable floor slopes. Would it not be a serious mistake to allow theatre structures which are now rapidly becoming obsolete, to influence in any way the ultimate form and size of the screen?

The final aim, then, is to determine the size and shape of the screen, which would have the desired effect on the spectator, and then to arrange a system of seating that will allow all seats to come within the range of comfortable sight of the entire screen. Bodily comfort is of the utmost importance in this respect, not only because of the need for physical comfort, but also because bodily discomfort, which causes the spectator to move about in his seat, is also

LAUNCHING A SMALL TOWN THEATRE

Describing the Iola theatre, perhaps typical of the cinema as conceived today in the intimate community, in design and in promotion

THE IOLA theatre in the small Kansas city of Iola, represents a development in the business section of that town which, though entirely a private enterprise, takes on the character of a civic project. This character is contributed by the pride the townspeople have taken in it, and by the realization of the business men that an attractive theatre is a stimulus to commerce in their community. The attitude is worth noting in this instance as again illustrating the local forces that can be urged in support of a well planned motion picture theatre.

The building was erected by local real estate interests headed by Ira D. Kelley, and the theatre has been leased by the S. L. Wolfberg group of theatres. B. F. Churchill of Iola, was the architect.

In design and layout, the theatre represents an effort to provide thoroughly modern facilities (within the limitations of the project) in an environment of gaiety and luxury—two conditions that still are generally regarded as major interests of the public in a theatre. In his efforts to realize such an atmosphere, the architect placed few restrictions upon himself, selecting his motifs from both Classical and Italian Renaissance patterns.

The building is of brick construction, with the front faced with stone blocks ornamented with scrolled arches and decorative windows. The box office directly adjoins the sidewalk, and over it is suspended a relatively large, ornate marquee.

The lobby is shallow but completely surrounds the rear of the auditorium. It is carpeted in plush and has entrance doorways draped in dark colors. Access is here provided to a mezzanine floor on which is located a general lounge under the balcony rise.

The auditorium seats 950 on two floors.

The view at the top of the page is of the auditorium from the stage, showing the paneled treatment of the walls and the murals dominating the decorative scheme. Seating capacity is 950.

In the general design, a pattern of panels are employed, with two enclosing on each side, large mural paintings. Above are palm trees rising to emerald green crests, and between are pilasters treated in color. The proscenium arch is fashioned in staggered blocks.

Equipment includes totally upholstered, air-cushion chairs on both floors, Western Electric sound and the usual modern accessories. In a theatre of this type, however, incorporating familiar efforts toward creating an impressive theatre in accordance with the character of the community in which it is established, it is not always so much architecture and technical facilities that is of major interest, but frequently the manner in which the modern motion picture, through its merchandising medium, the theatre, is "put over."

TO PERSONS in the industry, the technics of the motion picture are commonplace. But to the layman they are impressive, and may be used to great advantage in exploitation, particularly when they are associated with a brand new theatre project. For example, in the promotion matter launching the Iola theatre—which, it should be remembered, is a small city enterprise—a special edition of the local paper sought to popularize and glorify the modern film and its theatre in the following naive but doubtless effective reference to the "miracle" of sound:

"It is a fact that before even the original plans of the building were completed, Western Electric engineers were called into consultation in order to approve or reject any part of the plans which did or did not conform to the principles of design and acoustics which must be observed if the theatre building is to form a perfect complement to the sound system. Changes in the plans were designated by the Western Electric engineers and every change that they suggested was made. The building as it exists today is literally built around the sound system, designed primarily to be acoustically perfect. No one will have to strain his ears in the Iola theatre in order to hear or understand the dialogue or obtain the fullest enjoyment from the music which will be presented.

"The equipment which is installed in the Iola theatre is the best achievement of the Western Electric Company, including every improvement which their research laboratories have perfected during the past three years. Not only that, he has signed a contract with the company which guarantees the fact that this equipment which is installed now will still include ten years hence, every refinement and development which may be made during that time. His contract involves a visit by Western Electric engineers every two weeks for ten years, for the purpose of inspecting the equipment, making any necessary adjustments and installing any new improvements which may issue from their research laboratories. During the entire life of this contract, the sound equipment at the Iola Theatre will be exactly as fine as the equipment in the biggest of metropolitan houses in the country.

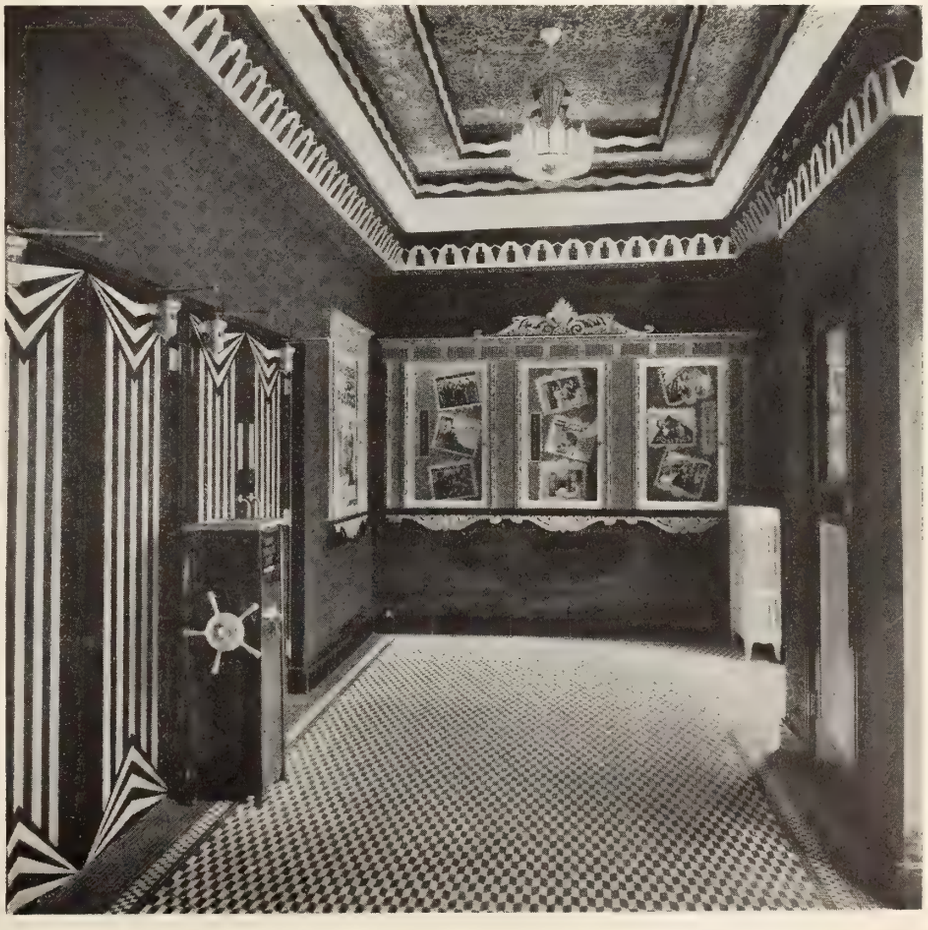
"Mr. Hensler realizes that the sound system is the very 'soul' of the talking picture and he has spared no trouble or expense in providing the Iola Theatre with the best. Four Western Electric engineers have been in Iola the past two weeks making the installation and conducting tests which have been highly satisfactory. They have announced the system to be perfect in every respect."



And then there is the direct association of the manager of a new theatre with the community. The effort is familiar enough, but we do not always have evidence of the reaction. Here it is, in a letter from the Iola chamber of commerce to the manager of the Iola:

"Dear Mr. Hensler: Enclosed here please find membership card in this organization.

"The motion prevailing at the weekly luncheon today, by which the appreciation of this body for the wonderful plant you will shortly open, as well as for the distinct contribution to the local payroll during the time of erection and completion, is only a public expression of the sentiment which has prevailed since ground was broken for the magnificent structure."

The Iola theatre has opened with a policy calling for daily matinees at 2:15 p. m., and two evening performances, at admissions prices of 35c for adults, and 10c for children. The Iola is under the personal management of Larry Hensler.

Fox opens a new theatre in Westwood Village, site of the Los Angeles Branch of the University of California, designed in conformity with local Spanish architecture

LOCATED IN the exclusive and very atmospheric Westwood Village, the newest theatre to be added to the chain of Fox West Coast Theatres, has been designed to harmonize with that site of the University of California at Los Angeles. Westwood Village is becoming nationally famous as a scenic spot. It is gorgeously designed in landscape and architecture. Typically Spanish, it is the result of concentrated effort to make it something entirely different. It is located halfway between Los Angeles and the city of Santa Monica.

Fox West Coast Theatres has adhered to the characteristic architecture of the village in the completion of this theatre in every respect. The exterior of the building is Spanish. The foyers, lobbies and lounges are Spanish in architecture, design and decoration. In the foyer there are any number of huge arches, supported by columns constructed of red brick, so typical of early Spanish architecture and used very successfully in this case in conjunction with California stucco.

On the other hand, the interior of the auditorium has been designed in Modern Spanish. It is highly decorated, and the modern feeling affects a complete change from the balance of the theatre. The painted decorations were executed by the Robert E. Power Studios, and the plans were drawn by P. P. Lewis, Los Angeles architect. The Henry I. Beller Construction Company was the general contractor.

The university colors, blue and gold, have been used both in the decorations and on the stage, and this feature serves to tie the theatre into the campus atmosphere. This decorative plan was even carried out so far as to include a group of university co-eds in classical dance formation on the Lounge section of the lobby, entrance to retiring rooms at sides.

Detail of furnishings in the lobby.

From the lobby, several sets of doors open into the foyer of the building. Instead of a pretentious, high hallway, bespattered with golden plaster globules, the foyer is a long, low room, with a gracefully vaulted ceiling. This foyer—wide, cool, and tastefully carpeted and decorated—opens on the right of the auditorium. On the left is a broad staircase, lighted from a large window and branching to the right and to the left to the smoking rooms and lounge rooms, and leading to the balcony.

In the auditorium itself further distinctions are to be noted. The proscenium arch and the orchestra pit (both relics of the day of the "opera house") have been done away with. The stage is bordered with a simple decorative motif, and in place of the orchestra pit there has been substituted a bank of wide, sweeping steps, richly carpeted and leading from the floor level of the auditorium to the level of the stage. All lighting fixtures are modernistic in pattern.

Equipment includes modern stage and house lighting on a dimmer system, a large projection room with spots and effects besides the projectors, Western Electric sound apparatus, and a complete air conditioning plant.

title curtain, and school sports are illustrated in the frieze on the asbestos curtain.

One of the outstanding features is the illuminating effect in the tower on the exterior of the building. It is a new innovation in the illuminating field. Glass panels of oval shape, each formed into five straight tubular sections, make up the extreme top of the tower. Back of these sections, a single neon tube is used, but it has the effect of five tubes, and in addition to saving the cost of maintaining extra units, the prismatic nature of the glass gives a diffused glow.

Italian marble has been used in all rest rooms, on the floors, borders and walls, creating an air of immaculateness and harmonizing with the decorative scheme.

The entrance to the theatre is distinctly different from the usual theatre front, for although there is the customary marquee and lobby front, the ticket office is not located in the center of this lobby, nor is it a mere window opening from the side wall. Instead it has been designed as a bright, glass enclosed "island," and it is set well to the front of the entrance, out in the open, where it does not obscure a view of the lobby itself.

INSURANCE: DECISIONS OF HIGHER COURTS

recent decrees of interest to theatre operators

By LEO T. PARKER

IT IS WELL established law that any material violation of one or more clauses in an insurance policy may result in the theatre owner being unable to collect insurance. This rule is applicable to all kinds of insurance policies. However, the courts have generally held that violation of a clause in a fire insurance policy which does not cause loss of the property by fire does not invalidate the policy.

For instance, in Hillman v. Empire Mutual Fire Insurance Company (235 N. W. 194), it was shown that a property owner held an insurance policy which did not contain a clause permitting him to operate a moving picture machine in the building. The building was destroyed by fire and the insurance company refused to pay the insurance. It was contended by the insurance company that when the fire started a moving picture machine was being operated in the building and by reason of the ignition of the films the fire was generated which burned the building, and that the moving picture films unlawfully established an increased hazard not included in the risk taken by the company.

The property owner introduced evidence tending to show that the presence of the moving picture machine, and the films used in its operation, had nothing to do with the fire but that the building caught fire in the attic. The property owner also introduced evidence showing that the films became ignited from sparks and burning embers which fell from the attic.

The case was tried before a jury who, after considering all testimony, rendered a verdict in favor of the property owner in view of the fact that it was decided that operation of the motion picture machine in the building did not result in occurrence of the fire. The higher court sustained this verdict, and said:

"Whether there was such casual connection between the alleged breach of condition of the policy and the loss to the insurer was a question of fact for the jury, under the evidence. The jury determined this disputed question of fact in favor of plaintiff (property owner) and we are bound to give effect to such finding."

Standard Policy Law

THE LEGISLATURES in many states have enacted laws requiring all insurance companies to adopt a standard policy, thus reducing the chances of insurance policies containing clauses intended to relieve the insurance companies from liability when the theatre owner believes he is insured.

Prior to passage of these laws there were as many different contracts of insurance in these states as there were companies. The variations and differences between the conditions of the policies issued by the various insurance companies were almost infinite in number. New clauses and conditions were being constantly inserted, generally ingeniously worded and obscurely printed. One court, in Bourgeois v. Northwestern (57 N. W. 348), said:

"Singularly enough, these new conditions were always in the interest of the insurer, and not of the insured. To meet this condition, the act under consideration was passed. That it is a long step in the right direction cannot be doubted. Under it there can be practically but one form of policy. When a man contracts for insurance, he knows that he is contracting for a standard policy and for nothing else, and he knows that he will get that and nothing else."

It is interesting to observe that in states where the standard policy law is in effect, all clauses included by the company in its policy, without approval of the state commission, are void to the same extent as noncontrolling clauses that contradict controlling clauses in the policy.

For example, in Commercial Union Assurance Company V Preston (282 S. W. 563), it was disclosed that a theatre owner held an insurance policy containing a clause, as follows:

"It being understood that this company shall not be liable for loss or damage to moving picture machines or attachments caused by fire originating within the machines, nor does this policy cover loss or damage to films from any cause."

Another clause in the policy provided that the company would be liable for losses caused by fire to "dynamos, wiring, lamps, motors, switches or other electrical appliances or devices."

A fire started in the film room and destroyed the moving picture machines and other theatre equipment. The insurance company refused to pay the amount of the policy on the grounds that the first mentioned above clause relieved it from liability for damage to the motion picture machines and the films. However, since the insurance company had failed to have the state commission approve the clause relieving it from liability and; also because the last mentioned provision was contradictory to the exempting clause, the higher court held the theatre owner entitled to recover his loss, saying:

"The endorsement relied on to defeat liability for the loss by fire of the moving picture machines and compenarc would seem not only void as never having been authorized or approved by the commission, but it appears to us that it may be inconsistent with the proviso embodied in the policy that the company shall be liable for loss, by fire only, to any electrical appliances or devices insured by the policy resulting from electrical injury or disturbance, occasioned by artificial or natural causes. A fire would originate within a moving picture machine if caused there by electrical injury or disturbance due to artificial or natural causes."

High License Fees

IT IS WELL settled law that any city ordinance which requires payment of license fees is void if its terms are unreasonable. However, the fact that the ordinance exacts what appears to be a prohibitory sum does not result in the ordinance being invalid if the majority of theatre owners may be able to pay the fee.

For illustration, in Levin V City of Asbury Park, (154 Atl. 742), a city council enacted a license law which required payment of $500 per month by all "who are in temporary or transient business."

It was contended that this law was void because the fee was prohibitive to almost all persons who desired to engage in a temporary business within the city. Notwithstanding this argument the higher court held the law valid, saying:

"As to the amount of license fee, we cannot say that it is unreasonable or excessive, in view of the peculiar and temporary character of the business involved. It is fair to say that a high license fee up to the point of being prohibitive may reasonably be regarded as a revenue producer."

Law Invalidates Theatre Lease

THE LAW is well established that at any time a statute is passed which makes performance of a contract an illegal procedure, such contract is automatically cancelled and neither party is bound to fulfill the obligations assumed.

For instance, in Poledor V Mayerfield

WHAT THE MANAGER SHOULD KNOW ABOUT SOUND

CARE OF SOUND EQUIPMENT

By AARON NADELL

This is the seventh of a series of articles designed for those directly responsible for the efficient and uninterrupted performance of reproduction equipment in the theatre, with special reference to the part the manager plays in the achievement of such performance. It will be noted that, while the previous articles were presented as by "A Theatre Sound Engineer," this article, as will be the following two, is signed by the author. Because of professional affiliations, Mr. Nadell desired that his discussions be presented anonymously. Now, however, he has consented to identification. More about the author is given in "Notes on Writers and Subjects in This Issue," on page 7. The eighth article in the series will be published in the November 21st issue.

THE CARE of sound equipment—precautions that will prolong its life and inspection that will catch growing troubles before they become serious enough to cause a breakdown—is a portion of projection room practice in which every manager is vitally interested. The small details of this work are, in the nature of things, the concern of the projectionist and the sound engineer. The supervision of such work, to the extent of seeing that it is done properly, and co-operation with it in the matter of purchasing supplies and equipment, are in the province of the manager.

Of particular importance is the help any competent manager can give his technical staff by bringing his business training to bear on such questions as those of orderly inspection, economical yet timely replacement, arranging the hours of work and of overtime, and a business-like keeping of records.

In these days especially a fair degree of familiarity with the elementary requirements of caring for sound equipment should be the property of every manager. The facts involved have a most important bearing upon the pressing current problems of new and competing equipment for maintenance, modernization or repair. It is, perhaps, not too much to say that without some degree of acquaintance with those facts no man can make an intelligent and economical choice between the many articles of sound equipment now being offered in a highly competitive market.

I

Records

THERE ARE those who hold that the keeping of records is the most important part of any business. As is the case with any valuable procedure, record-making can be overdone. But in current projection room practice, it seems to the writer, there is far too little record-keeping, and room for a great deal more of it before the stage of too-much is even approached.

Where competing makes of tubes, photocells, exciting lamps, or what-not, are under consideration, life records of each individual item are obviously desirable. The ingenuity and business experience of the manager would seem far better suited than the technical background of the projectionist to devising means and forms for keeping and studying such records. There is excellent reason why a life-record of every item of the equipment should be available. There may be only one maker today of the type of exciting lamp, for example, used in some particular projection room, but six months from today a dozen competitors may be offering that same item of equipment. Only a carefully kept set of records will make possible a correct evaluation of the prices or life guarantees that may be submitted.

Inspection forms should not only be filed, but should be so arranged, or else so abstracted, that the history of the projection room over a period of years is available without prolonged study. Such a procedure is perhaps the best possible insurance against repeated recurrence of the same trouble. It is the best possible guide in the matter of replacements, assisting even the most experienced engineer in estimating how much longer some particular part, showing signs of wear, may be expected to last.

Similarly only records can be trusted to reveal accurately the competence and care of the projection staff (or the reverse of those qualities)—to set off in a glaring light any weakness or ignorance in dealing with some especial part of the equipment and therefore make possible the correction of such ignorance or weakness. Inspection forms submitted independently by the projectionists—and filed by the manager—afford a valuable check upon the usefulness and ability of the service engineer. They train the projectionists and inculcate habits of carefulness and attention to detail.

This matter of inspection forms and records would seem to be peculiarly the manager's business. It is in line with his training and experience, and often alien to that of the projectionist or engineer, however competent these may be in their own profession. But to inaugurate a proper set of records, the manager needs either knowledge or advice concerning the broader technical details of his sound equipment.

An outline of those details, necessarily incomplete but obviously broad enough to apply to all types of sound systems and therefore in need of some revision for every individual case, is given below. The manager may perhaps wish to use it as a basis for consulting with his projection staff. Wherever possible, he will be well advised to add to such a conference a service engineer or other representative of the manufacturing company.

Systematic Inspection

The sound system can be divided, roughly speaking, into six separate portions. These are:

1. The reproducing system. The pick-up, whether from disc or film or microphone.
2. The switching system. The means, more or less intricate, depending on the type of installation, by which the reproduced sound current is led into the system amplifier.
3. The system amplifier. The means whereby the reproduced sound current is magnified to sufficient strength to fill the theatre with sound. The amplifier may consist of several panels, or of only one. For the sake of simplicity the amplifier attached to the photocell (in many installations) may be regarded as part of the photocell reproducing circuit.
4. The receiving system. The loud speakers, together with any special "matching panels" which may be used to secure impedance match between the speakers and the system amplifier.
5. The power supply. Batteries, motor-generators or rectifiers, including those rectifiers which supply the system amplifier panels, and may or may not be built into them as an integral part of them.
6. The acoustic system. The air and surfaces of the auditorium, which govern the quality of the sound after it leaves the speakers, and are in the province of the manager, rather than that of the projectionist.

Thus broken up, the sound installation loses a great deal of its apparent complexity and yields far more readily than it otherwise might to systematic and orderly inspection.

Inspection Forms

Some portions of the sound equipment need daily check. Others can safely go without inspection for six months or longer. Forms can be drawn up for daily, weekly, monthly and semi-annual inspection. A competent projectionist, if thoroughly familiar with his own installation, can be trusted to make out these forms. Where the theatre receives regular sound service, the assistance of the service engineer may be solicited for this purpose.

There is no need of having the forms printed. They may be written or typewritten and pasted up on a cardboard. As the projectionist goes over his equipment, with the form for his guide, he may note on a scratch pad anything he finds that seems to need attention. After completing his inspection, he makes the necessary adjustments, using the scratch-pad as his guide. The name scratch notes later form the basis of his report to the manager as to the results of that day's inspection of equipment.

the key to better sound projection

Here is the clear, simple explanation of sound equipment, its operation and repair, needed by managers and projectionists. Gives the fundamental principles on which all makes of equipment are based. Explains their use so that you can recognize the nature of any sound trouble, trace it to its cause, diagnose its importance, take the right steps to correct it. Shows when and how repairs can be made in a hurry—when replacement of parts is necessary. Gives manager, projectionist and service engineer an equal footing for better understanding. Shows how to keep your show running, with sound of the best quality.

PROJECTING SOUND PICTURES
By AARON NADELL,
Publix Theatres Corporation; Formerly of Electrical Research Products, Inc. 265 pages, 6 x 9, 100 illustrations, $2.50.

Everything in this book is practical and explained in understandable language. Instead of describing all makes of sound equipment in detail, the author clearly outlines the fundamentals of mechanisms and circuits found in all sound apparatus, and which, when understood, make easy the location and cure of all sound troubles.

Covers theory and mechanical requirements of sound-on-film and sound-on-disc —projectors, amplifiers, rectifiers, loud speakers, motors, generators — their principles, operation, maintenance
—photo-electric cells, vacuum tubes and circuits
—acoustics
—care of sound equipment and precautions to prevent trouble
—tracing trouble.

Better Theatres says "it cannot be economy to save a dollar on a worn part at the cost of many dollars worth of sound and screen image value." Projecting Sound Pictures shows how the important factor of sound quality can be maintained in the most economical way.

The Reproducing System

(A) Sound-on-Film

THE REPRODUCING system, whether on-film or on-disc, is by all odds the most sensitive portion of any sound installation, and it is in need of the most careful inspection. There are two excellent reasons for this special importance of the reproducing system. One is the fact that it precedes the system amplifier. Therefore any trouble that arises in it is amplified to the same degree that the normal sound is. The second reason for the extraordinary attention required by this portion of the equipment lies in the fact that it has to contend with the complications introduced by machinery in motion. The most important items of inspection, in fact, in this part of the installation, are not electrical items at all, but mechanical matters, including those having to do with operation of the projector and the motion of the film.

Difficulties of Sound-on-Film

In sound-on-film projection, two separate and distinct motions are imparted to the celluloid. The first is that intermittent progress necessary for the optical illusion of movement. Below the intermittent sprocket the projectionist provides a loop in his film, a loop in which the jerkiness deliberately imparted to the celluloid is absorbed. Thereafter the progress of the film is, or should be, flawlessly smooth and steady under penalty of that jerkiness in the sound which is known as flutter.

The intermittent motion of the film, which is achieved through an intentional jerkiness in the operation of the projector head, results in mechanical vibration of the projector and of all equipment associated with it. Whenever, through any fault in the mechanism, that vibration becomes excessive, the very delicate apparatus used in sound-on-film reproduction may absorb some portion of it. The consequence will be projector noise heard through the sound.

To create the dual motion, both intermittent and steady, which is required for sound-on-film projection, involves an elaborate system of gears, belts or chains, all driven by a common motor, and all likely to wear and cause trouble.

Further to complicate the picture, there is the powerful current required by the projector arc, and the erratic currents drawn by arc feed motors and changeover relays, all of which have been known to create trouble in sound-on-film.

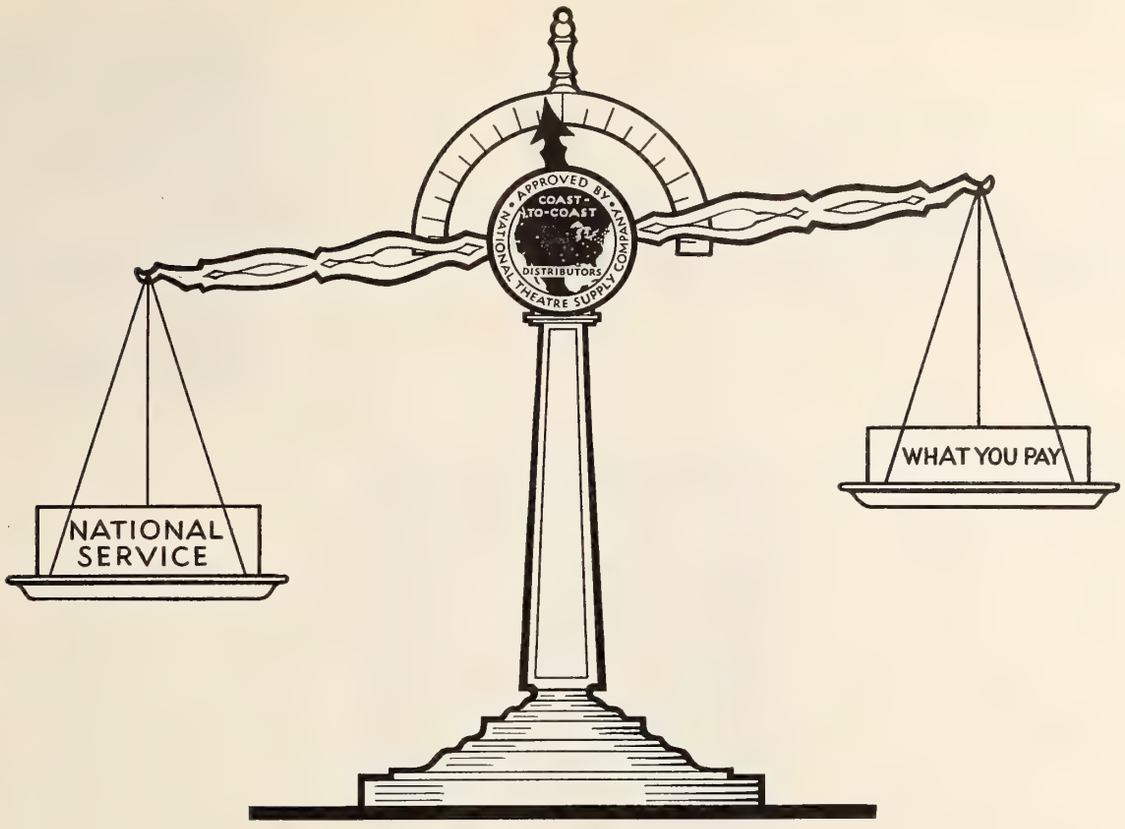
What have been listed so far, are, more or less, to be classed as accessories to the film reproducing equipment. Before proceeding to consider that equipment itself, it may be well to indicate here some of inspection requirements of these accessories.

Motor

The interests of clarity may perhaps be served by beginning at the motor. This motor must work smoothly and steadily. Any irregularity in its performance will be transmitted past all "vibration filters" and result in flutter. The motor should be checked for proper speed, smooth operation, evidences of overheating, and for adequate lubrication. In addition, the brushes require special attention. The brushes are the sliding contacts by means of which current is introduced into the rotating coils of the motor armature. Any excessive sparking between these brushes and the commutator on which they rest may be picked up by the reproducing system and appear in the sound, easily recognizable as a crackling or hissing noise.

Gears, Etc.

Gears, belts or chains driven by the motor may be next to be inspected. The first two, as well as the pulleys on which belts move, are to be checked for proper lubrication. Gears are to be observed from time to time for evidences of chipping or of wear that may on some occasion cause a breakdown in the show. Chains and belts must be watched for proper tension (they tend to stretch with use).



Another item to be included under this head is the check for flutter, which will appear if the "sound sprocket" is moving irregularly, or if some other portion of the equipment, such as the take-up on the lower magazine, is exerting an erratic pull on the film to such an extent as to defeat the efforts of the steadiest sound sprocket. The ear is the best means for detecting flutter. This check is almost entirely the responsibility of the manager. The projectionist, who has to contend with the noise of his machines, cannot always hear this trouble in his monitor horn, even after it becomes so conspicuous as to be distinctly annoying to an audience. The manager and his staff in the auditorium should be listening for flutter at all times, and note which projector is in use whenever the trouble appears. This is one of the matters in which the best projection staff is nearly helpless without co-operation from the front of the house—the managerial staff, ushers or paid observers.

Other Circuits

The grounding of the projector base is to be inspected from time to time, as a precaution against stray pickup from the arc lighting circuit. All connections and grounding of the arc feed motors, and of changeover devices, are to be similarly checked, and care must be taken to insure that feed motors and changeovers operate smoothly and without excessive sparking, which may be picked up by the reproducing system.

Alignment

If the sound track is not in perfect alignment at the point where it passes through the beam of the exciting light, noise will follow, known variously as "airplane noise," "motorboating," "sprocket-hole noise," "framingline noise," and by still other names. The alignment of the sound track is not a matter for even daily inspection. It should be checked several times in the course of a show by simple observation of the light, and by the ears of the manager and his staff, listening for any evidence of airplane noise. In the comparative silence of the theatre they will

. . . The BALANCE favors YOU !

ANY business transaction, to be profitable, must strike a true mutual BALANCE. From the buyer's standpoint, the cost should never greatly exceed the benefits he may derive. Likewise, the seller must place full measure into the balance without "weighing his thumb" . . . When you make a purchase from National Theatre Supply Company you get a full portion of measurable value in merchandise—never a short weight. The balance is leveled at the point of sale and you secure a full dollar of value for what you pay . . . But after the sale, the balance begins to favor you, for onto its side of the scale, National throws extra counterweight in the form of Service—dependable guarantees, promises that can be relied on, prompt deliveries, liberal instalment terms. Added too, is a definite expert knowledge of theatre equipment and a personal interest in the correct installation and satisfactory operation of your purchase, that cannot be measured in dollars and cents. Why not buy regularly where the balance favors you?

Peerless Reflector Arc Lamps are the "Preferred Choice."

To be universally acknowledged the "one" indispensable requisite to perfect projection, requires more than the indiscriminate use of printer's ink. Such a position can only be earned by a product which is correct in principle, advanced in mechanical execution and which has proven itself superior in actual service and performance.

The light producing reserve of Peerless Reflector Arc Lamps brings all projection requirements easily within their ability to do the job best, with greater economy, reduced up-keep cost and hence, greater purchaser's satisfaction.

"First Choice" and "Peerless" are inseparably associated.

SIDE LIGHTS ON THE TRANSVERTER

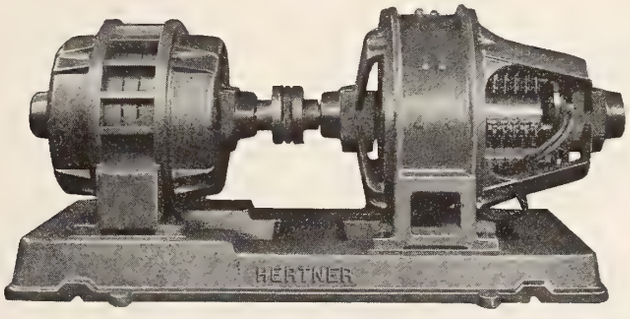
The circulation of any publication is large or small according to the approval and interest of its readers.

Theatre patronage grows or dwindles on both the picture and how well it is shown.

Screen flicker and lighting fluctuation cannot be excused.

The Transverter is standard equipment, built to fit your needs.

In doing so, it causes the Public to concentrate on the action of the picture on the screen.



Proper projection is therefore more important than ever before.

Every piece of projection equipment is dependent upon constant voltage for its smoothness in operation.

Even good acoustics fail when the current varies.

Keep the fundamentals in mind. The Transverter is essential to accurate, uniform current control.

Our Engineering Department will gladly aid you in securing the types and sizes you need.

A Happy Combination . . .

Better SOUND Better SIGHT Greater SAFETY

Three all-important considerations in the selection of a motion picture screen for any theatre. . . . Visibestone affords better sound, because a maximum of the original tone quality is permitted to pass through its specially woven meshes, and equally distributed throughout the house. No dead spots or pockets. . . . Better sight, due to absence of distortion with Visibestone—every seat in the house—at extreme sides and down close in front—is a good one from every angle. . . . Positive, permanent safety is assured through the use of basically fireproof fabric—asbestos. Visibestone is the result of painstaking development by the "makers of the BEST in asBESTos." Approved by E. R. P. I., for use with Western Electric Sound Equipment.

FEATURES

1. Fireproof.
2. Free from distortion of sight or sound.
3. Acoustically perfected.
4. Eliminates "sound pockets."
5. No glare—restful to the eyes.
6. Easy to clean—lasts longer.

hear slight traces of it sooner than the projectionist will in his noisy booth.

Dirt

Dirt on, or in, the path of the sound track will give rise to noisy sound. The manager can and should listen for evidences of this. The projectionist should check his equipment for dirt or grease every time he threads up, and check his film every time he re-winds it.

The Film Reproducing System

The accessories to sound-on-film reproduction having been reviewed in the briefest possible outline (the details are more numerous and will vary according to the make and type of installation), the requirements of the film reproducing system, itself, as distinct from its accessories, may be seen to have lost much of their apparent complexity.

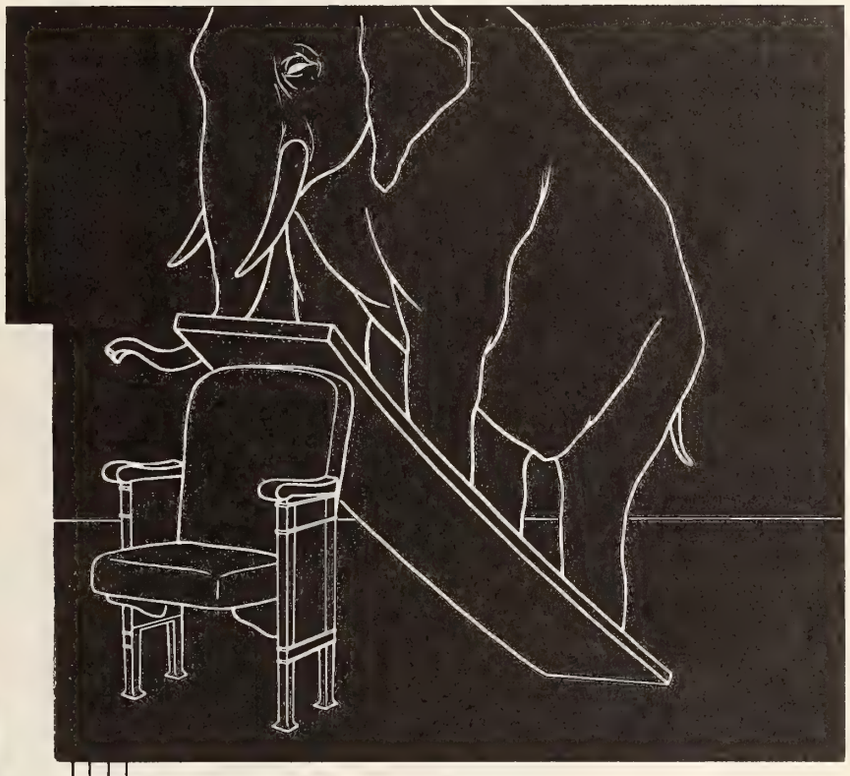
This system consists essentially of a photoelectric cell, a light for exciting the cell into action, and a means for focussing this light into a very narrow beam at the point where it crosses the sound track. The markings recorded on the sound track will then vary the amount of light reaching the cell. The response of a photocell to light of varying intensity is to create an electric current of varying strength—in this case, a "sound current."

Exciting Lamp

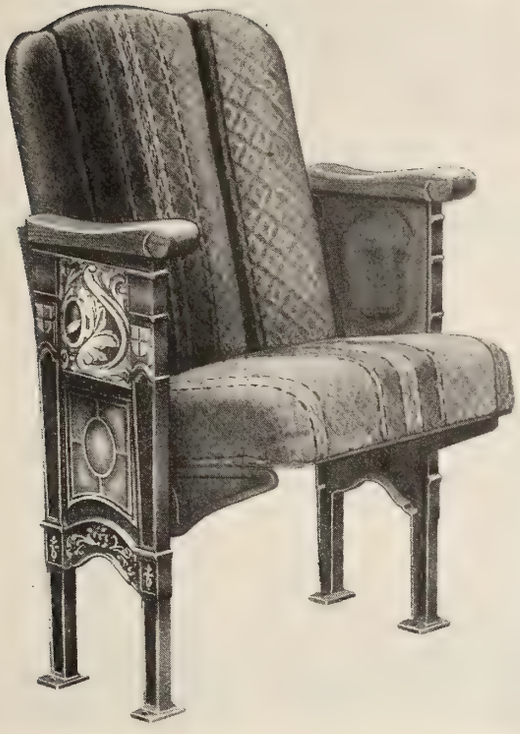
In inspection of the lamp, the following are to be observed: Darkening of the glass, which progresses with use and renders the lamp unfit when it becomes exessive; sag or slope of the filament, which makes proper focus impossible, and is also a condition likely to become worse with use; and firmness of contact, between the lamp and its socket, and between the socket and the clips in which it is usually held.

An imperfect contact will result in small variations in the strength of the current by which the lamp is lit. This, in turn, gives rise to a flickering in the light; a flickering which may be invisible to the eye but which will be visible to the photoelectric cell, and which, consequently, will appear in the speakers as noise.

Lens Assembly



The lens system, by means of which the exciting light is focussed upon the sound track, must be checked for evidence of oil seepage. A slight amount of oil, leaking into this lens system, will make a good focus, and therefore, good sound, impossible. This condition can most easily be observed when the light coming from the lens system is permitted to fall upon a piece of white paper, or a white calling card. If the light shows yellow there is oil in the lens barrel. Sound from that projector will be low in volume and poor in quality.



The exposed surfaces of the lenses are to be wiped clean at least once a day. The sound gate should be checked for dirt each time the projector is threaded.

Photoelectric Cell

The cell ordinarily needs no inspection

beyond an occasional cleaning of its surface at the point where the light shines through it, and periodic check in some installations to make certain that it has not shifted out of position.

The Photocell Amplifier

In many sound installations a small amplifier is mounted on the projector. This amplifier will require close attention. In most cases it will be equipped with spring suspension, as a precaution against vibration. Such spring suspension should be examined weekly to make sure the amplifier hangs clear of its supports and does not touch them at any point.

Rubber pads, often used beneath photocell amplifiers, may come in contact with oil from the projector, and warp: This is an item to be checked weekly in most installations.

III
The Reproducing System
(B) Sound-on-Disc

THE MECHANICAL requirements of sound-on-disc are the most important. The electrical end is simple and gives little trouble. Should the volume drop or the quality of sound deteriorate, the simplest remedy is to replace the reproducer.

Mechanically, inspection is required for the lubrication of gears, of mechanical filters, and of the flexible couplings often employed between the turntable and the motor. The latter should be changed if they have come in contact with oil.

The turntable must be level in every direction, and the reproducer arm must move freely and with no tendency to drift either way if left to itself.

All needles should be inspected before being placed in their cup as fit to use. Where the turntable support can be moved from position, the alignment of the flexible shaft between turntable and motor should be inspected daily.

IV
Auxiliary Reproducing Systems

Non-Synch

NON-SYNCHRONOUS inspection should provide for occasional check of the speed and condition of the motor, as well of observation in the auditorium of the quality and volume of sound.

The volume control for the non-synch equipment needs much the same care as to cleanliness required by any variable, pressure contact, except that less frequent inspection is necessary in many cases. Wherever the non-synch is located away from the grease and carbon dust of the projection room, and especially where the pressure contacts are placed inside a dust-proof or nearly dust-proof box, a semi-annual observation of these items will often be sufficient.

Announcing Microphone

The microphone may "pack" if dropped or jarred. An occasional meter reading of the current through each "button" is advisable, especially in theatres where the announcing system is seldom used, in order to make sure that it will be ready should some emergency occur to call upon it.

The Switching System

Switching systems vary widely in construction and in circuit. When sturdily built, they seldom give trouble as long as they are kept clean. Some may need inspection and cleaning only once a month; some not that often. Others may require attention once a week, or even more frequently. The same considerations apply to rheostats and all variable contacts. In general, the nearer a pressure contact is located—electrically—to the soure of the sound current, the more attention it will require. Its troubles will be amplified to a greater extent.

The Amplifying System

Amplifiers may be examined weekly for evidences of overheating. All pressure contacts, including those between the tubes and the prongs in the tube sockets, should be inspected monthly, at least, and cleaned as needed.

Meter readings should be checked daily, and if a portable tube-and-panel tester is available, its weekly use is indicated.

Receivers and Acoustics

These are largely in the province of the manager. Wherever more than one horn is used, the interests of good distribution require a test of all receivers daily, to make sure that none has burnt out. Aside from this test, the manager and his assistants should check, several times a day at least, to ascertain that sound is of equal volume in every portion of the auditorium. This precaution is of especial importance after exceptionally loud sound, as well as in theatres where the speakers are moved to clear the stage for vaudeville, and where there is any possibility that they may not be replaced properly after the screen has been lowered.

Acoustics need be re-checked only after re-location of the speakers, remodeling of the theatre, installation of new seats or new carpets, or similar extensive work. Otherwise they will change only with the ebb and flow of audiences. But when such inspection does become necessary it should be made repeatedly, under every possible audience condition, and in every portion of the auditorium, until the entire acoustic situation is thoroughly understood.

The Power Supply

All meters require observation daily, if not oftener. Storage batteries are to be inspected daily for cleanliness, need of additional water, and state of charge. Dry batteries should be checked for voltage and noisiness at least once a week—more often immediately after installation—and again as they grow old. Motor-generators for power supply need frequent observation for over-heating, condition of bearings and of brushes, and lubrication. Rectifiers for charging batteries, or for direct power-supply, need daily meter observations to show that they are providing sufficient current, and an occasional inspection for signs of overheating.

Outside Power Sources

Power regulation in many portions of the country not infrequently gives rise to sound troubles. Sudden or prolonged surges have been known to burn out amplifiers or cause other, equally serious damage. Wherever poor regulation is suspected because of excessive meter readings, the power company should be asked to install a recording voltmeter, and the records thus obtained should be submitted to careful scrutiny. "Power control" panels, including either rheostats or transformers, can be purchased, and such should be installed as a precaution wherever poor regulation obtains. The meters with which such panels are equipped will serve as a permanent check upon line voltage.

V

Special Apparatus for Inspection and Repairs

Tube and Panel Testers

IN A PREVIOUS article, mention was made of tube testers which could also be employed to check up on the amplifiers or other panels in which tubes are used.

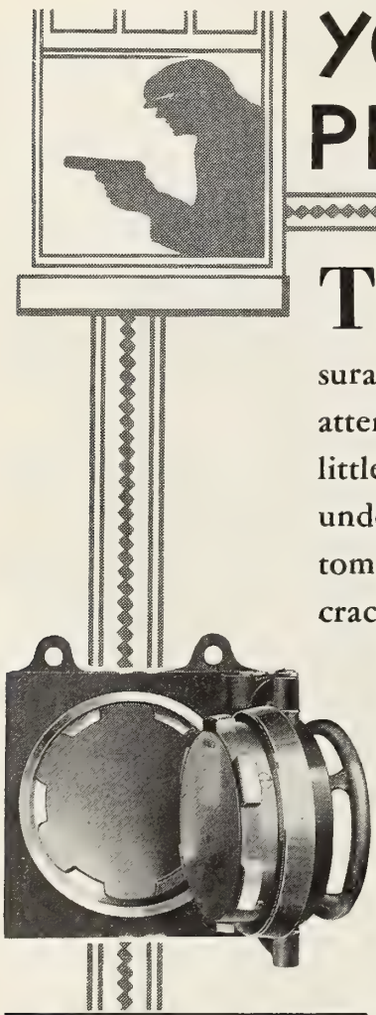
Such testers are now available for every tube of a type common in radio receivers, and for many of the smaller tubes of other types. They are very inexpensive, none costing over one hundred dollars, and some as little as ten or twelve dollars. The exhibitor whose sound system uses radio-type tubes will often do well to provide his staff with one of these test-sets.

Some sound systems, however, are so lavishly equipped with meters as to make an independent tester unnecessary, but these systems are in the minority. In all other cases, periodic use of a special tester will prolong the life of tubes, predict coming trouble, and help locate trouble more quickly when it does occur.

Volume Indicators

The volume indicator is another inexpensive piece of equipment, and almost an economic necessity. This instrument sometimes puzzles the non-technical because it is commonly calibrated in decibels. But the decibel is a simple unit of measurement, no more mysterious than an inch or a volt. Reading the strength of sound currents, the volume indicator makes possible quick and easy adjustment of volume, and in combination with a reel or record of the more important sound frequencies, adjustment and improvement in quality.

Sound Frequencies



Sound, as everyone knows, is a wave motion of air or other conducting medium. It may be allowable to repeat here that the lowest tone that can be heard by the human ear occurs when the air waves follow each other at a frequency of 16 per second. A frequency of 16,000 per second represents approximately the highest audible tone. A good average sound system for theatre use will be capable of reproducing with approximately equal volume, all frequencies from about 60 to about 6,000.

If a reel or record of a number of typical frequencies is played in the ordinary way, and a volume indicating instrument connected in the loud speaker circuit, adjustments for better quality can be made more easily and more quickly than by any other practical method. Such a test will indicate substantially equal reproduction of all frequencies—or the reverse, which is bad sound and therefore trouble. The same test will locate the cause of such trouble more quickly than any other known means.

Where the theatre has a public address system which is independent of the sound installation, a volume indicator affords an ideal check upon distribution. In this case the indicator should be connected in the speaker circuit of the public address system. A multiple-frequency record or reel is then played at normal volume. The public address microphone is carried to every portion of the auditorium, and the volume readings for each frequency and every position of the microphone are recorded.

The entire multiple-frequency reel is not necessary. An eight-foot loop of each of half-dozen frequencies is all that is required. The balance of such a reel may then be cut into other loops, which may be held in reserve or disposed of to other theatres.

This article brings us near the end of the esential factors of which the manager should have some working understanding. There are, however, a few more points of knowledge that would be of service, and the two articles required for them will close the series.

Equipment News and Comment

FOR SMALL THEATRES

● The unit picture-sound projector incorporated in the latest Motiograph model is well known to both projectionists and sound engineers. Now, however, the Enterprise Optical & Manufacturing Company of Chicago, the manufacturers, has developed equipment of this type specifically for the smaller theatre, and these columns have been in communication with O. F. Spahr, president of that pioneer projector company, about it, particularly with reference to the situation which this development was intended to meet. The reply, in part, is as follows:

"Since it is now an undisputed fact that motion pictures with sound are a permanent institution, and since almost without exception the larger theatres are already wired for sound, sound equipment for the smaller theatre becomes a very pertinent issue.

Motiograph Model B sound projector.

"Thousands of these smaller theatres have been getting along more or less satisfactorily with various types of disc reproducing equipment. These ran the gauntlet from home-made affairs, with crude radio amplifiers and speakers, through various types of systems to elaborate equipment of the costlier class.

"While it is undeniable that many of the smaller theatres were enabled to keep open and operate with this disc equipment, the fact must now be faced that such equipment is no longer entirely adequate, and these theatres face the necessity of changing to sound-on-film reproducing equipment, which is now generally considered as the standardized system of recording and reproducing.

"Sound equipment for the smaller theatre presents a rather complicated problem with many different angles to consider. First, of course, is the question of finance. Most small theatres are operating with very limited capital, the income in many cases being very small, due perhaps to competition with larger theatres where first-class projection and sound reproduction is the usual order. Therefore, in order to live financially, the small theatre must install sound equipment that will deliver quality reproduction and in comparison with the larger competitive theatre. Such equipment is not 'cheap' and cannot be marketed at a 'cheap' price. The problem, therefore, becomes one of furnishing the smaller theatre with quality sound reproducing equipment at a low but not a cheap price. Then this equipment must be sold under a financing plan which will be within the financial limitations of the smaller theatre.

"This brings up another angle: the question of good projection. The smaller theatre at the present time having been forced to install some kind of disc sound equipment, and having suffered somewhat from the general depression, has almost universally allowed its projectors to get along with the least possible up-keep expense. This, together with the fact that disc equipment of the cheaper types are almost invariably connected to the small theatres' projector mechanisms, promoting rapid wear and general depreciation of the projector mechanisms, has resulted in a condition such that before theatres having worn projectors can install sound-on-film equipment and expect to get good results in both projection and sound reproduction, these theatres must either purchase new projectors, or rebuild the present ones, which in many cases are either obsolete types and not adaptable to sound-on-film, or are so worn that rebuilding would not be a profitable investment.

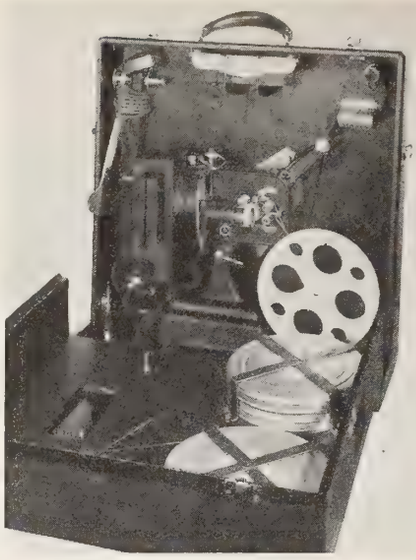
"It was to meet this situation that we designed the Model B sound projector equipment. This is a complete sound projector equipment especially designed for the smaller theatre. It includes many novel features, retaining the same standard mechanism and sound-on-film reproducing unit, as are supplied with the larger theatre equipments manufactured by this same company."

The amplification part of this Model B system consists in an especially designed amplifier of rack and panel construction having the two photoelectric cell amplifiers built in as a part of it. The amplifier is positioned between the two projectors and includes the equipment for sound change-over. The system is entirely a.c.-operated, there are no batteries, motor-generator or like equipment used.

Different types of speakers are provided, according to the individual requirements of the theatre. The company has prepared a financing plan for purchase by extended payment.

TUBE TESTING



● Referring to the submission of tubes to a test before purchasing, W. L. Krahl, chief engineer of the Arcturus Radio Tube Company, declares that only two tests really mean anything to the customer—they being, a test of mutual conductance, and one for plate current. And he further holds that the plate current reading is the most important determinant of efficiency, since it is a monitor of the major tube characteristics.

As to plate current readings, these, he says, should be approximately uniform and come within the limits specified by the manufacturer. Arcturus' own method is to supply dealers a test meter which gives the plate current and filament emission readings by a change in grid bias.

BUSINESS BOOMING!

● In case you are human and are as ready to grin over good news as you are to buy some potassium cyanide over bad news, here's something to cheat your official pharmacist out of a sale:

The International Projector Corporation (Simplex) has had to speed up production —because of greatly increased business!

New 16-mm. sound-projection equipment. Called the Animatophone, it is the product of the Victor Animatograph Corporation and was evolved by A. F. Victor

A substantial portion of the increased business, it is learned, is due to the demand for product a little out of International's former line. A lot of interest, apparently, is being shown in the company's 16-mm. Pockette camera, 16-mm. Casette projector, and 35-mm. portable projector. Specifically, the added activity means a working week of 54 hours, instead of 48 hours. What a help to the fellows working this winter for International!

REMOTE CONTROL

● A new system of remote control has apparently made its appearance in England, a device of this kind being brought out under the trade name of Acme, according to The Bioscope, London film paper, which has just printed an account, in part, as follows:

"The Acme Remote Control is a system for controlling fader setting instantaneously by means of two push buttons. It means that the manager—or, better still, a member of the staff specializing in it—can control the sound volume instant by instant throughout the picture. It means that crashes, gun-shots, shouts can be emphasized at will. It means that bursts of laughter or applause, for which the producer of the film has not budgeted, need never rob the rear of the house of the meaning of the dialogue. It means, in fine, perfect control of sound volume, provided it is intelligently used.

"From the point of view of the sound monitor, the control consists of a small oblong box, about four inches by two, on which are mounted two push buttons, one red, the other black. Every time the red is pressed the fader is moved up one step. Every time the black is pressed it moves down one. The buttons can be pressed at any speed, and the fader can be taken up or down three steps in half a second just as easily as it can be moved once.

"The operation of the press-buttons works a pair of solenoids by the action of which the fader arm is automatically rotated. There is no electric connection to the fader at all, merely a mechanical connection to the contact arm. This is important, because firms supplying sound equipment quite rightly object to any interference with the wiring of their sets. But the contact arm has to be rotated anyway, and if one chooses to do it by mechanical means instead of by hand, there is no question of damage to the equipment.

"The only connection between the monitor and the projection room is a thin flex. The solenoids and the gearing by which the faders are operated are mounted in a contact box fitted on the wall of the projection room. During the ticklish moments of the change-over the projectionist can, by means of a small switch, cut off the monitor control; he can then change over without interference and can immediately restore the monitor to control afterwards. Of course, no indication of this is given to the audience. Projectionists are sure to welcome this device; it relieves them of all responsibility in regard to volume without imposing any restrictions. No longer need attention be distracted from the machines by buzzer calls to alter volume. The monitor is entirely responsible for the sound volume, and no projectionist, however skilled, can hope to judge volume in the auditorium from the results coming from the speaker in the booth.

"The Acme Control is an Australian device, and has been in use for some three years there."

NEW PHOTOCELL

● A new type of photoelectric cell has just been brought out by the Weston Electric Company, under the name of Photronic cell.

This cell contains no liquid, gas or vacuum (if anything can be said to contain a vacuum!), and the manufacturers assert that this characteristic results in constant output and a peculiar immunity to chemical or physical change, further stating that it can be exposed to direct sunlight without deterioration, that it has neither dark current nor drifting, and that it even is non-microphonic.

The cell employs a highly sensitive disc (probably of the metallic character developed by this company and used in its light measuring instruments), and this disc transforms the light energy directly into electrical energy without the use of any auxiliary voltage. Current is thus developed to operate relays directly without the use of batteries or other energizing apparatus.

BY WAY OF NEWS

● Offices of the Western division of the Arcturus Radio Tube Company have removed to the first floor of its present address, 1855 Industrial Street, Los Angeles. This office, which is a direct factory branch, is under the supervision of L. P. Naylor, former sales manager.

Buying Wisely

One of the rules of good business is to buy wisely. . . .

Some interpret this to mean that the wise buyer must drive the best bargain possible.

IT DOESN'T MEAN THAT AT ALL.

It means that in buying equipment and supplies, he should make sure that he is getting the dollar's worth. When he has done that, he has fulfilled his duty to his company and to the industry in which he is engaged.

A buying policy based on a live and let live basis is a wise policy. It builds an industry and makes it a potent factor in the commercial structure of the nation.

● A NOTABLE ACHIEVEMENT IN PROJECTION EQUIPMENT.

B. & S. Rear Shutter

reduces aperture heat by 70%, minimizes effect of warped and buckled film, and keeps the film free from dust and dirt. The results of a test made by the Massachusetts Dept. of Public Safety in a Boston theatre on January 19, 1930, are as follows:

Without B. & S. Rear Shutter
Aperture Heat: 1250° F.
With B. & S. Rear Shutter
Aperture Heat: 340° to 350° F.

Easy to install and maintain. Equipment includes cooling plate, framing device, shutter timing adjustment, and framing light.

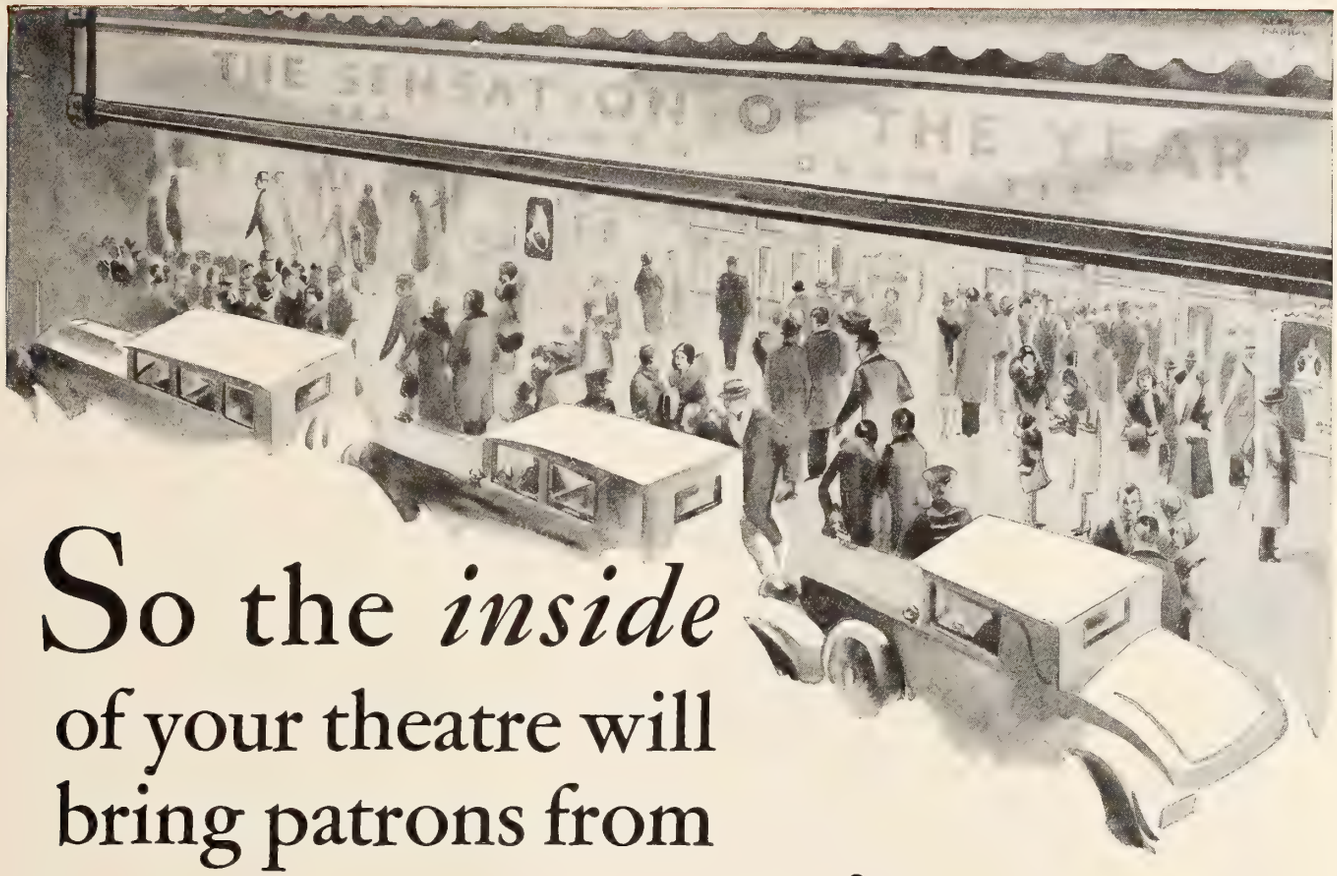
THE MODEL THEATRE

Serves as the Testing Laboratory for All Equipment Offered by Fulco



Every item of equipment necessary to the operation and maintenance of a modern motion picture theatre is submitted to the test of practical operation in the Fulton Model Theatre built and maintained at the headquarters of the E. E. Fulton Co.

Here the theatre owner, the architect and the technical man may observe demonstrations of equipment under actual operating conditions. Thus performance may be checked before final decision is made in the selection of needed apparatus or furnishings.

So the inside of your theatre will bring patrons from without!

NOW the spotlight is turned from the outside of the theatre to the inside. From the exterior that first attracts patrons to the interior that actually sells and keeps patrons sold. Owners and managers now focus attention on the seated audience . . . make the interior of their theatre so inviting that it brings patrons from without!

In the competition for patron favor, seating . . . the chairs your audience sit in from 2½ to 3 hours, can be made to contribute definitely to bigger volume. For comfortable chairs . . . seating that permits of healthful relaxation is always appreciated by the theatre goer. Showmen find that extra comfort brings extra profits.

So, American Seating Company undertook research. Posture specialists worked with engineers. Chairs were built to conform with proved posture principles. From a maze of research findings, came comfort features that were quickly recognized by the motion picture industry. Roomy, luxurious chairs . . . seating built to fit the body—to correctly support the spine . . . to give the utmost in easy, natural comfort without slumping.

Then followed acoustical research. It was found that seating had a direct bearing on the acoustics of the theatre . . . that properly built seating had a sound absorption value that assisted in producing more perfect sound effects. Chairs were built that stopped excessive reverberation, echo and hollow sounds—that helped sound reproduction and eliminated rasping noises, jumbling of words.

Your theatre—reseated with these comfortable, acoustically correct American Seating Company chairs will prove to be a magnet of patron drawing power . . . an investment you must eventually make if you expect your daily receipts to show a steady, healthy increase. The facts are available. Just use the coupon. It brings you our interesting booklet, "Acoustics and its Relation to Seating"—and places our Reseating Engineering Service at your free disposal.

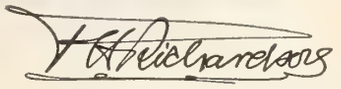
One-Contract Plan Assures Satisfaction

Maximum efficiency at minimum cost results are assured every new theatre enterprise or complete renovation job engineered under the Fulton One-Contract Plan.

The One-Contract Plan means that all phases of the enterprise are carefully considered in relation one to another, not by a single specialist but by various experts and engineers, each working independently, yet co-operatively and with full knowledge and understanding of each other's activities.

Under the scrutiny of these engineers, faults of plan or proposed equipment specified in original plans are unerringly spotted and rectified in advance of installation.



Equally important to the completed job is the assurance of proper installation—your guarantee of proper performance from the right equipment.

Thus the One-Contract Plan offers a sure check on lost motion, wasteful purchases and insurance that real economy will prevail from start to completion of the theatre job.

REVIEWING THE FALL MEETING OF THE S. M. P. E.

WHOEVER selected the meeting place for the fall convention of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers, surely might be classed as an expert picker. The New Ocean House at Swampscott, Mass., was an ideal meeting place. It is a place of beauty and had most excellent accommodations for the convention. The only complaint that I heard came from the women. The service is American plan, and the cuisine was both excellent and generous. Hence every woman at the convention added substance to her beauty, and that to the ladies, of course, means tragedy.

The total attendance, including women, was near 200. Many of the leading companies in the industry were well represented, and the sessions were well conducted and of absorbing interest.

Then each evening we were treated to a presentation of new and interesting films. These shows were put on by Projectionists Jack Kanosky and James Donovan, members of Lynn-Salem local No. 245. The work was excellent, considering the disadvantages encountered in all temporary installations. The equipment consisted of two Super-Simplex projectors equipped with Peerless lamps and RCA Photophone sound apparatus.

On Wednesday afternoon the engineers and their ladies enjoyed various trips arranged for them by the committee. On Wednesday evening in the main ball room of the hotel we were treated to a most unusual banquet—unusual in that it was in honor of the pioneer workers in the motion picture field.

After the banquet, President Crabtree presented certificates of honorary membership in the Society of Motion Picture Engineers to Thomas A. Edison, George Eastman, Frederick E. Ives, Louis Lumiere, Eugene Augustin Lauste and J. A. LeRoy. Details of the banquet will be given further along.

As I have many times said in days past and gone, attendance at the meetings of the S. M. P. E. has two distinct points of value. First, opportunity is afforded those who attend to meet engineers engaged in fields of scientific work and investigation other than their own. The opportunity afforded to discuss their own problems with workers in other fields, and to discuss the problems of the other fellow with him, is of very large value. One thus receives a wider comprehension of the work in the industry, considered as a whole. No man can possibly attend the meetings without receiving very substantial benefit—or at least if he doesn't receive substantial benefit, it is no one's fault but his own. Because of the benefit so derived, men are frequently able thereafter to produce better work in their own field of labor.

The other benefit is from the opportunity of hearing various papers read, and the discussion upon the various points raised in these papers.

At several meetings the society committed the error of having programs of too-great length, with the result that there was very little opportunity for discussing the papers. The principal benefits to be derived from the reading of the papers is to an important extent due to the fact that there are present anywhere from 50 to 150 men who have direct interest in the paper, and most of them have more or less knowledge of the things treated therein. If, then, after these men have heard the paper read, there is opportunity to discuss the statements made in the paper, or the conclusions drawn, it is evident that when it is all finished and done the body will, as a whole, have come pretty close to reaching the kernel of that particular nut.

At the last meeting there was ample opportunity for discussion of all papers, and that was as it should be. The papers covered almost every field of motion picture work. Many of them will sooner or later be published in the official journal of the society, and relatively few of the papers would be of interest to the average theatre man.

The Banquet

AT THE BANQUET, retiring President Crabtree made an address of great interest. Said he, in part:

"There is hard work ahead for our Society. The present problem of the industry is not that there is any immediate need for new tools, but that the industry should better know how to use the tools which it now has at its disposal.

"One of the most striking facts which the visitor from the East to Hollywood observes, is that the quality of sound reproduction in the screening rooms of the studios is better than that which exists in the majority of theatres throughout the country. The inferences from this are twofold; namely, that the present size of the sound track is adequate for the industry's immediate needs; and that the sound reproduction in the theatres has not kept pace with recording in the studios. This is due to several causes, including deficiencies in the maintenance of equipment, imperfect release prints, and imperfect projection.

"In many cases imperfect maintenance and operation may be attributed to the fact that the projectionist is not always kept on his toes by virtue of his isolation. Even the most aggressive surgeons and professional men attend clinics at least once a year in order to keep in touch with the latest developments. It is the duty of projectionist organizations to establish corresponding seminaries in key cities, which projectionists from all theatres should be obliged to attend, substitutes being supplied to their own theatres during their absence. Also more projectionists should be permitted to attend S. M. P. E. conventions. The resulting stimulus and acquaintance with men who are striving to improve the motion picture could not help but result in a marked improvement of both picture and sound quality in the theatre.

"There also is much room for improvement in theatre showmanship. The motion picture theatre of today is too much of a machine. It lacks soul and personality. More atmosphere and glamour could be created by added individuality in the presentation of the picture. Neither sound nor picture is a perfect replica of nature, but after four years of evolution of sound, as reproduced at present in conjunction with motion pictures, it is more true to nature than is the picture, which lacks both color and depth. The reproduction of speech is quite satisfactory, but the reproducible frequency range is inadequate to simulate orchestral music. The patron, however, may not realize these shortcomings if he is placed in a mood of willingness to believe by means of suitable atmosphere.

"The problem of the quality of release prints is also an urgent one. The difficulty involved is to produce release prints that are replicas of the best print which the original picture and sound negatives are capable of producing. To an impartial observer, it would appear that the quality of sound in the case of release prints, is in many cases not equal to that of the first print produced in Hollywood."

Of color, the retiring president said: "Color is the only immediate available variant from the black and white picture. It has little box office value at present, because the public thinks of colored pictures in terms of some of the wretched ones which it has already seen. You have seen some excellent examples of color in motion pictures during our convention, which were adequately, sharply defined. When similar films are generally available, the public will undoubtedly register appreciation.

"The next innovation will probably consist of impartation of depth, both to picture and sound. Demonstrations at our convention have indicated that the possibility of securing stereoscopic motion pictures without the use of auxiliary devices is not as remote as we had previously supposed."

Mr. Crabtree also predicted the probability of the outdoor theatre attaining popularity during the coming summer. "The public," he said, "is outdoor-minded."

He also expressed disbelief that the 16-mm. film in the home would ever become a serious competitor of the motion picture theatre. "In the home," he said, "man is too inherently lazy to set up and operate a projector to exhibit pictures other than those of his own making."

In closing, he said, "Better business is a question of each doing more and better work—the making of better tools—doing better work with existing tools—better stories—better direction—better acting—better laboratory work and better projection. So long as we continue to provide better entertainment, the continued success of the motion picture business is assured."

I feel it but right and proper that the work of retiring President I. J. Crabtree be very highly commended. When Mr. Crabtree took office, which he held for two terms, there were many who felt just a little bit dubious. They felt that while Mr. Crabtree is a very well liked gentleman and a very able scientist, he was perhaps not entirely adapted to that particular office. I, myself, felt that way, but those fears proved to be entirely groundless. President Crabtree has literally accomplished wonders during his term in office. I don't believe there is a member in the whole society who does not feel sincere friendship for the president and regret that he is leaving. Fortunately, his place will be taken by another very able gentleman, Dr. Alfred N. Goldsmith of the Radio Corporation of America.

An Excellent Exhibition

AT THE convention a most interesting and instructive exhibit of new equipment was conducted by manufacturers. I am sorry that in the rush of the convention I was unable to secure a complete description of all the things shown, and I desire to say that if the manufacturers of the equipment not fully dealt with will forward complete descriptions, I will be glad to consider their publication in next BETTER THEATRES.

Among the various things displayed was a rear shutter, the sponsor of which is the Chicago Cinema Equipment Company. This company also exhibited certain other apparatus, which will be described in another issue.

General Radio exhibited an assortment of power level indicators, distortion factor meters, oscillators, etc., all of which bore the earmark of excellence in construction (though, of course, such instruments are rather out of the field of this department, and therefore we don't feel competent to judge as to anything more than their appearance).

Our old friends, Bausch & Lomb, showed us their newest things in the way of Super-Cinephor lenses, as well as various other things. The Bausch & Lomb lenses have always been high-grade, and we have no doubt that the newer things will sustain the reputation of that company.

The Motion Picture Lighting Company displayed their latest recording apparatus, and a 2,000-watt spotlamp.

E. S. Porter, who for so many years was head of the Precision Machine Company, but who now is with the International Projector Corporation, displayed his first projector, used in the Eden Musee, on 23rd Street, in New York City in 1897. Incidentally, this projector has a double shutter, rotating in opposite directions and located between the aperture and projection lens. The intermittent movement is of the single-pin type, which may still be remembered by old-timers. It worked in an oil box.

On behalf of the International Projector Corporation, Friend Porter showed us a new motion picture camera that he has evolved. It looks almost exactly like a big opera, or field glass, and if you ask me, it is one of the most unique creations it has been my pleasure to examine for quite some while. There was also another miniature camera on display, but I described it in the department some while ago. The company also displayed its Acme portable, 35-mm. sound projector.

The Strong Electric Corporation showed us its portable reflector lamp, a well made piece of apparatus.

The Mackler Film Renovator Machine was displayed by the Marver Products Company, Inc.

The Weston Electrical Instrument Company had a most interesting exhibit of equipment, consisting of a service test set designed for servicing amplifying equipment, instruments for general sound measurements, etc., and a new photoelectric cell known as a photronic cell.

Electrical Research Products had on display its new re-recording machine—an impressive piece of apparatus. They also exhibited some exceptionally interesting sound meters, and a densitometer, by means of which the density of films may be accurately measured in decibles by a direct reading. This is indeed a rather remarkable machine. It should be a very valuable one, too.

The Eastman Kodak Company displayed a sensitometer, while the Akeley Camera Company, Inc., showed a Model-A recorder with double track aperture, which may be used for film identification. There was also a footage numbering device that may be used in connection with any recording system, and a color film magazine of 1,000-foot capacity.

The Newmade Products Corporation showed us a film storage cabinet. I was at one time a witness to a fire test made of this cabinet, and am prepared to say that it is certainly very thoroughly fire-proof. It is designed to connect with the air by a vent of ample size. The one on display accommodates eight 2,000-foot reels. However, as many of these as are desired may be mounted upon one another, the entire bank connecting to one vent pipe.

The Wisconsin Chair Company gave us, for the first time, an exhibit of their chairs, which are mostly metallic and very handsome. The chairs were displayed in connection with the reversed floor slope plan presented to the convention by a New York architect, Ben Schlanger—a plan, by the way, which looks very promising.

The Westinghouse Manufacturing Company exhibited a thermionic tube lighting control system. Oscar B. Depue had an interesting one-operation, continuous automatic sound-on-film printer, a 16-mm. optical reduction machine, and a 35-mm. effect printer for studio work. There was also a Bipack color printer, printing from two negatives and a double and getting a positive in one operation, a dark room model of a 16-mm. automatic contact printer, and Bipack magazine for taking colored pictures.

Brenkert displayed its latest development in high intensity lamps, a fine looking piece of equipment adapted for use on any make of projector. There is absolutely no copper in the interior of the lamphouse. Nothing but nickel casting on nickel leads is used throughout.

RCA Photophone had on display a small sound head for theatres seating up to 500; also, a regular sound head for theatres seating up to 1,200, and amplifying panels.

The G. P. Goerz American Optical Company exhibited its Cine-Panor projector for 16-mm. equipment. It is equipped with an anamorphosing, or compression lens system for the projection of wide field pictures with a regular 16-mm. equipment. This equipment is placed in front of a regular camera lens to compress a 50% greater horizontal field into the camera aperture. But more of this will told later on.

The Keasbey & Mattison Company exhibited its new asbestos screen, called the "Visibestone Sound Screen." It is composed entirely of a rather open fabric, woven from heavy asbestos threads, and is therefore thoroughly fireproof. The record of tests shows a light loss of 28.5% at a 1% viewing angle, or practically straight in front.

USED BY LEADING THEATRES EVERYWHERE

Projection Optics Co., Inc.
330 Lyell Ave.
ROCHESTER, N. Y., U. S. A.

The surface is treated with some sort of coating of a nature that seems to make for almost perfect diffusion, hence the loss at greater viewing angles, I believe, would be not largely in excess of the loss from straight-in-front. In other words there should be practically no "fade-away."

The surface would certainly provide maximum sound passage for the open space between threads is approximately 1/32 inch, though some of this space is of course filled with lint and with the substance with which the surface is coated.

The fabric is light in weight and can be very easily stretched into a smooth surface. It has, however, the disadvantage of seams, though representatives of the company assured me that usually the seams are almost entirely invisible.

I cannot, of course, speak with authority upon the efficiency of this screen, but it has one decided merit in that it can be thoroughly cleaned with a sponge and a solution, which to all intents and purposes means that an entirely new coat is applied to the fabric. We understand that the intent of the company is to push this screen, and since the company is a $7,000,000 institution, we doubtless will have opportunity to witness this screen's theatre performance in the near future.

A VISIT TO SEVERAL THEATRES

WHILE ATTENDING the S. M. P. E. convention, I was invited by Stanley Sumner, managing director of the University theatre in Cambridge, and his chief projectionist, Charles Parshley, to visit their theatre. They were kind enough to come to Swampscott and take Friend Daughter and myself over, and while the available time was short, still we were glad to go.

The two gentlemen first of all took us down to Boston where, after navigating that crazy mess of streets down near North Station, we landed at the Lancaster theatre, which I have wanted to visit for a long time because my old friend Arthur Grey, now passed into the shadows of the Great Beyond, had charge of projection there for some years, and during that time he told me a lot about the theatre, its owner Mr. Dimick, and its house manager, Miss M. O'Leary, who, I am told, is a very able manager, and certainly a most charming lady. Mr. Dimick, unfortunately, was away—a disappointment, for I wanted to meet that gentleman. After a pleasant and profitable talk with Manager O'Leary, we went up to the projection room, shook hands with Projectionists E. Foulds and A. Conely, who were then on duty, and looked over the place in which Friend Grey had worked for so long a time.

From the Lancaster we traveled over to the Metropolitan theatre, in which Thad Barrows, president of local No. 182, IATSE & MPMO, holds forth as chief projectionist.

The Metropolitan is Boston's largest motion picture palace, seating 4,726. It is a Publix house and a beauty. I must congratulate that circuit upon the most excellent illustration it here affords of the fact that level projection is not impractical. That is to say, it is not impossible to locate the projection room where it should be located. Chief Projectionist Barrows advises me that the results are most excellent.

The projection room is located in the most expensive part of the theatre, the loge balcony. Thus situated, it has not proved a source of the slightest annoyance to patrons. The projection angle is only 4°. The room is of ample proportions and is equipped with three Simplex projectors, a dissolving stereopticon, an F-7 and F-3 Brenkert, two Mestrom Ballena spots equipped with colors and dissolving irises.

The room was clean as a new pin. Everything was in first-class order. I make that last statement without the formality of a detailed examination of the equipment, believing that to be unnecessary in the case of such a workman as Thad Barrows.

While we were there, aside from Chief Projectionist Barrows, Ernest Costa and Harold Sheerer were on duty. The projectionists who were off duty were Harry Rosendorf, Leo Westfield and Paul Brown. Incidentally, Barrows has been shooting shadows at the screen for 25 years, starting with the Howard Motion Picture Company in 1906—came darned near beating me, but I have two years the best of him.

The Metropolitan is really a beautiful theatre. So far as I was able to determine, the location of the projection room does not detract from the appearance of the auditorium, though it is granted that there is one disadvantage in such a location where stage shows are given; namely, that it places the spots almost on a level with the eyes of the performers.

The sound is Western Electric. The projectors are equipped with Hall & Connolly high intensity lamps, using 125 amperes. The tone of the light is pure, and except in the case of a few occasionally rather absurdly dense scenes, the screen was adequately illuminated.

At the rear of the room are storage cabinets, a long table with all paraphernalia placed on it in order—nothing scattered around. At one end of the room is a brass mounted tool rack that Barrows has had for many years. (I printed a picture of this board several years ago.) The ventilation is exceptionally good in this room.

The Metropolitan is managed by a most able man, Henry Taylor. Lack of space alone keeps me from giving a complete history of his interesting life. He is one of the type who makes the phrase, "the show must go on," really mean something. Taylor started his career at the Globe theatre when it was operated by the now famous Weber and Fields, in 1903. Since that time he has filled every position from usher on up, missing none. He deserves high praise for his excellent work, as well as his ability to "get along" with his entire staff.

Out at Cambridge we visited the University theatre, a house seating 2,040. It has a very substantial and a most comfortable appearance. The picture is 17 feet, 4 inches wide. Its light tone is excellent, and the brilliancy of the screen all that is required for comfortable viewing.

Up in the projection room, Charles Parshley holds sway as chief projectionist. At the time of our visit, Jack Rosenberg and Jake Alramovitz (neither of them of Irish extraction!) were on duty. The off-duty projectionist was George Loumin. The projection room of the University is so perfectly clean that a table cloth might be spread upon the floor without getting soiled. The equipment was in the same condition. Not a speck of dust or dirt anywhere. The floor was waxed and polished. I compliment the projectionists most heartily upon the condition of the projection room, of the three Simplex projectors and the Brenkert spotlights and F-3 effect projector. The W. E. sound equipment was also in excellent condition, as was evident by the sound produced.

Referring again to cleanliness, let me say that not only was everything in the projection room itself clean, but the same was true of the two rooms adjoining, which house the lockers, rheostats and a Hertner upright Transverter.

The light sources are Peerless reflector, using 18 amperes. The room is supplied with a porcelain basin with running water, hot and cold. The projectionists are all members of Boston local No. 182.

Chief Projectionist Parshley advises me that his employers are always willing to grant any reasonable request for equipment or supplies. That is as it should be, too. Wise exhibitors and managers take that course. Having done that, however, they are entitled to expect maximum service in the projection department. Unfortunately, we still have unwise exhibitors and managers who try to skimp in the matter of filling projection room requisitions, which course leads invariably to unfavorable results, and they hurt the box office.

A very wise thing that Manager Sumner does, is to carefully rehearse each show, setting down each scene of each reel with the fader setting at which it is to be projected. Good procedure, gentlemen! Managers such as Mr. Sumner do things that way. They prepare carefully to get good results, hence they get them. I might add that the entire theatre is in keeping with the projection.

While in Boston I talked with many members of local No. 182. One-eighty-two is one of the "ground floor" locals. She received her charter April 10, 1910, which may not seem so far back, but just the same at that time there were very few locals of projectionists anywhere.

The Boston men have used reason and common sense in their dealings with friend employer, hence there has never been any labor trouble more serious than verbal arguments—which, of course, must and will occur now and then. The present official roster is, Thad C. Barrows, president; Myer Bexorne, vice president; Albert R. Moulton, financial secretary; Joseph H. Rosen, treasurer; James F. Burke, business representative; and Ernest F. Costa, Bernard McGaffgan and John Fullick, executive board.

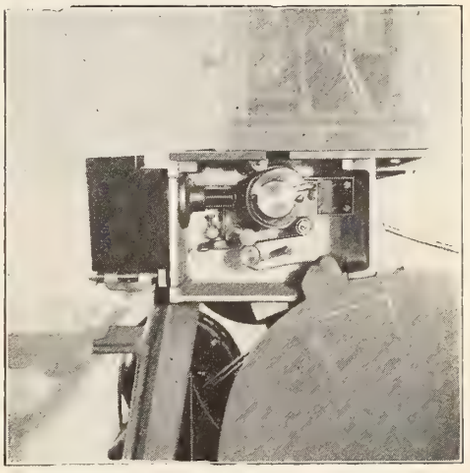
The men of 182 are respected by the exhibitors. Under the leadership of President Barrows, they voluntarily reduced their wage scale during the past summer. I am told 182 was the first local in this country to suggest such a thing to their employers when, because of the business slump, it became evident that the scale was really a burden. The local has always been very willing to co-operate with the small, independent exhibitor. The present wage agreement expires in September next year.

Jimmy Burke has been in office for 15 years, as also has President Barrows. I and Brother Burke seldom meet without being in the exact center of a high-temperature scrap within two, or at most, three minutes. However, we are nevertheless very good friends, for after all our differences are honest ones on both sides, and each knows that the other has, in his own way, done the best he was able to do for the profession he loved, and for the men engaged in it.

The local headquarters are at 116 Broadway, Boston, in the heart of the film and theatrical district. The rooms occupy the entire second floor. They are comfortably, though modestly furnished, and have the latch string always hanging out for visiting projectionists.

WIDE FILM IMAGE ON 16 MM. STOCK

AMONG THE displays at the S. M. P. E. fall meeting, was the "Staats-Newcomer-Goerz Cine-Panor Anamorphosing," or "Compression," lens system for the production of wide-field motion pictures with regular 16-mm. equipment. Says the maker:



"Placed in front of the regular camera lens, this cylindrical lens system compresses a 50% greater horizontal field into the regular picture aperture. The vertical field, and consequently the height of objects, remains unchanged. This new lens may be used with photo lenses from one inch to four inches telephoto. The same Cine-Panor is placed in front of the projector lens, whereupon it reconstructs the compressed image into normal perspective, so that a screen image is produced which is twice as wide as it is high, the height being the same as in normal projection."

I have seen this reconstructed picture projected. The results were good. The picture produced was something like 20 inches high by twice that width. The definition apparently suffered only slightly—not enough to be readily sensed.

In the illustrations you see one with a scene compressed into a picture aperture of normal proportion. This is the image as it will appear on the film after processing. In the other you see the same scene as projected by the Cine-Panor. You will observe that the former view embraces the same subject matter as far as concerns the horizontal and vertical field, but all horizontal dimensions are compressed to two-thirds their actual proportions.

The lens is so mounted on the projector that it may be swung into, or out of, place

SYN-CRO-FILM

HOW MUCH? NO!

How Much for a Little

Before you spend your money for a pair of sound heads see how much you can get for how little. We build Syncrofilm for that sort of buyer, not for the man who just says, "How much?"

Which is most important: what a sound head costs, or what it will do? We don't try to beat the world on price. We try to see how good a sound head we can make at a price somewhere in line.

We must make Syncrofilm good, for we guarantee your money back if you are not satisfied with it. With a set-up like that we can't turn out a sound head so cheap that it's likely to fail—and we don't. No Syncrofilm owner has ever asked for his money back.

Compressed and projected pictures by the Cine-Panor method.

instantly. The man in charge may, therefore, at will, either project a picture taken normally, or a wide field picture made with the Cine-Panor. The same lens serves to take and project the wide field picture.

A CHEERY BUSINESS SIGN

MANY YEARS AGO I told this industry (in the old Moving Picture World), that so long as the motion picture industry kept its entertainment both good and clean, it had little need to worry about hard times, for the reason that in times of financial depression the people, needing amusement and entertainment more than ever, turned naturally to the cheaper forms of entertainment.

Lately the calamity shouters have outnumbered the shouters at a negro camp meeting. "Ruin," "going-to-the-canines," and like expressions, have been so common that I had been wondering if I might not perhaps reap wealth by having some neat signs printed bearing those expressions, the said card to be equipped with a neat ribbon so that it might be hung from the neck, thus saving a lot of energy expended in talk.

And now comes the International Projector Corporation with another tale. That corporation has a huge factory. It fills almost twelve floors of a building one full block long. Such a plant is able to turn out a lot of finished goods in 24 hours, to say nothing of a year. Yet that factory has just been compelled to extend the working time of its entire factory staff to 54 hours a week, instead of 48 as heretofore, and in addition, is going immediately to put on a night shift.

A MATTER OF GOOD MANAGEMENT

NOT AT ALL infrequently this department receives letters from able conscientious projectionists who feel discouraged for the reason that, while the theatre management demands co-operation from them in every possible way, it is unwilling to give co-operation in return.

The effect of such a situation is decidedly bad. It reacts to set up a feeling of indifference on the part of the man who feels that the management is unappreciative. Such a feeling will inevitably manifest itself either in careless work, or in work which is not up to the highest standard.

Men in any line of work, if treated fairly and given a bit of appreciative encouragement, will try to give the best possible service in return. That is, they will if they are real men. Even those who are lacking in manhood will certainly do better work when encouraged and treated fairly than they will when discouraged by unfairness on the part of the man over them.

On the other hand, if the theatre manager be unfair, demanding full co-operation from the projectionist, but refusing to give any in return, don't you yourself believe the effect must and will be bad? Don't you believe men treated thus will not make much effort to give the best possible results, and to produce results as efficiently and economically as possible?
